Mr. HOCH. The word "respective" refers back to the language of the fourteenth amendment. If put in at all you ought to put in the provision which follows in the fourteenth amendment, and I thought it best simply to say, "according to the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I direct the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to the fact that by putting in these words, "according to the Constitution of the United States," you are calling upon the Secretary of Commerce to determine what the Constitution of the United States is, and that I am not willing to do. I do not know who the Secretary of Commerce is going to be yet, and it is not proper to leave such a question to him in any event.

Mr. HOCH. May I interrupt the gentleman there?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me read to the gentleman the language as it would read if the language I have suggested would be agreeable: Beginning on line 2, page 2, "and the number of Representatives to which each State would be entitled under an apportionment of 435 Representatives made by apportioning this number among the several States (each State to have at least one Member) according to their respective numbers as shown by such census." It is almost the language of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In other words, the gentleman thinks his language would perfect and carry out the intent of the bill.

Mr. TINKHAM and Mr. CRAMTON rose.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a pro forma amendment pending. The time has been exhausted under the pro forma amendment. If there is no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this matter, raised by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH], impresses me as of some importance, and I entirely agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Kansas does not reach the situation. The gentleman from Kansas will note that this section of the bill provides that the Secretary of Commerce shall send to the Congress a statement showing the whole number of persons in each State excluding Indians not taxed. Then Congress has before it a certain tabulation of States, with the respective population ascertained in a certain way. Then the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, when he refers to the Members of the House, refers to the numbers set forth in the statement of the Secretary of Commerce, so that I prefer the language of the gentleman from Tennessee. I understand under the existing language there is this situation: There would be under the bill first, one apportioned to each State. Let us say that the ratio was one to 300,000. Then if the State had a population of 290,000, it would first receive one, set aside for each State, and then having received that, the bill proposes that the remainder of the number shall be divided in proportion to their respective numbers; that is, the State receives a second representative, which I think, is not the purpose of the committee and ought not to be permitted. Therefore, I think it is desirable that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee be accepted.

Mr. HOCH. I do not see how this leaves the amendment which I proposed any more uncertain than it was before. The report of the Secretary of Commerce is to include the whole number of persons in each State, and that might include visitors that might be in a State. If not, I understand that he has the discretion to exclude visitors, although they are persons within the State.

Mr. CRAMTON. If there is a weakness existing in that part of the bill that the gentleman does not propose to amend, it is in the first part of the section where the duty is imposed on the Secretary to report the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. If that leads to ambiguity, the gentleman might offer another amendment.

Mr. HOCH. I do not think there is any question at all about what the Secretary will certify.

Mr. CRAMTON. He certifies the number of persons in each State on some basis or other. The language here requires the apportionment to be on the basis of the respective numbers.

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman is interpreting it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think the method of the gentleman from Tennessee is the better one.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does not the gentleman think that the ambiguities of language now disclosed in this bill are of such a nature that the committee ought to vote to recommit the bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly not. This is a deliberative body. If we could never pass a bill without amending it on the floor, we would be a set of dumb-bells.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman think it is possible to perfect the language?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. I have an amendment to offer, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The gentleman from Michigan offers a substitute amendment for the Hoch amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. HOCH: Page 2, line 6, strike out the words "one Representative from each State" and the language in parenthesis "as required by the Constitution," "and by apportioning the remainder of," and, at the end of line 11, strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following: "No State to receive less than one Member," so that the paragraph will read "by apportioning the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers as shown by such census by the method known as the method of major fractions, no State to receive less than one Member."

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. My view is that if you are going to attempt to set out the language in the Constitution you ought to set out all of it and not a part of it. But I again urge this other matter. It may be a very idle hope that the Constitution of the United States will be changed as I have suggested, namely, the exclusion of aliens from the count, although I am beginning to believe, from the widespread interest the suggestion has aroused all over the country, that it is not entirely an idle hope.

Why should we here fix in a statute for all time, unless we do amend the Constitution, a provision which will be inconsistent with the exclusion of aliens? You say, "according to the respective numbers." Now, if you say "according to the Constitution" you have done that, and if the Constitution should be changed, as, of course, I think it ought to be in this particular, that language would still cover the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOCH) there were—ayes 168, noes 50.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOCH) there were—ayes 219, noes 1.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TILSON. What amendment is now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending now except the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TILSON. Have the committee amendments been adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendments have been agreed to. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] offered a perfecting amendment. That has been disposed of, and there is nothing pending except the substitute motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a perfecting amendment to the section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TINKHAM: On page 1, line 8, after the word "taxed," insert the following: "and inhabitants in each State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, whose right to vote at an election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, has been denied or abridged except for rebellion or other crime."

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the amendment purports to amend line 8, which has been stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment is offered after the word "taxed," in line 8, on page 1. Line 8 on page 1 has not been stricken from the bill. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts on the point of order.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the question has been raised that this amendment is not germane. Whether it is germane or not is determined, it seems to me, by the wording of the fourteenth amendment itself—that is, section 2 of it. Let us read what section 2 of the fourteenth amendment says:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crimes, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

The bill provides that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States "according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed," in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment.

The amendment I propose is to carry out the rest of that section in order that the apportionment among the several States shall be equal, in accordance with the Constitution, lawful, and equitable to the different States. I can not see how it is possible to say that that is not germane; it is a part of the very amendment to the Constitution in question. What is more, it is the mandatory part of section 2 of that amendment, as the word "shall" is used. How can an apportionment of Representatives be constitutional unless the constitutional requirements are observed?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, of course, we know what the amendment means. By this amendment the Member from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] attempts to cut down Southern representation because of the fourteenth amendment. I call the Chair's attention to the fact that this question has long since been settled by the Supreme Court, the highest tribunal in the land. The Congress of the United States has no power whatever under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution to disturb Southern representation because of the fact that negroes do not vote.

The fourteenth amendment when adopted provided that if the male inhabitants of any State were denied the right to vote that State's representation should be proportionately cut down. Shortly afterwards the fifteenth amendment was adopted.

Under the fourteenth amendment, if any State had passed a law—and I will quote the authority in a moment to show you that that is what is meant—if any State had passed a law to deprive these people of the right to vote, under the fourteenth amendment the Congress would have had the power to reduce the representation of that State accordingly; but by the adoption of the fifteenth amendment, it is provided that no State shall pass such a law, thereby nullifying and rendering nugatory that clause of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. Bryant, of Wisconsin, in his treatise on the Constitution of the United States, at page 333, says:

The fourteenth amendment is prohibitory upon the States only, and the legislation authorized to be adopted by Congress is not direct legislation on the matter respecting which the States are prohibited from making or enforcing certain laws or doing certain acts, but is corrective legislation, such as may be necessary or proper for counteracting or redressing such laws.

Also a notation of the Eleventh Federal Statutes Annotated, 1096, says:

The prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment are directed to the States and they are to a degree restrictive of State power.

The Supreme Court of the United States in passing on this question about which we have heard so much from certain sections, in Third United States, page 109, says:

Until some State law has been passed or some State action through its officers or agents has been taken adverse to the rights of the citizens sought to be protected by the fourteenth amendment, no legislation of the United States under said amendment, nor any proceeding under such legislation can be called into activity, for the prohibitions of the amendment are against State laws and acts done under State authority.

The Hon. James G. Blaine, who was Speaker of the House at the time, I believe, that the fifteenth amendment was adopted, and was a Member of the House at the time the fourteenth amendment was adopted, in his Twenty Years of Congress, which I trust some of you will take the time to read before you continue to go out and slander certain States by charges that are false and unfounded about their laws and their conduct toward the people living within their borders, says:

Its prime object—

Speaking of the fourteenth amendment—was to correct the wrongs which might be enacted in the South, and the correction proposed was direct and unmistakable; namely, that the Nation would exclude the negro from the basis of apportionment whenever the States should exclude him from the right of suffrage.

When, therefore—

Says Mr. Blaine—

the Nation by subsequent change in its Constitution declared that the State shall not exclude the Negro from the right of suffrage, it neutralized and surrendered the contingent right before held to exclude him from the basis of apportionment.

Congress is thus—

plainly deprived, by the fifteenth amendment, of certain powers over the representation in the South which it previously possessed under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment. Before the adoption of the fifteenth amendment if a State should exclude the Negro from suffrage, the next step would be for Congress to exclude the Negro from the basis of apportionment. After the adoption of the fifteenth amendment if a State should exclude the negro from suffrage, the next step would be for the Supreme Court to declare that the act was unconstitutional and therefore null and void.

Absolutely taking from Congress any right to interfere with this proposition.

Recently this matter came up in the Senate, and Senator BORAH, perhaps one of the best lawyers in the country, stated that he had heard that charge against the Southern States made time and again in the last few years, and that he had taken it on himself to examine the constitutions and the statutes of all the Southern States, and not one of them had he found to violate either the fourteenth or the fifteenth amendment.

Why, we have no more right to adopt this amendment than we would to adopt an amendment regulating the election laws of the State of Massachusetts or the school laws of the State of Indiana.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not particularly interested in the amendment, but I am interested in the parliamentary situation.

As I understand, the bill before the House deals with apportionment of Members of Congress among the various States of the Union. If I understood the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] it gives instructions to the Director of the Census as to the manner in which he should take the census and as to certain matters to be considered, thus giving additional instructions to that official and imposing new duties concerning the taking of the census. As the question of the census is not referred to in this bill, except that the apportionment shall be made as a result of the census, the gentleman is bringing a new question before the committee that is not being considered in the original bill or in fact is presenting a new proposition and is not in order at this time and, in my judgment, it is not germane for that reason, and the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I think the honorable Representative from New York is wrong. We are to apportion Members of this House among the several States. It will be done either constitutionally or unconstitutionally. If it is to be done constitutionally then the directions of the Constitution must be observed, and they are plain.

In the bill now before us it is provided that Indians not taxed shall not be included in fixing the number of Representatives from the respective States. Why? Because the Constitution says that they should not be included. But the Constitution provides also, where there is disfranchisement, there shall be a reduction in representation, that the basis of representation shall be reduced in each State in proportion to the number of inhabitants who are disfranchised. How is it possible to comply with the Constitution unless this is done? If this is not done, not only is the House of Representatives not constitutionally organized but representation among the States is not equal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] on yesterday was good enough to advise the Chair of the amendment which he was to offer and the Chair has had some time to consider it.

The first section of the bill as now amended reads as follows:

> That on the first day of the second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress and of each fifth Congress thereafter, the Secretary of Commerce shall transmit to the Congress a statement showing the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed, as ascertained under the fifteenth and each subsequent decennial census of the population, and the number of Representatives to which each State would be entitled under an apportionment of 435 Representatives made in the following manner: By apportioning the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers as shown by such census, by the method known as the method of major fractions, no State to receive less than one Member.

This legislation is for the purpose of securing a reapportionment of the membership of the House among the States. It does not itself directly reapportion the membership but provides the machinery by which such reapportionment may be made through the agency of the Secretary of Commerce, in the event that the Congress itself in such a contingency does not make the apportionment.

The question now before the committee came up on January 19, 1921, when this House actually did pass an apportionment bill based on the 1920 census. The Committee on the Census had reported a bill for 483 Members. The gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] offered an amendment changing the reapportionment, and reducing the membership to 435. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM], following a statement as to the number of Representatives from each State, the last State being the State of Wyoming, in alphabetical order, offered this amendment:

> Insert on page 3, between lines 17 and 18, after the words "Wyoming 1," the following: "Provided further, That if any State deny or abridge the right of any inhabitants thereof, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, to vote at any election named in the amendment to the Constitution, Article XIV, section 22, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the number of Representatives apportioned to that State shall be reduced in proportion to the number which such citizens shall bear to the whole number of citizens 21 years of age in such States."

To this amendment the present distinguished Speaker of this House, Mr. LONGWORTH, of Ohio, made a point of order, and argued his point of order in language which I think is not only persuasive but decisive of this question. He said, and I shall only read a portion of what he said (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 2d sess., p. 1682):

> Mr. LONGWORTH. The merits or demerits of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts have nothing at all to do with the point of order I am making, which is only as to the question whether it infringes the rules of the House or not.
> It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TINKHAM) is not germane to this bill, because it introduces an entirely new element.
> This bill fixes the representation of the various States, based on population and population alone. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TINKHAM) would provide a test by which that representation might be diminished, notwithstanding the fact that the population would remain the same.
> The gentleman cites Article XIV of the Constitution which provides, among other things—
> "When the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States"—
> And so forth, that the representation shall be correspondingly reduced. In other words, it introduces into this bill an entirely new and separate proposition, to wit, the question as to whether the inhabitants of certain States do or do not do certain things when participating in elections, not only for Members of Congress but for local and State officers and members of the legislature.
> Within the very limited time that I have had to look up any precedents I do not know that I can cite the Chair to any large number of them, but I do cite the Chair to the decision on March 26, 1897, when a tariff bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.
> This decision is referred to in the decision of Mr. Alexander, and is found on page 518 of the Manual.
> In that case an amendment was offered to a tariff bill, which provided that when it is shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that articles are manufactured, controlled, or produced in the United States by a trust or trusts, the importation of such articles from foreign countries shall be free of duty until such manufacture, control, or production shall have ceased, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury.
> It seems to me that the precedent comes very close to the proposition now before the committee. There they were considering the general subject of a tariff bill. The amendment offered related to the tariff, just as this amendment relates to representation, but it introduced a new element and provided a test under which certain articles should go on the free list if, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, their production was controlled by a trust.
> In that case the amendment was held not to be germane to the bill and the point of order against it was sustained.
> This case provides a new test, under which certain States, regardless of their population, would not have the same representation that other States with the same population would have. If the Chair should hold this amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts to be in order, why might it not be in order to offer an amendment to provide that where a State, for instance, interfered with the nineteenth amendment, giving the right of suffrage to women, the representation of that State should be reduced; or where any State fails to follow the constitutional provision as to the enforcement of any other amendment why might it not be reduced?

In the very exhaustive, and it seems to the present occupant of the chair, conclusive argument at that time, on January 19, 1921, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was supported by Mr. Mondell, then the Republican floor leader, and by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, the present Democratic floor leader, than whom there are no abler parliamentarians in the history of recent Congresses. The gentleman from Wyoming, Mr. Mondell, very strongly and pertinently argued in support of the point of order, in this language:

> The committee [on the census] might, in reporting the bill, have gone into the matter of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, in my opinion; it might have made an effort to enforce the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, or to place them in the position, or on the road, or in the way of enforcement. The committee did not see fit to do that, and no amendment is germane to this bill, first, which treats of a subject matter different from that contained in the bill; second, that treats of a matter in the bill, but not in the manner provided for in the bill as reported by the committee. The committee did not invoke the provisions of the fourteenth amendment. The committee specifically provided for an apportionment based on the census. It injected no further question into its legislation; and it certainly is not in order on a bill providing simply for an apportionment of Representatives among the States based upon the census to present an amendment, the purpose of which may be assumed to be an attempt to enforce an amendment to the Constitution dealing with an entirely different matter or dealing with the same matter in an entirely different way from that in which the bill deals with it.

In the same discussion the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] called attention to the various phases of the rule on germaneness, calling attention to what was then, and is yet, section 778 of the House Manual, which lays down the principles that—

(a) One individual proposition may not be amended by another individual proposition, even though the two belong to the same class.

And—

(b) A specific subject may not be amended by a provision general in nature, even when of the class of the specific subject.

And further—

(d) Two subjects are not necessarily germane because they are related.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, Mr. Campbell of Kansas, sustained the point of order against the Tinkham amendment, and in his decision said:

The question as to whether or not this amendment is germane to section 1 of the bill demands an inquiry into the purpose of that section and, as far as can be ascertained, the purpose of this amendment. That section fixes a definite number of Members from the several States according to the census returns. The amendment does not fix or relate to a definite number of Members; on the contrary, it leaves the number of Members apportioned to any State to a contingency that may arise in the future. It has been held by well-considered decisions that even though a subject relates to the same matter, yet if it introduces a new element or an element of uncertainty, or if it provides a future action upon the happening of something indefinite, the matter so offered is not then germane as an amendment.

It seems to the present occupant of the chair that this precedent of January 19, 1921, is in point. It is true that we are not now directly apportioning the number of Representatives to and among the States, but we are providing for an apportionment. We are appointing an agency who shall make the apportionment of a fixed number of Representatives among the States in the manner, and according to the rules laid down in the bill, upon certain and definite facts and figures to be established by the Bureau of the Census, under the Secretary of Commerce, acting under authority of various laws other than the pending bill, for the taking of the decennial census. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] introduces a new element, a new standard, a new basis for the apportionment other than population, other than the enumeration provided by existing law, and requires an inquiry, an investigation, and a conclusion, not ministerial or administrative, but judicial and discretionary, as to whether the voting rights of citizens have been abridged not only generally through legislation and general practices but within restricted groups of citizens who have not participated in rebellion or other crime. While the bill imposes only ministerial duties upon the Secretary of Commerce, the proposed amendment compels him and his subordinates, acting in his behalf, to exercise judicial functions of the highest order and importance. The amendment seems clearly not to be germane to section 1 or to the bill.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] suggested another question and another angle which seems to the chairman also entirely decisive of this question. The chairman has examined the law upon the census. There are numerous laws relating to the census, all of them providing various things that the Department of Commerce and the Bureau of the Census shall ascertain in the taking of the decennial census and the enumeration therein provided for. There is no provision in any law in regard to the taking of the census or making the enumeration for ascertaining any facts relative to matters which are contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Nothing in the census laws anywhere requires or permits the superintendent of the census or the enumerators under the census law to secure any information in regard to the abridgment of the right to vote in the several States. When the present occupant of the chair presided in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a measure entirely similar to this—in fact, the same one practically—in the last session, on May 18, 1928, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] offered an amendment which read as follows:

All special agents, supervisors, clerks, enumerators, interpreters, and all other employees taking the census shall be appointed from the civil-service list after examinations conducted under rules and regulations promulgated by the Civil Service Commission.

The present occupant of the chair held at that time that that amendment was out of order upon the ground that it was an amendment to the census law, relating to a subject not germane to the subject matter of the bill then before the House. The present bill is practically the same bill as the House considered last May.

Without any reference, of course, to the merits of the amendment, but entirely upon the parliamentary ground that the subject matter of the amendment differs from that of section 1 and of the bill, and that the amendment introduces an entirely new element so far as the purposes of the bill are concerned, and that it in fact amends the census law, which is not before the committee in the consideration of this bill, the Chair holds that the amendment is not germane and sustains the point of order.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRIGHAM: Page 2, line 11, strike out the period, add a comma and the following: "Provided, That any State whose representation would be reduced to the one Representative to which such a State is entitled under the Constitution shall have apportioned to it an additional Representative if its population shall exceed by more than 25 per cent the average population per Representative for the United States, and to that extent the whole number of Representatives shall be increased accordingly.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Mr. Chairman, when the representation of a State is reduced to one, that one Representative has to represent all the people of the State. The population of the State may be such that the one Representative may have a constituency equal to the average for the United States and in addition thereto a number of persons nearly large enough to give the State an additional number. For instance, New Mexico and Vermont have remainders of 46 per cent, which are nearly major fractions, and which are, therefore, nearly large enough to entitle each of them to an additional Representative under this bill. If the method of equal proportions had been adopted they would be entitled to two Representatives each. These States will more nearly have average constituencies and more nearly have their fair share of representative power if Representatives are given them than if they are withheld. This is what the amendment will do under the conditions of 1920. In future years, if the bill passes, other States will likewise be affected. If we fix the membership of the House at 435 and our population continues to grow, the quota of population which entitles a State to a Representative must also continue to increase. In a few decades it may require 400,000 for a full quota, so that a State with 400,000 population will have one Representative and a State will not be entitled to two Representatives until it has a population of more than 600,000.

I believe this situation should be taken care of and I have offered this amendment for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LEAVITT: Page 1, line 8, after the word "State," strike out the words "excluding Indians not taxed," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "excluding those persons whose exclusion is required by the Constitution."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Montana care to be heard upon the amendment?

Mr. LEAVITT. I would like to hear the grounds of the point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. I shall reserve the point of order if the gentleman desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves the point of order.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, this amendment strikes from the bill the words "excluding Indians not taxed" and substitutes for those words the words "excluding those persons whose exclusion is required by the Constitution."

At the time the Constitution was written the situation of the Indian population of this country was entirely different from that which exists among them now. This Congress, in 1926, without a dissenting vote, granted to the Indian population, without regard to whether or not they were taxpayers, the right to vote and to be citizens to that extent throughout the United States. That took place in the Sixty-eighth Congress. The nontaxpaying Indians in many of the States to-day are voting for Members of Congress, and as the Constitution now stands they can not be enumerated in determining how many Members of Congress there shall be from the States in which they reside.

There has also been presented by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] an amendment to the Constitution which will exclude another class of people, the noncitizen aliens, from enumeration when we are considering the apportionment of Members of Congress to a State, and considering that proposal as likely to become the Constitution, when that proposal comes before the House for consideration it is my intention to have removed, if I can, the exclusion of Indians not taxed. This law we are now considering should be so written that nontaxed Indians can then be counted when in the future we take out of the Constitution the words requiring them to be excluded.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I will.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, the gentleman understands that if the Constitution is not amended his amendment will not remedy the situation of which he speaks?

Mr. LEAVITT. My amendment will not affect the situation in regard to Indians not taxed until the Constitution is changed.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will yield, after the Constitution is changed will it not be perfectly easy to change this law if it shall remain on the statute books until that time?

Mr. LEAVITT. Theoretically so, but perhaps not.

Mr. STEVENSON. After the Constitution is changed such parts of this law as are in conflict with the changed Constitution would fall. Is not that true?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. STOBBS. The phraseology not only excluded Indians but any person whose right to vote had been abridged by any particular State.

Mr. LEAVITT. No. If the Constitution intends the exclusion of any class of individuals, it will so read specifically.

Mr. STOBBS. Are not you passing the census made to the Secretary of Commerce for him to function?

Mr. LEAVITT. I think not.

Mr. STOBBS. Do you direct him to exempt those persons from exclusion as required by the Constitution? How is he to determine?

Mr. LEAVITT. There will be no necessity to use personal judgment in regard to it at all. It will be written plainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not a very artistic way of doing what the gentleman from Massachusetts sought to do?

Mr. LEAVITT. Not intentionally; and it is not.

Mr. SNELL. Did the gentleman from Mississippi make the point of order or reserve the point of order?

Mr. RANKIN. I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. In the opinion of the Chair this amendment is subject to the same objections as was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It brings in entirely new subjects not within the contemplation and the purpose of the pending bill, and is not germane. In addition, it is within the well-known rule that a specific subject can not be amended by a general provision of the same nature. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa to which the gentleman from Georgia offered a pro forma amendment. Is there objection to the pro forma amendment being withdrawn?

Mr. SNELL. May we have the amendment presented to the House again? It has been so long since it was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does exactly what the proponents of this bill say they propose to do under the bill, without delegating our authority to anybody. Several men who are not going to be in the next Congress have spoken against it. I am sorry they will not be here. They may be apprehensive that we will be remiss in carrying out our duty. But there are 365 Members now in the House who will be Members of the next Congress, and by this resolution we solemnly declare that after the taking of the census of 1930 we will reapportion the House on the basis of that census. In that way we will not be delegating our authority to somebody else. We will be passing a resolution that will go through the Senate and at the same time not raise the question as to whether or not we have the right to delegate our authority. By this amendment you are not delegating your authority under the Constitution. I hope it will be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 118, noes 122.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. FENN and Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 136, noes 144.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, Representatives in the United States Congress, in his discussion of this bill the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] stated that it had been fostered and was being urged upon Congress by Members who were seeking personal political advantage from it. I do not think that this accusation should be allowed to go unchallenged. Speaking for myself individually, I repudiate the assertion. I do not resent the statement. It was made in the heat of argument and I have too much respect and admiration for the gentleman from Mississippi to believe that he meant to be unkind or harmful. I have been trying to think over what personal political advantage any Member of this House could get out of the passage of this bill and I can conceive of none. Under the circumstances personal political advantage would mean either that the Members because of this bill would have less difficulty in reelection to Congress or, because of the passage of the bill, would have more prestige at home or on this floor. Making the district of a Member smaller would not make it easier for his reelection. On the contrary, after a man is once in Congress the larger his district is and the more people there are in it the more difficult and the more expensive it is for an opposing candidate to defeat him. On the matter of prestige I ask you, Would it not be a greater honor and distinction at home to be the sole Representative in Congress of a large city like Seattle or Portland or Oakland or Los Angeles than it would be to be one of several or many Representatives from such a city? Much has been said about the city of Detroit and its two Members in Congress who are on the Committee of the Census, which favorably reported this bill. I ask you, Would it not give a Member greater prestige at home and on this floor to be one of the two Representatives from a great city like Detroit than it would to be one of many representing such an energetic and thriving metropolis?

The conclusion must be, and is, that those who are urging the passage of this bill are doing so from honest and patriotic motives, that they are doing their constitutional duty as they see it.

In the county of Los Angeles, in the State of California, there are more than 2,000,000 people who are not represented on this floor. Thirty days before the last general election, November 6, 1928, there were 925,292 registered voters in Los Angeles County. If you would multiply this number by three you would have approximately the number of inhabitants there are in Los Angeles County. In the tenth congressional district of California, which it is my honor to represent, there were, at the last election, 503,677 registered voters, indicating a population of approximately 1,500,000 people in one congressional district. The last reapportionment for Members of Congress was made on a basis of 211,000 population for each congressional district. This means not only that the tenth congressional district of California has a million and a quarter people who do not have constitutional representation in this House but it means more as I shall try to explain.

Presidents of the United States are elected not by popular vote but by presidential electors which are apportioned among the States according to the number of Members of Congress each State has. Each State is entitled to as many presidential electors as it has Members of Congress. Nearly all of the Members of this House took an active part in the presidential election which was had last November. It did not seem right to me, and during the campaign when I was required to make mention of the fact it was with deep humiliation that I had to tell my constituents, when I was urging them to go to the polls and vote, to say in the same speech that six of their votes would not be equivalent to one vote in scarcely any other State in the Union. I will say, because it is the truth, though I want to say it without being offensive, that the States in which the vote of one elector counted for much more in the presidential election than six votes of my constituents amounted to, are the States in which the opponents of this bill reside.

Considerable has been said about this being a dignified assembly, composed of intelligent and able men, and that the Congress was not yet ready to allocate its constitutional prerogatives to a clerk in the Census Bureau. The men who make this argument also contend that the membership of the House should be enlarged so that no State would lose representation because of reapportionment, which would require an increase of the membership of the House from 435 Members to 534 Members. The membership of the House is already too large. It should be reduced to 200 or 240 Members. In the First Congress there was an average of five Representatives to each State. On that basis there would be 240 Members at the present time. A larger membership than we now have would be intolerable. The House could scarcely function. As it is the work of the House is cumbersome, inefficient, and difficult. Rules which do not exist in any other parliamentary assembly have been adopted in this House in order that such a large group of Representatives may function at all. Surely the number of Representatives should not be increased.

I sympathize with the Members from States which will lose representation in Congress under a constitutional reapportionment. I realize that for them there may be real personal political disadvantage. It has often been said that self-preservation is the first law of nature and I think I realize just how some of these Members feel who think that the passage of this bill might eliminate their congressional districts and possibly their political careers. They can have this consolation that reapportionment under this bill can not become operative for at least four years, giving them plenty of time to readjust themselves to changed conditions. If they vote for this bill they will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are doing their solemn sworn duty in keeping this branch of Congress representative of the people of the Nation and in carrying out the mandate of the Constitution that reapportionment shall be had every 10 years.

The reapportionment under this bill will not be the first reapportionment which has caused loss in representation to States. In 1840, 15 States out of a total of 26 States lost Representatives by reason of reapportionment. Virginia has been cut from a total of 23 Representatives until it now has but 10. During one period the State of New York lost nine Representatives in Congress. Practically all of the older States have lost Representatives at some reapportionment or another. It has not hurt the States any and it has not worked any great evil to the fortunes of the Representatives from those States. The losses in representation which have been suffered by States in other reapportionments conclusively demonstrate that in spite of considerations of personal disadvantages the Representatives in Congress have been willing to do their duty because it was their duty. I appeal to my colleagues of this Congress to do their duty for the same high considerations. I have an abiding confidence that you are honest and patriotic and fearless and that you will do your duty nobly and that this bill will be passed by a large majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) If the Congress to which the statement required by section 1 is transmitted, fails to enact a law apportioning the Representatives among the several States, then each State shall be entitled, in the second succeeding Congress and in each Congress thereafter until the taking effect of a reapportionment on the basis of the next decennial census, to the number of Representatives shown in the statement; and it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the last House of Representatives forthwith to send to the executive of each State a certificate of the number of Representatives to which such State is entitled under this section. In case of a vacancy in the office of Clerk, or of his absence or inability to discharge this duty, then such duty shall devolve upon the officer who, under section 32 or 33 of the Revised Statutes, is charged with the preparation of the roll of Representatives-elect.

(b) This section shall have no force and effect in respect of the apportionment to be made under any decennial census unless the statement required by section 1 in respect of such census is transmitted to the Congress on or before the first day of the first regular session which begins after the taking of such census has begun.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Page 3, line 6, after the word "Congress," strike of the words "on or before the first day of the first regular session which begins after the taking of such census has begun" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the time prescribed in section 1."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WINGO rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I do not feel like letting this bill pass—I presume it will pass—without submitting a few observations. I think it will be conceded, in view of the fact that my State, Arkansas, is not affected and will neither lose nor gain a Member under this proposition, that my judgment is not beclouded by any personal interest either of my State or of myself.

First, I want to say this: We have had a great deal of criticism of Congress because it has been charged that we have not discharged our constitutional duty by reapportioning this House after the last decennial census. I think it is a fair statement of the provisions of the Constitution that it is the constitutional duty of the Congress that is in session after the census is completed to make that reapportionment. I doubt very seriously if it is the constitutional duty of a succeeding Congress if a preceding Congress fails to perform its duty; but, whatever may be the right interpretation of the Constitution on that question, I think this is true: That at no time since the last decennial census has any proposition been presented to this House to reapportion this House on the same basis as that on which the 12 preceding reapportionments were made.

I repeat it: This House has not had an opportunity to vote—no Congress since 1920 has had an opportunity to vote—yes or no upon an apportionment bill that was based upon the theory and the manner and the method of reapportionment which characterized the 12 preceding reapportionments.

Now, the rank and file of the Members of the House are not responsible for that. Those who control the program of this House and determine what may be brought up and what may not be brought up are responsible for the failure of this House to discharge its constitutional duty.

Now, so much for that, except to say this: Every one of these proposals which have been submitted to me since the 1920 census has contained a proposal that I could not accept under my oath to support the Constitution. I think it is conceded by everybody that every one of these proposals, with possibly one exception, had a provision in it that was new and unusual, and that was conceded to give a partisan advantage to one party if enacted into law. The other bill carried with it a proposal which a great many able lawyers in this House were convinced was unconstitutional. I respected their opinion and I accepted their judgment, and for that reason I would not vote for that.

Now, what does this bill do? It is very ingeniously drawn. It may get around the charge that we are delegating the legislative authority of Congress to an executive bureau. Perhaps, though I doubt it, you may get around that charge, so far as the letter of the Constitution is concerned, but you do violate the spirit of the Constitution. When I took an oath to support the Constitution I meant the spirit of the Constitution as well as the letter.

Now, do not deceive yourselves. You are not going to deceive any other lawyer outside of this body that you are not mainly passing this bill for two reasons. One of them is that those of you who will be benefited by it think it is your best chance to get an increase for your States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Then the rest of you say—as you have expressed it in private conversation—that you have gotten a little bit sore over being rawhided by a lot of cheap demagogues—most of whom would not know the Constitution from a vinegar recipe—abusing Congress because they think we have not discharged our constitutional duty. In other words, you are going to be whipped into doing something which you are bound to admit violates the spirit of the Constitution.

What is going to be done when this becomes a law? The Constitution provides that the reapportionment of this House shall be by the positive, affirmative action of Congress, does it not? Under this bill the reapportionment of this House depends not upon the affirmative but the negative action of the Congress. It provides that unless the next Congress, after the 1930 census, shall undertake to discharge its constitutional function by affirmative action then a bureau chief shall take its place and discharge the constitutional duty of that Congress. In such event, will reapportionment come by the affirmative action of Congress? No. It will come by the negative action of Congress and, worse of all, by the affirmative action of a bureau chief, from whose decision there can be no appeal, save the judgment of the body that refuses to act. You may go off in that way if you want to and yield the prerogatives which affect the composition of this House itself to a bureau, but under my oath I can not do it.

Now, let us see what else. You take the amendment you have here, section b. If you will read section b you will find it makes possible for this House to have this reapportionment determined by the negative action not of Congress—I have discussed that—but the negative action of a bureau chief. If he fails to file a certain statement on the first day of the Congress, then the reapportionment will be one way; if he files it. it will be another way, and yet you tell me this does not violate the spirit of the Constitution? Well, I should hate to have my constitutional liberties depend upon the befuddled brain of a man who makes that kind of a distinction. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, chickens have a way of coming home to roost. I watched North Carolina; I watched some gentlemen from Texas and I watched some Members from Tammany Hall to-day go through the tellers. I am going to make the prediction that some of you gentlemen who voted that way from Texas, North Carolina, and New York City are going to have your chickens come home to roost during your lifetime and that you will see the day when this very bill will plague you instead of being a blessing to you. You can not trifle with the spirit of the Constitution without paying the price, and you are trifling with the spirit of the Constitution.

In conclusion let me give you my chief objection to the bill. It is an abject plea of cowardice and inefficiency upon the part of Congress. You by this bill say that Congressmen are either inefficient and incapable of discharging their constitutional duty or else they are too cowardly to do it. That is your confession, spread upon the record, when you vote for this bill. That is my judgment. You may differ with me and I am not going to abuse you, but remember what I say: Your chickens will come home to roost; they will come home to those of you who are voting for what you think is the selfish present interest of your State. You had better vote upon a question of this kind solely in the light of the Constitution and not permit your judgment to be swayed or your vote determined by the fact that a few Members may be gained for your States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I call the membership of this House to witness that during the last three years there have been three opportunities, including this one to-day, to vote on the question of reapportionment, so that there has been no dereliction on the part of anyone during this period or at any time, so far as I know, in attempting to bring this matter to a settlement.

What are the dangers we are now facing relating to reapportionment and how can these dangers be avoided? In the first place, I believe that we face the danger of having this House unduly enlarged in its membership and I think this danger should be obviated, if it can be done. We all recall the farewell statement of our beloved colleague from Ohio, Senator BURTON, when he stood on this floor and called the attention of the House to the danger of increased numbers in this chamber. He stated that in every decade since he had been a Member of this House the membership had been increased, and that each time it was increased it was with the promise that it should not be increased thereafter. By the perfectly fair and equitable method proposed in this bill we can obviate that danger.

What is another danger? We are in danger, if this bill be not passed by this Congress, of going on indefinitely without a reapportionment just as we have done for the last eight years. As we go on decade after decade the differences in the proportionate increase in population of the several States will become more and more exaggerated, and by reason of having no reapportionment at all we shall find ourselves drifting into a form of government which is not in any true respect a representative government.

What does this bill do? It simply provides that in case the next Congress shall fail to reapportion the membership of this House, by any method it may choose, upon the census taken in 1930, then the method provided in this bill shall be used automatically, the membership of the House shall continue to be 435, the same number the House now has, and with this number as a basis, the 435 members shall be allocated to the several States according to the population as found in the 1930 census.

What could be fairer even as a purely sporting proposition? Each Member ought to say, "I am willing to take the chance with my State and if we have not grown proportionately with the others, then we must abide the consequences." This is all that we say or do in this bill. We are not usurping the authority of any future Congress. We are not delegating to anyone any power except a purely ministerial one. We are not putting this matter beyond the recall of the next Congress; in fact, we are inviting that Congress to perform its duty under the Constitution as the members composing it may see fit; but if they fail to do it—and Congresses have failed to do their duty in this respect—if the next Congress shall fail to do its duty, then by this act we have provided a guaranty against the consequences that could otherwise flow from the failure of that Congress to do its duty. It seems to me that there could be no fairer proposition.

We are not only not attempting to usurp the power of a future Congress, we are not in any wise reflecting upon the patriotism or good judgment of those who may make up that Congress. In fact, we are relying upon them, in case what we do here to-day should prove to be wrong, to correct it, and by the very language of this bill we are inviting them to do so. However, if they for any cause should fail to perform this function, as previous Congresses have done, then what we may do here becomes a matter of great importance which will save future Congresses from the stigma of having failed to perform a perfectly plain constitutional duty. And there are difficulties in the way of performing this function, as we all know, so that we should not be too hard upon any past or subsequent Congress for quailing before these difficulties. It is not an easy matter to legislate one's self out of office or to deprive one's State of representation it has had hitherto. Sometimes, however, this must be done, unpleasant though it may be, and we in this bill provide as painless a method as it is possible to devise, in case there should be a failure to do it directly at the proper time. We have the satisfaction, too, that in providing this method we have furnished a guaranty that a fair apportionment will be made under the Constitution. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to announce to the membership of the committee that as soon as sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 are read, section 6 being eliminated under the committee amendment, I propose to move that sections 3, 4, and 5, the remaining sections, be stricken from the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS: Page 2, line 13, after the word "transmitted," insert the words "and also the succeeding Congress," so that as amended the lines will read:

"SEC. 2 (a). If the Congress to which the statement required by section 1 is transmitted, and also the succeeding Congress, fails to enact a law apportioning the Representatives among the several States"—

And so forth.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, to my mind, and I think to the minds of a great many Members of the House, one of the objectionable features of the pending bill is that it ties the hands of the next Congress and only allows the next Congress the short session within which to untie its hands.

I think this is undoubtedly unfair, certainly to the next Congress, and whatever may be the will of that Congress, we know the very great difficulties of enacting any kind of controversial legislation or new legislation during the brief period of three months of the short session of Congress, and the report of the Secretary of Commerce with respect to the census is not to be made to the Congress until the first day of the second session of the Seventy-first Congress and each subsequent fifth Congress.

There are many things which may occur to prevent legislation from being enacted into law, no matter how diligent the House may be to perform its duty and to exercise its constitutional function, if its opportunity to legislate is restricted to this brief period. For instance, after the 1920 census, at the first opportunity the House of Representatives passed a reapportionment bill fixing the number of Members at 435, but this bill died in the Senate. The House had done its full constitutional duty, as much as it was possible for it to do, and yet the bill failed of passage because of a situation over which the House had no control. This same thing may occur again. It might even be passed by the House and pigeonholed in a committee at the other end of the Capitol; even the other branch of Congress might not have an opportunity to vote upon it.

A rule might not be obtained for the consideration of a bill in the House. The Rules Committee or the chairman of the Rules Committee of the House might prefer for the reapportionment to be made by the Secretary of Commerce rather than the next Congress which, under the Constitution, has the right and ought to have the right to pass a reapportionment bill.

We know how easy it is—we have witnessed so often how easy it is—to smother or to defeat legislation during the short session. Why, the committee could not even begin hearings; they could not prepare a bill; they could take no action whatever until after the report of the census. Then they would hold hearings, and there might be filibustering in the committee. It might be that the committee was so formed that a majority of them would be opposed to action, although if they had the opportunity the membership of the House might, by an overwhelming vote, perform their duty if given an opportunity.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman really believe it was ever contemplated by this measure that the Congress which gets this information is to take any action? Is not the legislation rather for the purpose of preventing action by that Congress?

Mr. DAVIS. That may be the purpose of it; but if it is, it is an improper purpose. I have no patience with this continual surrender of its authority by Congress.

I think we should certainly give the next Congress and future Congresses a reasonable opportunity to act, and that is all this amendment does. It does not change the other provisions of the bill. It would still mean that if the second session of the Seventy-first Congress or the ensuing Congress does not pass a reapportionment bill, the provisions of this bill will go into effect, and the Secretary of Commerce will make the apportionment. To delay it a few months or even a year or two longer would be no more than has been done during many istances in the past, and I think this is an amendment to which any Member, in the interest of fairness, in the interest of courtesy to succeeding Congresses, out of consideration for the Constitution, can well afford to agree, regardless of how he may feel on the subject of reapportionment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. BURTNESS. Oh, no; I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed. Is there objection?

Mr. LETTS. I object.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, Chief Justice Taft has been forced by prevailing social conditions to call for a war on crime. Yet in this paramount lawmaking body we find Members insisting on breaking the Constitution in self-interest. Congress should set a better example. We do not want a congressional underworld made up of parliamentary racketeers. Congress has repeatedly refused to reapportion, and in fact we are fourth offenders, subject to life imprisonment under the Baumes laws. [Laughter.]

The logic of dry nullifiers of the apportionment section is baffling. Here is a plain constitutional mandate easy and inexpensive of enforcement. Also, it is popular. But they refuse to follow it. But to them the unpopular, costly, and impossible eighteenth amendment is sacrosanct. They do not want to delegate nondiscretionary power to a Secretary of Commerce. Yet he is an oath-bound public official. But time and again they have surrendered all their official powers to the unofficial scavenger, the Anti-Saloon League. [Laughter.] Some of the farm bloc oppose redistricting, but there is a certain amount of farm relief in cutting down the surplus of farm orators here who send canned speeches back to the sticks that are not even good for fertilizer. Probably we could put an equalization fee in it, and it would pass unanimously if amended to provide that any Congressman who loses his job as a result of the bill would get a life pension of $10,000 per annum. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS) there were 88 ayes and 117 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 12, strike out all of section 2.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is very plain. If adopted, section 1 will remain, still leaving a complete bill so far as furnishing the information is concerned that would be sent to the second session of the next Congress, so that it might do its constitutional duty in providing for an apportionment after they have got the information disclosed by the 1930 census.

The point I want to emphasize to you this afternoon—and I do not think it has been emphasized sufficiently in the course of the debate—is that the theory of the makers of our Constitution was not that one Congress should provide a method of apportionment for all Congresses in the future, but on the other hand the theory was that every 10 years there should be an enumeration to be followed by apportionment. The first step to be taken was an enumeration and following that, in the light of facts disclosed thereby, the theory was that the next Congress would pass an apportionment measure in accordance with the facts disclosed by such enumeration.

Now, as has been stated so often here to-day and yesterday, this bill is not an apportionment on the information we have, or an apportionment to go into effect now upon the last census. It is an apportionment to take effect after the next census to be conducted in 1930. In other words, it is the most perfect case of putting the cart before the horse that could ever be suggested. [Applause.]

The theory in all legislation is, or ought to be, that we should first determine the facts and then in the light of the facts enact a proper law to do justice to all concerned.

But here you attempt to pass the law first, not knowing what the facts are about to be disclosed, and then you hope that the bill will do justice in the light of the facts.

The proponents say, "Oh, yes, but the Seventy-first Congress in its short session will have an opportunity to rewrite the law if it is not then shown to be right, if it does not prove to be what the majority of the membership of the House and the Senate want. The gentleman from Tennessee pointed out the unfairness of that argument for action is limited to the short session, and I think the Members who support the bill ought to be frank enough to say to the House that it is the intent of the bill, not to give an opportunity to pass a new law in the second session of the Seventy-first Congress, but to use this bill, if it becomes a law, to prevent action.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. I direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that that will be a lame duck session, the same as this.

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; it will be a lame duck session lasting only three months, just as this is into which this legislation has been injected in spite of the fact that the very question has been turned down by this same Congress by a fair majority in last session. In any event from a viewpoint of time alone it is an unfair proposal that the committees can do the required work and hope to get a controversial law through both Houses under conditions always existing in the short session.

The greatest objection of all that I have to it is the power that it puts into the hands of a few men to prevent action in the short session of the Seventy-first Congress. We all know that even now under the best conditions a minority can block legislation. That is the case now, it is true, but when you take away the tremendous impetus there would be in this country in favor of an apportionment in the absence of legislation—for if you had no such law on the statute books there would be an impetus for those who are here to pass legislation in the Seventy-first Congress—if you put this sort of an automatic law on the statute books, what situation will you have? There will be a lot of people who will say, "Oh, well, there is no use of bothering about it or of seeing what the census shows now, because we can get along all right under this automatic law; let us not bother about a new law"

The Census Committee by a unanimous vote might even report out a bill satisfactory to a large majority of the Members of the House and satisfactory to the country; yet, if you have this automatic law on the statute books you will find that it would be possible for a majority of 1 on the Committee on Rules to prevent consideration of that bill, falling back on the argument to let the automatic apportionment take effect. Not only is that power given, if you please, to what might be a majority of 1 upon the Rules Committee of this House under circumstances of that sort—and the illustration I have given is not a remote one—but, of course, a similar power is given to just two or three Members in the body at the other end of the Capitol, if they should desire to filibuster against such a bill in the short session. I think we have in recent years had enough experience to know what the powers of two or three filibustering Senators are in the Congress of the United States under the present rules of the Senate, so that we here at this end of the Capitol ought not to be willing by our votes to increase those powers to prevent enactment of legislation we pass, and we should be willing to undertake at the proper time the duties that the founders of the Constitution intended should evolve upon the first Congress following each separate enumeration that is made. How ridiculous it must seem to anyone who pays any attention to the Constitution to realize that we are trying to legislate apportionment measures not only for the Seventy-first Congress but for the Congress which will be the first one after the 1940 census, and the first one after 1950, 1960, and so on down through the decades and through the years, for, if the political situation should be such that a change can not be made, or if a few men insist upon wielding the tremendous power this automatic law gives them, then such will be the result.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTNESS) there were—ayes 99, noes 125.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. In each State entitled under this act to more than one Representative, the Representatives to which such State may be entitled in the Seventy-third and each subsequent Congress shall be elected by districts equal in number to the number of Representatives to which such State may be entitled in Congress, no one district electing more than one Representative. Each such district shall be composed of contiguous and compact territory and contain as nearly as practicable the same number of individuals.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. In the election of Representatives to the Seventy-third or any subsequent Congress in any State which under the apportionment provided for in section 2 of this act is given an increased number of Representatives, the additional Representative or Representatives apportioned to such State shall be elected by the State at large, and the other Representatives to which the State is entitled shall be elected as theretofore, until such State is redistricted in the manner provided by the laws thereof, and in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. In the election of Representatives to the Seventy-third or any subsequent Congress in any State which under the apportionment provided for in section 2 of this act is given a decreased number of Representatives, the whole number of Representatives to which such State is entitled shall be elected by the State at large until such State is redistricted in the manner provided by the laws thereof, and in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Candidates for Representatives at large shall be nominated, unless the State concerned shall provide otherwise, in the same manner in which candidates for governor in that State are nominated.

With the following committee amendment: Strike out all of section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee automatically rises at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11725) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered on the amendments and bill to final passage. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANKIN moves to recommit the bill (H. R. 11725) to the Committee on the Census with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendments: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That on the first day of the second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress, the Secretary of Commerce shall transmit to the Congress a statement showing the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed, as ascertained under the 1930 census of the population and the number of Representatives to which each State would be entitled under an apportionment of 435 Representatives, made in the following manner: By apportioning the 435 Representatives among the several States according to their respective numbers as shown by such census, no State to receive less than one Member.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Chairman, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 227, answered "present" 1, not voting 65, as follows:

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague Mr. DOUGLASS is unable to be present and asked me to state that if he were here he would vote "no."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, the wife of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. LEECH, is seriously ill in the hospital, and he wanted to go home and still be recorded as voting for this bill. I agreed to pair with him in the event that he could not come back. Accordingly I desire to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present" in order that his vote in favor of the bill may be recorded.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

To recommit:

Mr. Ware (for) with Mr. Wolfenden (against).
Mr. Moore of Kentucky (for) with Mr. Howard of Oklahoma (against).
Mr. Kindred (for) with Mr. Casey (against).
Mr. Adkins (for) with Mr. Kerr (against).

Mr. Golder with Mr. Fletcher.
Mr. Arentz with Mr. Wilson of Mississippi.
Mr. Pratt with Mr. McSweeney.
Mr. Summers of Washington with Mr. White of Colorado.
Mr. Taylor of Tennessee with Mr. O'Brien.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FENN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the last two days have been somewhat strenuous for most of us. Almost the entire membership of the House has been on the floor constantly. I am sure that the correspondence of Members and other necessary business has accumulated during this time, sorely needing attention. I therefore ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REAPPORTIONMENT

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I realize that many Members have given generously of their time to bring the reapportionment issue to a successful termination, and I am sure we are all grateful to them. However, there is one Member whom I know particularly well, and I know that he has contributed more than anyone else by his untiring efforts, his indomitable spirit in the face of continuous and successive setbacks, his uniform courtesy, his bulldog tenacity to carry through what is perhaps the most delicate and difficult bill to handle in a legislative body, and I therefore think that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] is entitled to the thanks of the House and the country.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House the bill and papers in the case of H. R. 9303.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House the bill and papers in the case of H. R. 9303. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, do I understand it was to withdraw the bill and papers?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes, sir. I mean such papers that are connected with the legislation. I do not want to withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw the papers in connection with the bill H. R. 9303.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The bill never having been reported?

Mr. CROWTHER. And no adverse action thereon.

REAPPORTIONMENT

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the bill just passed has been acclaimed as an act of contrition for past sins and omissions. That might have been the intent, but it is a futile gesture.

No reapportionment was made after the 1920 census, and four Congresses have allowed their plain duty under the Constitution to remain unfulfilled and disregarded.

The general idea now seems to be that if the action of the House is confirmed by the Senate and approved by the President we are going to have an immediate reapportionment, thereby remedying the grievous underrepresentation of many of the States.

This is, of course, a false hope, a misleading mirage. A reapportionment made to-day on the 1920 census—the only census on which the present Congress has the constitutional right to legislate—would be no more equitable than the apportionment on the 1910 census, on which the present representation is based, and would be absolutely valueless. It could only affect the 1930 elections and would have to be predicated on guesswork as to the probable population of the States in that year.

The fact is that Congress has neglected its duty too long and it is now too late to make amends.

This bill is not only a futile gesture, but those who are responsible for it are guilty of arrogant effrontery, inasmuch as they undertake to instruct and bind the next Congress as to duties which they themselves have so long and so flagrantly neglected.

The census of 1930 will determine the population of the States. Under the Constitution, interpreted by every known rule of legal construction, the duty falls on the Congress then in session to make a reapportionment so as to be effective in the 1932 congressional elections.

It is not our place to tell future Congresses what to do or how to do it. The law we have just passed is not worth the paper it is written on. It can have no effect on the next Congress except to spur them, perhaps, to repeal it as a piece of meddlesome impertinence.

Nor is it necessary to bring into action the instrumentality of a Cabinet officer to make a simple arithmetical calculation. Everyone knows that when the population of the States is known it is a very simple matter to ascertain the number of Representatives to which each shall be entitled, whether the House stands at 435 or any other number.

And here, again, the meddlesomeness of this measure is made even more manifest. Although I believe that a House of 435 Members is ample, I assert that we of this Congress have no more right to bind the next Congress in that regard than we have to force them to accept our notion as to how the apportionment shall be made.

The sum total, then, of our work on this bill is to tell the next Congress what we think about the subject, an opinion which is utterly gratuitous and impertinent and of no more binding force than the expression of our opinion as to what ought to be the size of the appropriation for the Army in 1932.

The bill as reported from committee was a legislative monstrosity. It gave the small States two Representatives where their population only entitled them to one. Owing to the discernment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH], supported by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STOBBS], by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], and by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], this preposterous situation was discovered in time and was corrected by an amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The committee itself consented to the striking out of sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 containing other arrogant usurpations, among which was the provision which would have required Congressmen to be elected "at large" in three-fourths of the States in the elections of 1932, thus making the representation dependent largely on the political results in particular States—a cheap political device which would have wiped out all minority representation.

By the amputation on the floor of these obnoxious features the monstrosity was made less odious, but it nevertheless goes over to the Senate a hopeless cripple.

In conclusion, I feel constrained to express the regret that I was prevented, owing to the peculiar parliamentary situation, from having the opportunity to record my vote in opposition to the bill in toto. I voted at first against the motion to recommit, but when I learned that a gentlemen's agreement had been entered into—by the leaders among the proponents and the opponents of the bill—not to have a roll call on the final passage—an arrangement which precluded the ascertainment of the real sentiments of the House on the bill itself—I changed my vote to the affirmative in order to express, even though thus indirectly, my opposition to the entire proposal.

If the final roll call had been taken, I would have allowed my negative vote on the motion to recommit to stand, and I would have likewise voted "no" on the bill itself. I am satisfied that many Members of the House, who, like myself, were opposed to the bill, would have done likewise in order to express their opposition to the extension of the dangerous innovation of Congress delegating its powers of apportionment to a Cabinet officer, and in order to emphasize as well their hostility to the novel theory that any one Congress has the right to usurp the constitutional obligations of future Congresses.

ROSTER OF ARMIES OF CIVIL WAR

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter received by me from The Adjutant General of the War Department giving certain information relative to the compilation of records of both the Federal and Confederate soldiers engaged in the Civil War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted, I herewith extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter received by me from The Adjutant General of the War Department giving information in regard to the compilation of the records of both the Federal and Confederate soldiers engaged in the war between the States, and the matter of the publication of such records, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 8, 1929.

Hon. EWIN L. DAVIS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DAVIS: I have your letter of December 22, 1928, referring to the matter of compilation by the War Department of all Confederate records. You ask whether this work has been completed, and if not, when it may be expected that it will be completed, and also whether any steps have been taken toward the publication of these records, and, if not, what would be the probable cost of such publication.

Prior to the World War considerable progress had been made in carding by the index-record-card system the Confederate records in my office, but at about the time of the beginning of the World War it was found necessary to temporarily discontinue the work, and partly on account of the exigencies of the war, and partly by reason of the inadequate clerical force allowed my office by law, it had not been found possible to resume it until Congress in April, 1926, saw fit to make an appropriation of $70,000 for that purpose.

This appropriation, which became available July 1, 1926, was sufficient for the compilation as originally contemplated and estimated for but about January 4, 1927, it was deemed advisable to investigate some Confederate records which were in storage for a number of years and which had been previously considered of no value for compilation. These additional records caused such an added burden that the work could not be completed by June 30, 1927, as intended, and the original plan had to be modified to insure that each name should be carded and arranged alphabetically so as to be searchable. Since that time the various refinements of the work have been carried on as routine under the regular appropriation, and at the present time all the information on file relative to the records of Confederate soldiers is readily available.

It has been taken for granted that a published roster of the armies of the Civil War would include both Union and Confederate soldiers and no estimate has ever been made of the cost of publishing a roster of the Confederate forces alone.

However, at a hearing before the Subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations, Seventieth Congress, first session, in connection with publication of the Union and Confederate records it was brought out that—

"By printing the data straight across the page, arranged under regimental heading, without boxes, using abreviations, and eliminating all but the most essential data, as—'One Hundred and Second New York Volunteer Infty.'"

* * * * * * *

Appler, L. V., pvt., Co. F, enl. Sep. 3, '62, at New York, m. i. Oct. 18, '62, wounded Port Hudson, La., June 14, '63, m. o. Oct. 12, '65.

Ninety-eight volumes of approximately 1,000 pages each would be required for both the Union and Confederate rosters.

The initial cost of composing, printing, and binding is estimated at $16 a page, or $1,568,000 for the 98 volumes. The additional printing cost would depend upon the number of volumes distributed free and the binding used. Based on the selling price by the Superintendent of Documents of similar publications, each paper-bound volume would cost about $1.50, or $147 for the set.

If the names were arranged by regiments and States, an index would be required. The index would require about two-fifths of the space of the roster itself, increasing the printing cost about $627,200.

The cost of preparing the copy for the printer, checking and making adjustments when discrepancies in original records are found, and compiling the index would cost not less than $2,000,000.

The total cost would be not less than $4,500,000.

However, for a fuller discussion of the subject, attention is invited to pages 99 to 102, inclusive, of part 1 of "Hearings before the subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations" containing testimony on title 1 of the bill comprising the military activities of the War Department, published at the United States Government Printing Office in 1928.

Very respectfully,

C. H. BRIDGES,
Brigadier General,
Acting The Adjutant General.

LEAVE TO PRINT ON THE APPORTIONMENT BILL

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, a number of Members have spoken to me in reference to extending their remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed. It is an important measure, and during the debate there was not opportunity for everyone to speak who wished to speak. I therefore ask unanimous consent that for three legislative days Members may extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that for three legislative days Members may extend their remarks in the RECORD on the apportionment bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, that would be counting three days from Monday?

Mr. TILSON. Three legislative days from Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

REAPPORTIONMENT

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in opposing this bill I am following the same course I took in the last session. My opposition is based solely upon the provision which delegates to an executive department, the Secretary of Commerce, the head of the department being a political appointee, power vested in the Congress under the Constitution. I am unwilling to leave this important question in the hands of any one man, but stand ready now to vote for reapportionment on the basis of the 1920 census and pledge my vote in the Seventy-first Congress to reapportionment based on the 1930 census. This should be evidence I am not in opposition to reapportionment, even though my State will lose three or four members.

By 1930 we will find 23,000,000 people are without proper representation in this body. On the basis of the census of 1920 it is estimated 13,000,000 have been deprived of proper representation due to the failure of Congress to carry out its constitutional duty.

The rural communities have at present a representation in the Congress to which they are not entitled. If the Congress will not reapportion now, I am sure the country will demand immediately after the 1930 census is taken that a reapportionment bill be passed, and although, as I stated in the last session, it means not only my retirement as a Member of this House but also the loss of three or four Members to my State my vote will be cast for the bill.

I further agree to vote to retain the present membership, 435, and will so vote whenever an opportunity presents itself, but I will not approve of the transfer of authority vested solely in Congress by the Constitution to an executive official, no matter who the official might be.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, the measure now under consideration purports to be an apportionment bill for the House of Representatives. As a matter of fact, however, it is not an apportionment bill at all. Briefly, it is a bill which, if enacted into law, will limit the size of the House of Representatives to 435 Members for all future time.

The occasion for this legislation lies in the fact that Congress is expected, under the Constitution, to make an apportionment of its Members after each decennial census. This was not done after the 1920 census, although several attempts were made, and several votes taken on the question by the House. I think I may say the reason no definite action was taken lay in the fact that Members generally felt that the 1920 census followed too closely upon the conclusion of the World War, and that the population was not in a normal state as to location. It was thought that an apportionment under these conditions would be unfair to certain States. This was especially true of regions largely agricultural.

Certain industrial cities, whose population had grown greatly during the war, were disappointed by the failure of Congress to reapportion under the 1920 census. They saw an opportunity to gain in congressional representation. Their newspapers started a hue and cry of criticism of Congress, and this measure now under consideration is the direct response to that agitation. But since the measure before us does not even assume to apportion on the population as disclosed by the 1920 census, it does not meet the constitutional requirements, and in my judgment is but an empty gesture to deceive the people.

The one branch of the Federal Government directly responsible to the people, and receiving its authority from them every two years, is the House of Representatives. It is the people's legislative forum. Its rights and authority should be kept inviolate in a democracy. It is answerable to the people for its actions every two years. It is truly representative. Now, this measure not only is not a true apportionment bill but is an effort to curtail representative self-government in the future. Briefly, the only important provision of the bill is that the Secretary of Commerce shall apportion the membership of the House among the several States after the 1930 census, basing it upon a total of 435 Representatives, provided that the Congress fails to do so in the next succeeding session. This failure to apportion may be no fault of the House; it may result from many causes over which it has no control. The House may pass a bill in good faith only to see it fail in the Senate, due to a congested calendar or a filibuster. That most likely would be the result. It has recently happened with other important legislation. The proponents of this measure, aware of the difficulties in passing all such legislation, no doubt purposely provided that the apportionment following the 1930 census shall be made by Congress in the second session—the short session, when legislation is always in a jam. Very probably no legislation on apportionment will result. Then that function will be performed by the Secretary of Commerce, a branch of the executive.

Mr. Speaker, a bill of this nature goes to the very heart of popular government. It gives to an executive bureau the right to determine how many Members a State shall have to represent it in the House of Representatives. It is a curtailment of the rights and powers of a future House that inherently belongs to it under the Constitution. It strengthens the power of the executive branch of our Government at the expense of the legislative. It gives to an executive officer, answerable to no one, authority and power that might even threaten and destroy the life of the legislative body. Under its provisions there is nothing to hinder a dishonest officer from not only manipulating the census returns but also from allocating illegally the just representation to which each States is entitled under that result. It might be done and would not be subject to review by this House.

Further, the Seventy-first Congress might pass an apportionment bill that the President would veto. It might attempt to repeal the law now proposed only to meet with the same action. The power to perform this function of apportioning the Members of the House would still legally rest with a department bureau unless a two-thirds majority were obtained in both House and Senate to pass it over the President's veto. We are, therefore, in passing this measure imposing upon a future House an added burden in performing its constitutional duty. We are robbing it of a part of its authority upon the question of apportioning its own Members. Instead of a majority performing that function we are imposing a condition that may require a vote of two-thirds. Therefore in actual legislative practice we are passing a law that will for all future time do away with all apportionment legislation by the Congress and delegate that function to a bureau chief. In other words, we are repealing the Constitution upon that question.

Mr. Speaker, this measure is a delegation of an inherent political right of this House to an executive department. It is a loss to the legislative, and an encroachment by the executive, branch.

Many Members are supporting this bill in the belief that the Constitution calls for reapportionment. The Constitution does provide for reapportionment, but not for reapportionment on the basis of a census which has not yet been taken. Quite aside from the arguments against the enactment of this legislation already set forth, I am wondering whether these Members, and particularly those from the agricultural sections, have considered fully what the effects are going to be as regards the just representation of agriculture in this body. It is well known that there is a large floating population in the large cities. There are also many aliens, and literally hundreds of thousands who are either not eligible to vote or who take no interest in their Government. All of these can, and no doubt will, be counted in the taking of the census. It does not require a great deal of foresight to understand that this will work to the disadvantage of the agricultural States with their population of home owners and others of practically permanent residence. We all know that since the World War agriculture has been struggling for its very existence. Its economic standing and population have suffered the greatest losses in its history. It is now proposed, before it has had a chance to recover, to permanently limit its representation in Congress. In other words, the sturdy pioneers and home builders of the food-producing areas are, by the passage of this legislation, to be penalized in favor of the voteless aliens, tourists, and other transients of industrial centers and winter-resort States. I am opposed to this usurpation of authority over a future Congress and to this unjust discrimination against the farmers of the country.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress. I am in favor of it for a number of reasons:

First. I think that the Constitution of the United States clearly intended that such a bill should be enacted immediately after the taking of each decennial census. The pertinent parts of the Constitution are as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AFFECTING REAPPORTIONMENT

Article I, section 2, clause 3:

"The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct."

Article I, section 4, clause 1:

"The time, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators."

Article I, section 8, clause 18:

"The Congress shall have power * * * to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in department or officer thereof."

Notwithstanding the constitutional provision for the taking of a census every tenth year, no apportionment has been made thereon since the act of Congress of August 8, 1911, under which the House of Representatives is composed of 435 Members. Since the taking of the 1920 census the Congress has failed to comply with this constitutional requirement.

Second. This bill provides for retaining the membership of the House of Representatives at 435 Members. I do not favor an increase in the membership of the House and therefore favor this provision of the pending bill.

Third. I do not fear the delegation of a purely ministerial power to the Secretary of Commerce.

The bill provides, as required by the Constitution, for one Member from each State, and then for apportionment according to the method of majority fractions of the remaining Members among the several States, but retaining the membership at 435. No discretion is vested in the Secretary of Commerce and his action is purely ministerial.

In my judgment, if Congress fails to enact this legislation, after the 1930 census we will be met with the same delays and obstructions which we have encountered since the taking of the census of 1920. Unfortunately, a number of the States will lose one or more Representatives. It is natural for the Representatives from those States to oppose the enactment of such legislation by every parliamentary tactic which is known to them. They have been successful in this since 1920. They will either oppose the enactment of apportionment legislation or succeed in enlarging the membership of the House of Representatives so that none of the States will lose a Member. That has been the policy of those opposing such legislation since the foundation of the Government. The first House of Representatives was composed of 30 Members, while the present House has 435 Members. I am not in favor of increasing this number, and for that reason, and because in my judgment, the spirit of the Constitution requires Congress to pass an apportionment bill every 10 years, and for fear of further delay after the taking of the 1930 census, I favor the enactment of this bill.

I do not fear the conferring of the authority, which is purely ministerial, upon the Secretary of Commerce.

This bill gives to Oklahoma one additional Member of the House of Representatives. My State is entitled to its proportionate representation, but whether the State of Oklahoma secures an additional Member or not, Congress should comply with the Constitution and enact apportionment legislation every 10 years.

This legislation does not go into effect until the Seventy-third Congress, plenty of time being given to Congress to enact apportionment legislation, but in the event that Congress fails to do so, as it has for the past nine years, then the membership of the House of Representatives is apportioned by giving each State one Member, as required by the Constitution, and the remaining membership is apportioned according to population as shown by the census, among the several States by the method of majority fractions by a purely ministerial act on the part of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the foundation of our republican form of government, the basis of representative government in the United States, is the fair apportionment of the Representatives in Congress among the States in accordance with population. The Senate represents arbitrary, accidental, and disproportional areas of land. The more than 10,000,000 of people of the State of New York have but the same representation in the Senate as the less than 90,000 people of the State of Nevada. In the House of Representatives alone under our Constitution is there a chance for a fair expression of the popular will. The House alone can mirror the thought and register the will of our people in their development and advance in civilization.

Article I of the Constitution orders that a census of the inhabitants of the United States be taken every 10 years. And for what purpose? For the sole purpose of making a correct reapportionment of the Members of the House of Representatives, so that our right of self-government may be preserved. The census has been enlarged to serve other useful purposes, but the reason for the provision for it in the Constitution is still all compelling. Each of us Members of this House has taken a solemn oath to support and defend this Constitution. We are the trustees of the people of this country, charged by them with a special duty under the Constitution to protect and preserve our free institutions.

Those wise men who drafted the Constitution foresaw the shifting of population and the changes in concentration. They foresaw the necessity for a periodical reapportionment of the membership of the House in order to insure a government of, by, and for the people. Apparently they did not realize the great temptation to which Members of the House would be subjected to cling to unjust and unlawful power. When the result of the 1920 census was announced it was realized that 11 States were to lose one or more Representatives and but 8 States would gain. Heretofore the resistance to reapportionment has been overcome by increasing the total number of Representatives until the original number of 65 by increases every 10 years has risen to the present total of 435. Many think that these increases have tended to decrease the efficiency and responsibility of the House and its ability to legislate fairly in the public interest. It seems to be the prevailing sentiment, both in and out of Congress, that it would be harmful to further increase the total number.

The House passed a reapportionment bill in the Sixty-sixth Congress in the spring of 1921, but it was not acted upon in the Senate. Patriotic Members have tried continuously since then to fulfill the constitutional duty, but in vain.

To-day we approach a crisis. Shall we continue to betray our trust? Shall we be foresworn? Is it treasonable to fail to obey the constitutional mandate when the fundamental of popular government is involved? Or can anything be treasonable if not subject to criminal punishment? Can the Supreme Court always be relied upon to uphold laws enacted by a Congress illegally constituted? Will people deprived of their constitutional rights be justified in resorting to arms when they come to realize their subject condition after some particularly atrocious act of misrepresentation by some future Congress?

All these questions present themselves to the thoughtful mind when it contemplates the improbability of a reapportionment after the 1930 census if 17 States are, as estimated, to lose one or more of their Representatives. A tremendous strain is put upon the membership of this House. It seems less dishonest, and possibly it is, to withhold property of another which has by chance come into one's possession than to, by act of ours, seize that which is another's. I trust that there may prevail to-day an aggressive honesty in this matter of reapportionment; an honesty such as is told of Lincoln in his youth going miles on foot without delay to pay a sum of money belonging to another that by chance had come into his possession and which he could not honorably retain.

That my own State of Ohio has for years been deprived of her full representation in this House and consequently the Ohio people of their proper influence in the election of the President and of their quota of young men at the Military and Naval Academies may help me to realize the importance of this bill, but I doubt if it has affected my reason or warped my judgment.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President for his approval bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7729. An act to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases;

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. WHEELER. My colleague the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is detained by illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained from the Senate by illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is detained from the Senate by illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senate, as in legislative session, will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11725) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORT OF THE CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

As in legislative session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of that company for the year 1928 (the month of December being estimated only), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers on the files of the Department of Commerce, which are not needed nor useful in the transaction of business and appear to have no historic value, and asking for action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. JONES and Mr. FLETCHER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. BRATTON. I present sundry petitions relative to the peace treaty, and I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the petitions were ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX.

To the Hon. Senator S. G. BRATTON,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On December 13, 1928, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, composed of 56 members, adopted a resolution expressing the hope that the Senate of the United States would speedily ratify the multilateral treaty to outlaw war, without reservations or interpretations which would nullify its meaning. They look to you as their representative to cast your vote for ratification.

Mrs. S. A. KAY, President.
Mrs. A. A. HEFLIN, Secretary.

PETITION TO THE SENATE

We, the undersigned citizens of Espanola, N. Mex., believing that the conclusion of the general pact for the renunciation of war will constitute a long step toward the elimination of the war method of settling international differences, do hereby request of the Senate of the United States the prompt ratification of the treaty without qualification or reservation, and of the Senators from the State of New Mexico that they use all their influence to that end. (Signatures omitted.)

As in legislative session,

Mr. BLAINE presented resolutions adopted by the Menomonee Falls Advancement Association, of Menomonee Falls, Wis., indorsing the action of the Farm Bureau Federation in its effort to secure adequate protection for domestic sugar and to limit the free entry of Porto Rican and Philippine sugar into the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Minnesota, praying for the prompt ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, without reservation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Minnesota, praying that the provision in the Army appropriation bill, fiscal year 1930, reducing the number of private mounts of officers from two to one be eliminated from the bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Minnesota, praying for the adoption of the so-called Shipstead resolution, being the resolution (S. Res. 242) of inquiry as to the appropriateness of amending article 231 of the treaty of Versailles for the purpose of establishing the World War guilt, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in legislative session,

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 4691) to extend the provisions of section 18a of an act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), to certain lands in Utah, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1426) thereon.

Mr. DILL, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12775) providing for a grant of land to the county of San Juan, in the State of Washington, for recreational and public-park purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1427) thereon.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1640) for the relief of certain persons formerly having interests in Baltimore and Harford Counties, Md., reported it without amendment.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN BUREAU AND SUBSIDIARIES

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, as in legislative session, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably the resolution (S. Res. 167) submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] March 13, 1928, providing for the appointment of a committee of five Members of the Senate to investigate the affairs of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Federal land and intermediate credit banks and branches thereof, and I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATION OF PENNSYLVANIA SENATORIAL ELECTION

Mr. DENEEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported back favorably, without amendment, the resolution (S. Res. 285) submitted by Mr. SHORTRIDGE on the 3d instant, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, authorized by resolution of December 17, 1927, to hear and determine the pending contest between William S. Vare and William R. Wilson, involving the right to membership in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $20,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized for said purpose.

PRESIDENTIAL OFFICES AND CARRIERS

Mr. DENEEN, from the Commtitee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported back favorably, without amendment, the resolution (S. Res. 288) submitted by Mr. GEORGE on the 3d instant, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the amount authorized to be expended by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in their investigation of the choice of postmasters in presidential offices and carriers, with particular reference to the circumstances and influences surrounding such choice, in Senate Resolution 193, agreed to May 3, 1928, hereby is increased from $5,000 to $8,000, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers properly approved.

LANDS CEDED TO THE UNITED STATES BY MEXICO

Mr. DENEEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported back favorably, with an amendment, the resolution (S. Res. 291) submitted by Mr. GEORGE on the 7th instant, which was read and considered by unanimous consent.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 24, after the word "investigation," to insert "shall not exceed $1,500, which," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee it may designate for the purpose, be, and it hereby is, authorized and directed to make a thorough investigation of and report to the Senate its findings and recommendations regarding charges that have frequently been made and continue to persist, and reports that have long been current and now prevail that vast tracts of lands within the area of the lands ceded to the United States by the Government of Mexico were corruptly and fraudulently turned over to and delivered into the possession of private interests, and have been held and are now held by said interests without color of title; that qualified citizens seeking to exercise constitutional rights relative to said lands, and parts thereof, have been maliciously threatened, intimidated, slandered, libeled, and arrested, and have been corruptly indicted and held under outrageous bonds for long periods of time, and then released without a hearing or a trial; that private interests continue in the unlawful possession of the public lands by reason of their exerted influence over those whose duty it is to enforce the law.

That said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper, and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpœna or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, surveys, maps, grants, patents, and any and all other documents pertaining thereto; and to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpœnas for witnesses and records; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee, or refuses to answer the questions pertaining to said investigation, shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall not exceed $1,500, which shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman and approved by the committee who audit and control the contingent expenses of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MATTIE B. WILLIAMS

Mr. DENEEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported back favorably, without amendment, the resolution (S. Res. 293) submitted by Mr. BRUCE on the 9th instant, which was read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Mattie B. Williams, widow of John R. Williams, late a messenger of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator whether the amount provided does not exceed the usual and customary amount allowed in such cases?

Mr. DENEEN. I may say to the Senator from Wyoming that Mr. Williams was in the service of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate for 35 years, and it is customary in such cases to give the equivalent of one year's salary.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING OF BRIEFS IN RAILROAD VALUATION CASE

Mr. SHIPSTEAD, from the Committee on Printing, to which were referred the briefs in the so-called O'Fallon Railway Valuation case, reported the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31):

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the briefs of counsel and the transcript of record filed with the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The St. Louis & O'Fallon Railway Co., and Manufacturers' Railway Co., appellants v. The United States of America and the Interstate Commerce Commission, be printed as a Senate document, and that 700 additional copies shall be printed and bound, of which 100 shall be for the use of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, 100 copies for the use of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Joint Committee on Printing.

BILLS INTRODUCED

As in legislative session,

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 5325) authorizing the Iowa-Nebraska Amortized Free Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NYE:

A bill (S. 5326) for the relief of Jessie L. Kinsey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 5327) for the relief of Loretta Kallweit (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 5328) for the relief of William F. Kallweit (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 5329) for the relief of Etta C. Sanborn (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 5330) for the relief of J. H. Sanborn (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 5331) for the relief of Edwina R. Munchhof; to the Committee on Finance.

(By request.) A bill (S. 5332) to enable the mothers and unmarried widows of the deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines of the American forces interred in the cemeteries of Europe to make a pilgrimage to these cemeteries; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 5333) granting a pension to John A. Ritter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 5334) granting an increase of pension to Susan H. Parker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAWES:

A bill (S. 5335) granting an increase of pension to Rosella F. Mason (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 5336) authorizing Walter J. Mitchell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Patuxent River between Charles County, Md., and Calvert County, Md.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SACKETT:

A bill (S. 5337) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Ohio River approximately midway between the city of Owensboro, Ky., and Rockport, Ind.; to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT OF THE IMMIGRATION ACT

Mr. NYE. I ask at this time, as in legislative session, permission to introduce a joint resolution. It is brief, and for the information of the Senate I desire that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 192) to amend subdivisions (b) and (e) of section 11 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subdivisions (b) and (e) of section 11 of the immigration act of 1924, as amended, are amended by striking out the figures "1928" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "1930."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 11725) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, 1929, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"That there is hereby appropriated, from the special fund in the Treasury known as the "reclamation fund," the sum of $50,000 for continuing the cooperative investigations and preparation of plans by the Department of the Interior and the State of Utah in connection with the Salt Lake Basin reclamation project in the State of Utah."

CIVIL WAR ACCOUNTS OF NEVADA

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as in legislative session I present a Senate resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I will say that this resolution is identical with Senate Joint Resolution 41, which heretofore has unanimously passed the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, the resolution merely calls for information.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 295) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General of the United States be directed to reopen and restate the account of the State of Nevada for moneys advanced and expended in aid of the Government of the United States during the War between the States, and on such restatement (1) to accept as a basis of calculation the balance due the State of Nevada on January 1, 1900, stated in the account set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury printed in House Document No. 322, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session; (2) to add to such balance the interest certified by the comptroller of the State of Nevada as actually paid by said State on the sums so advanced and expended from January 1, 1900, to December 31, 1928; (3) to deduct from the total sum so stated the interest at 5 per cent per annum on $8,559.61 repaid by the United States on April 10, 1888, from the date of payment to December 31, 1928; (4) to deduct $12,283.04 repaid by the United States on July 1, 1910, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1910, to December 31, 1928, and certify to the Senate the balance found due the State of Nevada.

COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "It Needs Explaining," appearing in the Washington Daily News of Friday, January 11, 1929.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IT NEEDS EXPLAINING

Testimony of Attorney General Sargent and former Secretary of the Interior Work regarding their part in stopping prosecution of Indian Commissioner Burke falls far short of clearing up a serious matter. Fair-minded citizens will withhold judgment until all the facts are known, but will insist that those facts be uncovered as quickly as possible.

Sargent and Work told the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs yesterday they had interfered with grand jury action in order to protect Burke from alleged persecution by Assistant Attorney General Parmenter. Sargent added that he had not intended to drop the Burke prosecution if investigation substantiated charges against the Indian Commissioner in the Jackson Barnett case.

But what reason had Sargent and Work to think that the grand jury proceedings, which they halted, would not properly sift the charges?

An uncomfortable public feeling has been produced by the apparent ease with which two Cabinet officers, behind the scenes, can manipulate legal proceedings.

"Indictment Indian Commissioner Burke threatened," Work wired Sargent. "Please have it stayed. Mrs. Burke critically ill." Whereupon Sargent, who was in New Hampshire, immediately telephoned Solicitor General Mitchell in Washington to stop the case. That was done. Mitchell then was to investigate the case, but he testified to the Senate committee that he has been too busy.

Now that these charges and countercharges have been forced into the open, it probably will occur to Work and Sargent that they were incurring grave responsibility in sidetracking normal, legal proceedings, and that having done so they were morally obligated to proceed at once with the private investigation of the charges.

Again the country has to thank a Senate committee for throwing the light of inquiry on dealings of the Federal executive departments.

This investigation of the activities of the two Cabinet officials is important in itself. It seems likely also to assure a thorough examination into the treatment of our Indian wards.

THE BAD LANDS OF NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Shall the Bad Lands Be Made a National Park?" written by former Gov. Joseph N. Devine, of North Dakota.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Ward County (N. Dak.) Independent]

SHALL THE BAD LANDS BE MADE A NATIONAL PARK?

The Bad Lands are truly a real wonderful, wild, weird, and as yet unspoiled land of rude, alluring, barbaric yet sweet, fresh, and clean. Once seen, the memory of their beauty, mystery, and majesty will remain forever. Many men of national note and authority have pronounced them to be the greatest naturally formed wild-game preserve in this country and second only to the Yellowstone National Park in point of interests and awe-inspiring beauty. The Little Missouri winds and twists its way through the entire length of this strange, unique stretch of territory. Its deeply wooded banks afford many clean, restful camp sites for tourists, while ranch homes scattered here and there along its course extend hearty welcome and open hospitality to all.

There is but one Bad Lands area as there is but one Yellowstone Park. It is a country rich in romance and thrilling history. Here the student, writer, scientist, and historian can commune with nature to the full and vision that far-away, dim, distant past when God said, "Let there be light, and there was light."

North Dakota, as well as the National Government, must wake up to the far-reaching importance and priceless value of these so-called Bad Lands in the extreme western section of this State. They extend north and south 91 miles with an average width of 14. They should be made a national park and wild-game preserve. A few more years and it will be forever too late. Let them be kept free, clean, and sweet as now from the marring touch of modern civilization in its ever onward resistless march westward. The experience of the past and the constantly growing need of the future abundantly serve to emphasize this plea.

Let the Bad Lands, therefore, be set aside promptly by national legislation to the end and purpose that they be made, while in their primal majesty and beauty, a playground, recreational park, for this and all succeeding generations. God is not making any more Bad Lands.

FIRST INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON SANITARY AVIATION (S. DOC. NO. 201)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Idaho in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending that Congress be requested to authorize an appropriation of $1,000 for the payment of expenses of delegates of the United States to the First International Congress on Sanitary Aviation, to be held at Paris, France, in 1929.

The recommendation has my approval, and I request of Congress legislation authorizing an appropriation of $1,000 for the purpose of participation by the United States by official delegates in the First International Congress on Sanitary Aviation, to be held in Paris in 1929.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE.

MAP OF THE WORLD ON THE MILLIONTH SCALE (S. DOC. NO. 202)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

With reference to my communication of December 30, 1924, regarding legislation to be enacted by the United States in connection with the map of the world on the millionth scale, I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending a request to Congress providing for an annual appropriation of $50 for the payment of a contribution by the United States toward the support of the Central Bureau of the International Map of the World on the Millionth Scale. The recent developments in the matter are explained in the report of the Secretary of State, which has the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior, and I trust that this small annual appropriation will be granted.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 12, 1929.

CONSTRUCTION OF CRUISERS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, at the particular request of the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is detained at home on account of illness, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Washington Star in regard to the cruiser measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BISHOP MCDOWELL BACKS SHIP BILL—CHURCHMAN DECLINES TO JOIN MOVEMENT IN PROTEST TO CRUISER MEASURE

By Frederic William Wile

Bishop William F. McDowell, senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, has declined to associate himself with the protest against the cruiser bill now being made by distinguished churchmen, educators, and other prominent citizens. Bishop McDowell favors the passage of the measure providing for 15 additional cruisers. His attitude is designed to attract the widest possible attention in Washington and the country at large following its disclosure, for the first time, through this writer.

It will arouse interest because Bishop McDowell, on February 27, 1928, headed the impressive delegation of churchmen who protested to President Coolidge at the White House against the projected, and eventually shipwrecked, program to add 71 vessels to the Navy. The delegation appeared on behalf of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, of whose Washington office Bishop McDowell is chairman.

HELD NOT UNREASONABLE

The present proposal—to construct 15 cruisers and 1 aircraft carrier—is held by Bishop McDowell not to be unreasonable. It is described on his behalf as "certainly not of a nature to call for protest or opposition from him." Overtures to join the "citizens' conference against the cruiser bill" failed to enlist Bishop McDowell's support, even though the call for the conference is mainly sponsored by his coreligionist, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal Diocese of Pittsburgh, chairman of the conference, who was recently elected president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. The Federal Council and the National Council for Prevention of War form the principal antipreparedness groups in the country and are jointly conspicuous in this week's anticruiser drive on the Senate.

Bishop McDowell's first interest is represented to be in the prompt ratification of the Kellogg pact for renunciation of war. He joins President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg in the belief that there is no conflict between the multilateral treaty and the program to bring the United States Navy, by the addition of 15 cruisers, nearer to the general strength contemplated by the 5–5–3 ratio of the treaty of Washington.

BOARD NOT CONCERNED

The only reason why the senior Methodist bishop has refrained from an earlier and more public statement of his views about the pending cruiser measure is that Doctor McDowell did not wish to seem to come into opposition to the group assembled in Washington to protest against the Senate bill. The Board of Temperance, Prohibition, and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Washington, of which Bishop McDowell is president, is not concerned as an organization with the cruiser bill pro or con.

Senator HALE, Republican, of Maine, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee and in charge of the cruiser bill, is being deluged with letters and telegrams from all over the country advocating passage of the measure. Women are predominant among his correspondents. Senator HALE is particularly interested in a letter from Salt Lake City, the home bailiwick of Senator KING, Democrat, of Utah, leader of the Senate opposition to the cruiser bill. The letter comes from Mrs. Stephen Abbot, a prominent Utah woman, and reads as follows:

"If the indorsement of the administration's Navy bill by the women of the country does not equal in volume and in force of rhetoric the protest against it which is addressed to Senators, it is not because of a lesser intensity of feeling on the part of the approving women. We average, right-minded, home-loving Americans take certain things for granted, the right of self-defense among them.

"It would be the most flagrant and cruel miscarriage of justice if the organized activities of professional propagandists and their facile converts were permitted to obscure the fact that the less vocal majority of America's wives and mothers are back of the cruiser bill, heart and soul.

"We, in this city of the intermountain region, have been in a position to observe the way in which the machinery works in at least one city—and we know. We count on you men of intelligence and power to secure for us the defense that is necessary if we as a Nation are to fulfill our destiny." (Copyright, 1929.)

CONTROL OF AIRCRAFT FOR COAST DEFENSE

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, last May the Senate passed Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 11, providing for the appointment of a joint committee of Congress, to consist of five Senators and five Members of the House of Representatives, to make a full investigation of the problem of the control of aircraft for sea-coast defense. The resolution was reported favorably from both the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs and passed the Senate. The House of Representatives has had it since then, but the resolution has not been reported from the committee and appears to be lying dormant in the committee of the House to which it was referred.

In view of existing evidences of incomplete reconciliation of the views of the Army and Navy on coast defense, and especially of the application of aircraft thereto, which are numerous, it seems to me that something ought to be done in this important matter.

The authorities of the Army and Navy differ as to whether it is necessary or not, but as a matter of fact Ford Island, in Pearl Harbor, is an outstanding example of the fact that the Army and Navy can not agree on matters of this nature. It has been a live question for eight years, and I do not see that we are one bit nearer to a solution of it now than we were 30 months ago, or, for that matter, than we were four years before that. Neither service manifests the slightest intention of withdrawing from Ford Island, and a congestion already distinctly embarrassing is bound to become intolerable and dangerous.

What would happen in the event of war in the Pacific fairly baffles the imagination. I will not argue at this moment the point of which service has the strongest claim to Ford Island, but it does seem to me that there acts upon both parties a sentiment, whether conscious or subconscious, that to withdraw would be a confession of weakness and a surrender to the other service of certain functions in coast defense not now distinctly allocated.

A somewhat similar condition exists at North Island, San Diego, where the overcrowding is already so bad that the Navy has had to lease two outside fields for flying purposes, even though it has been unable to erect any buildings on them.

The pamphlet entitled "Joint Action of the Army and Navy," which is the official text on the subject, prepared by the joint board and approved by the Secretary of War and by the Secretary of the Navy, sets it forth that a function of the air component of the Army is—air operations in connection with the local defense of cities, important harbors, or other fixed installations in United States territory.

A function of the air component of the Navy correspondingly is—air operations in support of local naval defense forces operating for the protection * * * of coastal zones against attacks by hostile submarines and surface raiders.

Who, Mr. President, is to draw the specific and sharp line between those two functions as applied, for example, to the particular case of Hawaii or the Panama Canal Zone?

At another point in the same pamphlet it is stated that "In operations against enemy forces approaching the coast on, under, or over the sea paramount interest will be initially vested in the Navy," while "when an attack upon a specific part of the coast becomes actually threatened, Army interests assume the greater importance." It is a matter of interest to speculate upon the precise point in the approach of either a raiding battle cruiser or a raiding aircraft carrier to the Hawaiian coast or to the Canal Zone, at which it would cease to be an "enemy force approaching the coast" and would "actually threaten an attack upon a specific part of the coast," and at which the command of the joint air components engaged in repelling the onslaught would pass from the Navy to the Army. Things happen too rapidly in the air to permit any misunderstanding on such a vital point as the manner of coordination or the location of the command in the middle of a battle.

It is very true that differences of opinion over the nature of the aircraft to be purchased in the immediate future have been reconciled. The Army members of the aeronautical board registered strong objection a couple of years ago to the purchase by the Navy of torpedo planes for Hawaii or the Canal Zone on the ground that their functions duplicated those of the Army bombers. I understand that the Army members of the joint board have withdrawn that objection. It is, of course, always possible to secure an agreement on the line that neither service will object to the other getting anything that it wants. Agreement on that general principle might avoid any open break or manifestation of difference of opinion, but I can not consider it as a satisfactory means of avoiding overlapping and duplication or as conducive in the highest degree to economy in the national defense organization. I understand that an exhaustive study of coast defense in detail has recently been prepared by the joint board as a confidential supplement to the pamphlet to which I have referred, but it gives only very limited attention to the employment of aircraft, and I have been assured that it does nothing to clarify the means of coordination or the line of division between the two services. I can not but feel that much more progress should be made in that direction and that it will be made to the limit only if some neutral party—either the President himself or the joint committee which the Senate has asked for but as to which the House of Representatives has taken no action as yet—should take a hand. I very sincerely hope that the House will act and that a joint committee of the two Houses may decide where authority over the aerial coast defense shall lie and who shall be responsible for it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, relative to the matter to which the Senator from Connecticut has just called the attention of the Senate, I wish to say that upon numerous occasions the attention of Congress has been called to the conflict between the Navy and the Army and the coastal defense organization. General Mitchell has repeatedly, in arguments which I think have not been answered, urged the establishment of one department of national defense, with assistant secretaries—one for the Army, one for the Navy, and one for aeronautics.

I have introduced a bill in several Congresses providing for a department of national defense. With these quarrels and contentions, these overlappings, and this uncertainty as to jurisdiction in these departments, it is obvious that there should be one department of national defense, which could and would coordinate all activities essential to and imperative for the defense of our country. I hope that the committee which has the bill before it will take into consideration the measure, particularly in view of the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut.

MONOPOLY IN MANUFACTURE OF RADIO APPARATUS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, yesterday a resolution was offered in the Senate calling on the Federal Trade Commission to transmit to the Attorney General the evidence taken in the recent complaint charging an existing trust in the manufacture and sale of radio devices. There is a brief article in the New York Times of to-day, containing a statement made by the vice president of the Radio Corporation, which I think is so important that it should be included in the RECORD. I ask that, in connection with these brief remarks, that this article may be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

ATTEMPT TO REOPEN "RADIO TRUST" CASE—SENATOR DILL AND REPRESENTATIVE DAVIS OFFER RESOLUTIONS CALLING ON THE ATTORNEY GENERAL—SEEK TRADE BOARD RECORD—RADIO CORPORATION COUNSEL STATES DISMISSAL OF COMPLAINT WAS FOR LACK OF EVIDENCE ONLY

WASHINGTON, January 11.—Senator DILL, Democrat, of Washington, and Representative DAVIS, Democrat, of Tennessee, to-day introduced concurrent resolutions calling on the Federal Trade Commission to transmit to the Attorney General the evidence it took under the recent complaint charging the existence of a monopoly in radio, and requesting the Attorney General "to consider and take such action as may be warranted."

The commission made the investigation and on January 28, 1924, issued a formal complaint against the Radio Corporation of America, the General Electric Co., and others, but under a recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, according to the resolution, decided that it had no jurisdiction over the alleged violations of the antitrust laws.

The resolution requests the Attorney General "to have immediate consideration given to the evidence so presented and to have the Department of Justice take such action on the charges of violation of the antitrust laws of the United States as such evidence and information may warrant and to report to Congress as soon as convenient his decision and action in the premises."

DISPUTES RESOLUTION IN FACTS

Manton Davis, vice president and general counsel of the Radio Corporation of America, when informed to-night of the introduction of the resolutions, made the following statement:

"An implication of the fact entirely erroneous is the foundation and the basis of the resolution introduced to-day by Senator DILL in the Senate and by Representative DAVIS in the House.

"The resolution implies that the Federal Trade Commission on December 19, 1928, dismissed the proceeding then pending against the General Electric Co., the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., the Radio Corporation of America, and others, on the ground that the Federal Trade Commission had no jurisdiction of the matters complained of.

"The proceedings before the Federal Trade Commission and the order of dismissal entered by it support no such conclusion. The proceeding was dismissed by the concurrence of four of the commissioners, one of whom announced that he concurred 'for the reason that the commission was without jurisdiction to enter an effective order.'

"The fact that the three other commissioners concurring found no occasion to qualify the basis for their concurrence conclusively indicates that the respondents' motion to dismiss 'because of lack of sufficient proof,' as well as for lack of jurisdiction, had been sustained.

COMPANIES GAVE NO TESTIMONY

"The complaint was filed January 24, 1924, and thereafter the commission for four years took testimony all over the United States. The testimony covered 16,967 pages, and was finally concluded in 1928.

"Shortly after the commission had concluded its voluminous testimony, the corporations concerned, on the record which the commission itself had made, and without taking any testimony on their own behalf, set the case down for a hearing on the ground that the evidence taken did not support the complaint and on the further ground that the commission was without jurisdiction.

"Voluminous briefs were filed, and a full argument was had. More than five-sixths of the briefs and arguments were directed at the issue of the failure of the commission's proof.

"After a deliberate consideration of briefs and argument, the commission dismissed the complaint without calling on the corporations concerned to produce any testimony.

"The record can not support any other conclusion than that after four years of earnest effort and 17,000 pages of testimony the Federal Trade Commission could not find sufficient evidence to justify conclusions that the corporations concerned had violated the laws of the United States relating to trusts, monopolies, and unfair competition."

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

The Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty for the renunciation of war transmitted to the Senate for ratification by the President of the United States December 4, 1928, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations December 19, 1928.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, with unfeigned respect for the abilities and patriotic motives of Senators who have expressed their views in opposition to the ratification of the pending treaty, I venture my opinion that they have not answered effectively or satisfactorily the masterly presentation of the treaty made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Having said that, perhaps I ought to remain silent; but I have certain views, I have reached certain conclusions which, by permission of the Senate, I beg briefly to state, and, to the end that I may not unduly trespass upon the attention of the Senate, I shall be under additional obligations if I am not drawn into colloquy with different Senators.

Mr. President, before expressing my own I digress to acknowledge the masterly presentation of his views by the eloquent Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I fear his great love for America has caused him to see danger where none exists; that in his solicitude for the future of our country he momentarily forgets certain ineradicable rights of an independent sovereign nation which no treaty can forfeit or destroy. His great love, I think, has misled his judgment.

It is to be regretted, Mr. President, that he is so soon to retire from the Chamber where he has stood for so many years the brave and unafraid champion of his country, ever jealous of her honor, ever watchful over her safety. Differed we have, differ we may, but I do myself the pleasure now and here of saying that he will retire with my highest regard and the admiration of his countrymen.

In submitting this proposed treaty for our consideration the President of the United States said:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification of the treaty, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war which was signed in Paris on August 27, 1928, by the United States, Germany, Belgium, France, Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, the Irish Free State, India, Italy, Japan, Poland, and Czechoslovakia. Since the date of signature 44 other powers have formally communicated to the Government of the United States the information that they have taken the necessary steps to adhere to the treaty or that they intend so to do.

At the present time, therefore, this new movement for world peace has been indorsed by no fewer than 59 of the 64 independent nations of the world entitled to participate in the present treaty. The proposal is receiving consideration in each of the five states whose formal approval has not yet been received. I have every reason to believe that they are in sympathy with this effort to promote peace, and no reason to believe that any of them will refuse in due course to become a party to the treaty.

And the President further took the liberty, within his constitutional duty, to add:

The fact that I approve of the treaty is well known. I hope that it may come into force with the least possible delay, and I should be pleased if the Senate would take such action during the present session as to enable the United States to ratify the treaty before the expiration of my term of office.

Accompanying the treaty as it was submitted to us was a communication from our Secretary of State, a part of which I wish to read, to go into the RECORD of this day's proceedings:

The treaty for the renunciation of war is brief and simple; its terms are practically identical with the terms of the treaty originally proposed by M. Briand. It contains no reservations or exceptions, and there are no collateral understandings which detract from its effectiveness or qualify its high purpose. It records the determination of the participating powers to abolish war as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another, and to seek only by pacific means the settlement of any disputes that may arise among them. It will come into force among the 15 original signatories as soon as all their ratifications have been deposited in Washington, and thereafter it will take effect immediately in respect of each adhering power.

Then follow the names of the several many separate independent countries referred to by the President, which I will ask to have carried into the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, to the end that I may express my views within a limited time, and permit others to address the Senate if so disposed, I shall state conclusions which may appear somewhat dogmatic. I have adopted that method of expressing my views in order to save the time of the Senate and my own.

We are called upon to advise and consent to entering into a treaty, not with one but with many nations—indeed, with all of the sovereign nations of the world.

The proposed treaty comes to us with the approval of the calm President and the scholarly Secretary of State. Mindful of our constitutional duty to give or to withhold our advice and consent to entering into this multilateral treaty we should thoughtfully, without pride of opinion perhaps hastily formed, consider the legal meaning and the probable and possible effect of this treaty on our country; not, of course, failing to consider its probable and possible effect on other nations and the cause of enlightened civilization.

First, what is a treaty, and what are the rules for its interpretation?

A treaty is an agreement, between two or more nations, to do or to refrain from doing specified things. If written, it is to be construed and interpreted as written agreements between individual persons are construed and interpreted. In the one case as in the other, in the treaty or the individual agreement, the duties and obligations of the parties signatory are stated, and presumed to be stated. Neither party may look beyond the written agreement for duties or obligations not found therein. In other words, the written agreement sets forth the duties and obligations of the contracting parties.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SACKETT in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask the Senator how, if that is so, the wording of this pact could be construed otherwise than as including defensive as well as offensive war?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall endeavor to answer that question, Mr. President, before I shall have finished. I have made a statement to the effect that a treaty is to be construed or interpreted by the same rules that obtain and control in the interpretation or the construction of agreements.

Mr. BRUCE. That is to say, words must be construed according to their natural import.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I fully agree; if in the case of a private or individual contract it be permissible to go outside the four corners of the instrument for the purpose of determining the meaning of words and to get at the true intent and meaning of the parties signatory to the agreement, under certain conditions that excursion may be made in the case of a treaty.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is referring now to the ordinary rule of construction of ambiguous terms, is he not? Is that what he has in mind?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly. If the language is plain, understandable, clear, and distinct, there is no occasion to go outside the terms of the agreement.

Mr. GEORGE. Does not the Senator recognize this rule, equally as well established as the rule applicable in this case—that where one party to the agreement has in mind a specific meaning of his own language known to the other party, and the other party acquiesces in the meaning which he places upon his language, that does become the rule of construction?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. As between those two parties, I make no doubt that we would be held to have understood, but not necessarily to have acquiesced in, the meaning attributed to the language.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California further yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. Then, as I understand the Senator, he thinks—to use our technical professional phrase—that there is latent ambiguity in this pact?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No, indeed; I do not.

Mr. BRUCE. Then how does the Senator justify the idea that we can depart from the wording?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I answered a question put to me touching the proper interpretation of a written instrument.

Mr. BRUCE. I will not press the question at this time.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have not by any means admitted that there is any necessity to go outside of the treaty as written; but, to pursue that thought for just a moment, and then to recur to the line of argument that I desire to follow, if it be permissible to go outside the four corners of this treaty, we may go outside of it; and when I come to that point I shall maintain, as I do immediately now, that we may go outside of it for the purpose of holding, should the question ever arise, that the Monroe doctrine is in our minds, and that we have not by any means renounced it or agreed that it shall not be invoked should we think it threatened.

I was about to say that I assume that Senators are familiar with these general rules for the interpretation of written contracts, and hence that it is not necessary to cite authorities to sustain them. But it has been suggested that treaties are to be given "liberal interpretations," and by that suggestion it appears to be thought that it is permissible to read into a treaty moral and legal obligations concerning which the minds of the signatory powers never met; in a word, to add to or take from the obligations of the treaty as expressed by plain, unambiguous, and intelligible written words or language.

Misled by this erroneous notion, it seems to be feared that by entering into this proposed agreement, this treaty, we shall be held or bound to do, or to refrain from doing, something not specifically set out in the written agreement.

With proper respect, I repeat myself when I say that to entertain such a notion, or to be misled by such a fear, is utterly without authority or foundation. But lest my statement, more or less dogmatic, be considered unsupported, it may be well to cite a few of the authoritative cases, wherein the true and universally recognized rule for interpreting treaties is stated, and stated so plainly that I think we can all understand.

In the case of the United States v. Arredondo (6 Peters 689) the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Justice Baldwin, we find the following language:

> The laws under which we now adjudicate on the rights embraced in the treaty and its instructions authorize and direct us to do it judicially and give its judicial meaning and interpretation as a contract, on the principles of justice and the rules of equity.

The case of the United States v. Reynes (9 Howard 127) involved the construction of the treaty of St. Ildefonso between Spain and France in connection with the treaty of Paris between France and the United States. The Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Daniel, said:

> In the construction of treaties the same rules which govern other compacts properly apply.

In the case of the United States v. D'Auterive et al. (10 Howard 609), involving the construction of the treaties of St. Ildefonso and of Paris, mentioned in the preceding case, the Supreme Court says:

> The compacts between governments or nations, like those between individuals, should be interpreted according to the natural, fair, and received acceptation of the terms in which they are expressed.

The case of Tucker v. Alexandroff (183 U. S. 424) involved a construction of a treaty with Russia as it affected deserting seamen.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. When the Senator quotes these several decisions is he not going on the theory that all cases which he supposes are going to arise will be brought about between American citizens among themselves or American citizens against their own Government, so that the ultimate decision will land in the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No, Senator; far from it. Assume a controversy with another nation, and assume arbitration, and assume that the question should arise as to the proper interpretation of this treaty. I am assuming that our representative in presenting our case would urge the rules which our Supreme Court has stated are the proper rules for the interpretation of a contract or a treaty.

Mr. BAYARD. In other words, the cases would be cited as authorities before whatever tribunal we might get, individually, or as a nation?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely.

Mr. BAYARD. How does the Senator reconcile that statement with the deliberate reservation, made by the English through Sir Austen Chamberlain, to this very treaty? In other words, would not the English people set up a different doctrine than the doctrine now being set up by the Senator from California?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is conceivable that they might.

Mr. BAYARD. Inasmuch as they made the reservation in the note of May 19, 1928, and the further note of July 18, 1928, where Sir Austen Chamberlain insisted upon the repetition of the reservation, why would not England then be justified in going before the tribunal before which it may be seeking redress and setting up this reservation, which would be totally different and totally distinct from the general line of law laid down by the Senator from California?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Undoubtedly the representative of Great Britain in such a supposed case would urge that they might depart from the language of the treaty and consider the reservation referred to. I have never doubted that. And at this point I want to say that Sir Austen Chamberlain has, in language perfectly well understood, conceded that we have made a like reservation in respect of the one great doctrine which seems to concern some Members of the Senate, lest we have abandoned it or lest we shall abandon it.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it not a matter of fact that Secretary Kellogg, during all these negotiations, at least the written ones, denies explicitly that he has ever set up the Monroe doctrine in reply to the intimation of Sir Austen Chamberlain?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not know that he has in terms said he has not set up that doctrine, and at this moment, in expressing my views, I am not concerned with whether he did or not. I am now suggesting that, in the first instance, a treaty is to be interpreted, is to be considered, as a written agreement between two individuals. If there be rules which permit departure from the language of an agreement between private individuals, if there be rules which permit a departure from the language of a treaty, be it so; I will approach that proposition in a moment. But while I may not be able to satisfy the Senator, I think I am sound in my view.

Mr. BAYARD. Up to this time in the development of the Senator's argument the position he has taken is that the treaty must be interpreted within its four corners.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. This may be an unfair question, but after having developed that argument and satisfied himself as to its soundness, does the Senator thereafter intend to go upon the record as published and put forth by Secretary Kellogg, and on that record insist that the United States is inhibited by Secretary Kellogg's record from going into any anterior operations to interpret the treaty.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not take that position.

Mr. BAYARD. And will not take it?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If alive, I shall not take it.

Mr. BAYARD. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall speak of what I think is an inherent right of a sovereign nation, which right is the right of self-defense, and that the Monroe doctrine is an integral part of that right. I shall go further, and I say now that there is not an intelligent public man in the world who does not know of that doctrine, does not know our views concerning it, who does not know that we have many times invoked it, and I imagine that all are well satisfied that we shall again invoke it if necessity for so doing ever arises.

In the case I just mentioned—Tucker against Alexandroff—the opinion of the Supreme Court was rendered by Mr. Justice Brown. Among other things he said:

> Where the signatory powers have themselves fixed the terms upon which deserting seamen shall be surrendered, we have no right to enlarge those powers upon the principles of comity so as to embrace cases not contemplated by the treaty. Upon general principles applicable to the construction of written instruments, the enumeration of certain powers with respect to a particular subject matter is a negation of all other analogous powers with respect to the same subject matter. (Ex parte McCardle, 7 Wall. 506; Endlich on Stats., secs. 397, 400.) As observed by Lord Denham in Aspdin v. Austin (5 Ad. & El. (N. S.) 671, 684), "Where parties have entered into written engagements with express stipulations, it is manifestly not desirable to extend them by any implications; the presumption is that, having expressed some, they have expressed all the conditions by which they intend to be bound under that instrument." The rule is curtly stated in the familiar legal maxim, expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

And the learned jurist proceeds:

> As treaties are solemn engagements entered into between independent nations for the common advancement of their interests and the interests of civilization, and as their main object is not only to avoid war and secure a lasting and perpetual peace, but to promote a friendly feeling between the people of the two countries, they should be interpreted in that broad and liberal spirit which is calculated to make for the existence of a perpetual amity, so far as it can be done without the sacrifice of individual rights of those principles of personal liberty which lie at the foundation of our jurisprudence. It is said by Chancellor Kent in his Commentaries (vol. 1, p. 174): "Treaties of every kind are to receive a fair and liberal interpretation according to the intention of the contracting parties, and are to be kept with the most scrupulous good faith. Their meaning is to be ascertained by the same rules of construction and course of reasoning which we apply to the interpretation of private contracts.

Does anyone in the Senate or elsewhere question the profound learning of Chancellor Kent? Let me read again what this distinguished American jurist said, pausing to remark that I prefer to take the views of Chancellor Kent than even the views of Grotius, the Dutch jurist, dead over a quarter of a century ago, or Vattel, the Swiss jurist, dead, I think, over 160 years ago. Great men as they were, I need not turn to their musty tomes in order to learn how to interpret a treaty in view of the expressions given to me by the great American jurist, Chancellor Kent. I repeat, he said:

> Treaties of every kind are to receive a fair and liberal interpretation according to the intention of the contracting parties and are to be kept with the most scrupulous good faith. Their meaning is to be ascertained by the same rules of construction and course of reasoning which we apply to the interpretation of private contracts.

In 38 Cyclopedia of Law, at pages 969 and 970, Mr. Justice Day, of our Supreme Court, stated the rule in these words:

> If the terms of the treaty are clear and unambiguous the courts must recognize and enforce it as written, notwithstanding the language of the treaty is inconsistent with the correspondence which preceded it; but if the treaty is open to construction they should endeavor to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the parties, and in so doing will adopt the same general rules which are applicable in the construction of statutes, contracts, and written instruments generally, and particularly those applicable in the construction of contracts between individuals.

These are but a few of the great number of well-considered cases in which the rule for the interpretation or construction of treaties is clearly stated. And, permit me to add, no court in all Christendom stands higher in the opinion of jurists and statesmen than the Supreme Court of the United States.

I respectfully submit to the Senate that this rule for the interpretation of a treaty should be kept steadily in mind as we turn to consider the proposed treaty now before us. Turning to that instrument, we see that high contracting parties—sovereign nations—propose to enter into the following agreement with one another and with us, the United States of America:

> The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

I may be repeating myself, but it appears to me, and has appeared from the beginning of the discussion, that not enough emphasis has been placed upon the words or the language of article 1. It is a condemnation of war for the solution of "international controversies." It is a renunciation of war as "an instrument of national policy" in the relations of nations with one another.

> The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts, of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them shall never be sought except by pacific means.

I digress to remark that I agree with the Senator from Idaho that article 2 is perhaps the more vital of these two articles; but it should be added that by article 1 the powers are mutually bound by their most solemn declarations, to ignore or violate which by any of them would brand it with eternal infamy.

What are the reasons, what the hopes, that induce these high contracting parties, including the United States of America, to propose this agreement, this multilateral treaty?

These reasons, these hopes, are thus plainly and clearly expressed in the preamble to the treaty, in a sense forming a part of it. Listen:

> Deeply sensible of their solemn duty to promote the welfare of mankind.
> Persuaded that the time has come when a frank renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy should be made to the end that the peaceful and friendly relations now existing between their peoples may be perpetuated.

Note the strong and perfect language in our tongue—first "deeply sensible," then "persuaded," then "convinced"—

> Convinced that all changes in their relations with one another should be sought only by pacific means and be the result of a peaceful and orderly process, and that any signatory power which shall hereafter seek to promote its national interests by resort to war should be denied the benefits furnished by this treaty.
> Hopeful that, encouraged by their example, all the other nations of the world will join in this humane endeavor and by adhering to the present treaty as soon as it comes into force bring their peoples within the scope of its beneficent provisions, thus uniting the civilized nations of the world in a common renunciation of war as an instrument of their national policy.

That is the preamble.

Mr. President, an English statesman not partial to America paid this eloquent encomium on our Declaration of Independence:

It should be hung up in the nursery of every king and emblazoned on the portico of every royal palace.

I venture to add that the preamble to this treaty is worthy of as high a tribute as Macaulay paid to our charter of freedom. This preamble should be hung up in the nursery of every king and emblazoned on the portico of every royal palace. Nay, more, it should be hung up in every legislative body and executive mansion of every nation of the earth. It should be impressed upon the heart and conscience of the world, and if, as I hope it will be, it is so impressed, then the peace now existing among the nations of the earth may be perpetuated.

And, rapping on the breast of every Senator, why should we hesitate to enter into this agreement? Does any sane man think that the United States would be injured by such an instrument or such agreement? Note the question I put:

Does anyone think we would be injured by entering into this agreement?

Should we not "condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies"?

Should we not renounce war "as an instrument of national policy in our relations" with all other nations?

Should we not seek through or by pacific means the "solution or settlement of all disputes or conflicts" which may arise between us and other nations?

Do we imperil our independence or jeopardize our sovereignty by entering into this treaty? I answer "No."

Do we surrender any inherent right as a sovereign nation? I answer "No."

Do we ignore—and I respectfully claim the attention of Senators to this question—the injunction of Washington, who in 1793 warned America to keep out of Europe? I answer "No." Against the unwise clamor of the hour Washington stood as firm as the monument to his memory and warned America to keep out of Europe, out of enangling alliances with European powers. And thus far, thank God, we have heeded the advice of the Father of our Country.

Does anybody think, I repeat, that by entering into this agreement we are abandoning or forgetting the injunction of Washington? I respectfully say we are not, and I add that if I thought we were I should not vote for the ratification of this treaty.

Do we abandon the doctrine of Monroe, who in 1823, warned Europe to keep out of America—for that was the sum and substance of that famous message to the Congress? I answer "No."

In the hope that these two thoughts, as I express them, may live beyond the hour of their utterance I repeat that in 1793 George Washington warned America to keep out of Europe and in 1823 James Monroe warned Europe to keep out of America. Does anybody think that we are abandoning the doctrine of Monroe? Apparently some have a fear that we are. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has pointed out, I think in manner unanswerable, that we are not abandoning that American doctrine. I venture to add that there is not a statesman or a public man in the world in any of the continents who does not understand our views in respect of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think that the Senator ought to qualify his last statement, if he will pardon the suggestion. I think if the Senator means that the Monroe doctrine is as it was interpreted by the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], perhaps it is true that the statesmen of the world understand that to be the Monroe doctrine. That is a very sound exposition of that doctrine; but the Senator must know that since the days of Mr. Roosevelt, under his régime, under Mr. McKinley's interpretation of the Monroe doctrine, and under the interpretation of others, there has been a very radical departure from that early safe and sound doctrine.

Now, many claim that under the Monroe doctrine the United States may go into Latin America, into any of the Republics there, when their government does not quite suit our esthetic taste, and reform and change it, control elections, and send marines there; that if debts are not paid—that is to say, if it is determined that some particular country in Latin America has not paid its debts to some American citizen or some European citizen—the United States may go in and take charge of the government or coerce it into the payment of the obligation. In other words, the Monroe doctrine has been so perverted by the jingoists in the United States that a majority of the people of the United States do not know what the Monroe doctrine is, and the overwhelming majority of the people of the world do not know what the Monroe doctrine is.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Replying in a word, the going into Nicaragua, or into any other American state to enforce supposed rights of ours is not to be defended by invoking the doctrine of Monroe; such suggested action on our part would rest upon altogether different principles. We might or we might not be justified; but such action does not fall within the principle of the Monroe doctrine, the cardinal essence of which was a warning to European nations to keep out of America.

Do we become entangled by alliances that may imperil our peace and safety by entering into this treaty? No, Mr. President. If, then, we are not ignoring the injunction of Washington, if we are not abandoning the doctrine of Monroe, if we are not entangling ourselves with any nation on earth, imperiling, as it might, our peace or our safety, why do we hesitate; why do we fear to enter into such an agreement?

Why should any nation hesitate to lay aside the sword and take up the pen? Are we afraid to sit at the council table and endeavor to settle disputes that may arise between us and another nation?

Already we have made progress toward the solution and settlement of international disputes by pacific means, by arbitration treaties. We have sought and found solution and settlement of international disputes that threaten war by conciliation treaties. We shall seek to find solution and settlement of all national disputes that may arise between us and other nations which, if not settled by pacific means, may ultimately lead to war.

Many arbitration treaties and conciliation treaties have been entered into by us. Does anyone think that by so doing we have renounced or abandoned the doctrine of Washington, the doctrine of Monroe? Does anybody think that we have entangled ourselves or imperiled our safety by entering into such treaties, whether they be arbitration or conciliation treaties? Their design is to settle disputes by or through peaceful means rather than by the sword.

Does anyone think that we have entered into any entangling alliances by agreeing to submit justiciable questions to an agreed impartial tribunal? Is there a nation on earth to-day—a civilized nation, and I, of course, am happy to believe that all the parties signatory to the treaty are severally civilized nations—does any one of them, does any nation, prefer a trial by battle to a trial by law? Does any one of the nations of the earth to-day think that the council chamber is less safe than is the battle field? Does any nation think that justice is more secure in the arena than in the forum?

But the fear is expressed that by entering into this treaty we shall surrender a vital right of an independent and sovereign nation—the right of self-defense. Such a fear is utterly groundless, as a moment's reflection will make manifest. If this treaty shall be observed, there will be no occasion or necessity to invoke the right of self-defense. If one or more signatory nations breaks this treaty, we are eo instanti released from all its obligations; as to that or those nations the treaty is at an end and we are at liberty to resort to such means and adopt such policy, according to the exigencies of the time, as we shall deem necessary for our safety and happiness.

It has appeared to me that learned Senators in the zeal of debate, in gladiatorial contest, have lost sight of the proposition that if this treaty shall be observed, as we hope it will be, there will be no occasion to invoke the right of self-defense, and that if it be broken, then we are released from it and may adopt such means as we may deem necessary for our safety and for our protection. If one of the signatory nations should have a dispute with us, and, declining to seek its solution by pacific means, should invade our territory or seize our property or violate the rights of our citizens at home or abroad, that would be a flagrant breach of the treaty and would relieve us from all its obligations; we would be free to repel the invader and punish the violator and pursue such military or naval course within our power as seemed to us necessary. In a word, in resorting to force to redress the wrong done to our Nation or its citizens, we would be exercising an inherent inalienable right—the universal right of self-defense. It requires no exchange of notes between us and other nations; it requires no reservation by us to give such interpretation to this written instrument.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. If that position of the Senator is correct, then his opinion differs from that of Sir Austen Chamberlain, for he did give interpretations and reservations in the note prepared by him. Does the Senator take the position that it is his judgment that is going to prevail or is it the judgment of Sir Austen Chamberlain or other statesmen of the British Empire in the future that is going to prevail in connection with the interpretation of the British note?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I made brief reference to that proposition a moment ago. Whatever moved Secretary Chamberlain, whatever idea he had, I gather from the language; but I am for the moment not particularly concerned with his reservations, if they are reservations; I am concerned as to whether it is necessary for us to make a reservation; and I am attempting to point out why I think that without express reservation added to this instrument or by way of correspondence it is not necessary for us to reserve the right of self-defense, including an assertion of the Monroe doctrine. That is my thought and my contention.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. But the fact is that the opinion of Sir Austen Chamberlain and the opinion of the distinguished Senator from California differ. Sir Austen Chamberlain thought it was necessary to reserve such rights as he conceived to be the rights of the British Empire. Does the Senator from California place his most valuable opinion over and above that of Sir Austen Chamberlain as against the conception that Sir Austen Chamberlain had of the treaty?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am not required to place my opinion over and above or against his; not at all. His view as expressed does not affect my interpretation of this agreement. If he deemed it necessary, be it so. I am not saying that it was necessary for him to do so; but he appeared to think it was, and let it go at that. I am not, however, bowing to or crawling on my hands and knees before Sir Austen Chamberlain, nor am I taking his view as conclusive of the interpretation of this instrument.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask just another question. Then, I assume the Senator's position to be that Sir Austen Chamberlain had a perfect right to initiate the note of May 19, to which reference has been made, containing paragraph 10 and paragraph 4; that he had a right to initiate that note and make adherence to the treaty conditioned upon that note. Does the Senator now contend that Sir Austen Chamberlain was in error? If he does so contend, whose opinion will prevail when the contingency shall arise, when the conflict is brought to issue, as to what Great Britain meant? If he contends that America will determine that——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is a very complex question; but proceed, Senator.

Mr. BLAINE. Well, I will divide my question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I answer, mine will prevail, then, if you wish to put it up between me and Sir Austen Chamberlain. Mine will prevail. I think that is an answer, because mine is the American people's.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator's position is that Sir Austen Chamberlain did not know what he was talking about?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, yes; he was fairly well aware of what he was talking about.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, I ask the Senator, does he now admit that Sir Austen Chamberlain was correct in making an interpretation or reservation of this treaty?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am making no admissions. It is not necessary to make admissions. I am trying to speak for this treaty and for our country. Let Sir Austen speak for his own.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, will the Senator support a reservation to put into effect the very conclusion to which he has come, that there shall be no implication of any admission as to what is contained in any of the notes that are not in the text of the treaty?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is not necessary to put any reservation or interpretation into a treaty which is so plain on its very face. I see no necessity for it.

Mr. BLAINE. But France saw necessity. Great Britain saw necessity. Some 8 or 10 nations saw necessity.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Let us not pursue this colloquy forever. I am aware of what other nations have said.

Mr. BLAINE. That necessity may prevail with them; and the opinion of the Senator from California, valuable as it is, can not prevail against that which we admit by way of estoppel in ratifying this treaty without some reference to those notes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I asked Senators not to draw me into colloquy. I can stand here all day and answer, but I know the Senator does not mean to divert me from the main line of my thoughts.

Mr. BLAINE. I beg the pardon of the Senator, and would not have engaged in the colloquy had he not permitted me to do so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand that, but I merely want to say this:

Every so-called reservation referred to as attempted to be placed on this treaty by the several nations really amounted to a reservation of the right of self-defense. I do not now pause to read these several so-called reservations; but, when analyzed, it will be seen that they involve or refer to the inherent right of self-defense. Now, it has been pointed out that that thought was running through the mind of Sir Austen Chamberlain. It probably was running through the minds of others. We are saying, I am venturing to say, that it is not at all necessary under this treaty to say specifically that we have and that we reserve the inherent right of self-defense. No law gave man the right of self-defense. It is spoken of as a natural right, an inherent right. In a reverent spirit I say, it is a right bestowed upon man by God Himself—the inherent right, the natural right of self-defense.

I am contending that a nation has the natural right of self-defense. In this case, if this treaty is observed, there never will be necessity for the assertion of the right of self-defense, because controversies will be settled by pacific means. It will not be necessary for us to draw the sword. That is my view, perhaps poorly expressed.

Mr. BLAINE. I will not interrupt the Senator if he will not permit a question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield to the Senator for a question, if it throws any light upon the discussion.

Mr. BLAINE. One is, the right of self-defense can be suspended, can it not, by the individual or the nation?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No, Mr. President; I do not think that any legislative body can surrender the right of self-defense inherent in a people.

Mr. BLAINE. An individual may suspend that right as to himself, may he not?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not think he can.

Mr. BLAINE. An individual can not do it? The inherent thing, the God-given thing within him, then, impels him to take life?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, no, no, no!

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator knows from his experience that many a man has held a six-shooter pointed at some one he thought was his assailant, and finally decided that he would retreat to the wall. He retreated to the wall and was still assailed. He permitted that assailant to shoot him down. He suspended the right of self-defense. A nation may suspend its right of self-defense through the inaction of its elected officials, may it not?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. But could this body, could we, surrender the right of this Nation to defend itself? Answer me that.

Mr. BLAINE. Could not this body refuse to make any appropriation whatever for the operation of a single implement of death and thereby suspend the right of self-defense?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No, no, no!

Mr. BLAINE. What are you going to do, then? Could the President go out and fight the assailant with clubs and sticks and stones such as he might gather upon the roadside?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Senator ought not to be disturbed by those passing questions. We propose, I hope, to enter into this treaty committing our Nation to the settlement of her controversies by peaceful means; but I am also hopeful that we shall be in a position to defend ourselves should any of these signatory nations violate this treaty. That is so simple that I am sure the Senator grasps my meaning.

Mr. BLAINE. Has not that been the attitude of America and all countries, or, at least, they assert it in their notes that they have always adhered to the doctrine that war is not a part of their national policy?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. BLAINE. That they have always resorted to pacific means to settle their controversies; but whenever there has been a great world cataclysm they have clothed their offensive in the holy terms of self-defense.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. BLAINE. That is admitted, and must be admitted, I think.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think I made that admission the other day; but I hastened to add, as I now say, that I think many nations have waged war as an instrument of national policy even though they may have claimed that it was in self-defense. But why should we be disturbed here, in this year of our Lord, with bloody records of the past? Why should not we—if not first at least in the forefront rank and file of time—why should not America be willing to look to the future, not forgetting, of course, the lessons of the past?

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator permit another question?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Another.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator take those views when the cruiser bill is before the Senate?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Indeed I shall.

Mr. BLAINE. And vote for the cruiser bill?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Indeed I shall.

Mr. BLAINE. A pledge of peace on the tongue, and the threat of a well-filled belt of ammunition about the waist.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, let me say right here, if it be of any consequence, that this Nation is committed to a policy of peace. I do not think I overstate it when I say that we are smitten with a love of peace. We are meditating no attack upon any nation. We are not conspiring against any nation. We do not covet the possessions of any nation. We are not in secret, in darkness, lying in wait to attack, invade, or overrun any nation on this earth; and I have in mind that our interests are as far-flung as those of Great Britain.

We listened yesterday to our eloquent colleague from Missouri [Mr. REED] as he drew a picture of the far-extended possessions of the British Empire. Ours are far extended. Yonder is Alaska. Beyond the Pacific lie the Philippines. Yonder is the paradise of the Pacific, the Hawaiian group. Yonder is Samoa, where we have interests; and there is the great Panama Canal Zone, over which we have jurisdiction. Yonder is Porto Rico, yonder the Virgin Islands, and trade and interest encompassing the earth.

We have great, far-extended interests. I favor this treaty, but I favor a navy. Why? Not lying in wait, not to attack, but as a deterrent, perhaps, to speak mildly, against any nation, great or small, European or Asiatic, that shall violate the treaty and resort to force as against the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, if the Senator will yield, I will ask him this question: From the suggestion the Senator has made we are, then, to construe that this treaty may be treated as a mere scrap of paper?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, no, no, no!

Mr. BLAINE. And, in fear of that, we must arm ourselves to the teeth.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am far from thinking it will be considered as a mere scrap of paper and hoping that it will not be so considered by any nation.

Mr. BLAINE. Just a noble gesture?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Well, it is a noble gesture, yes; a very noble gesture; but because treaties have been broken because treaties of peace have been broken, shall we never enter into more treaties of peace?

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; permit me to go ahead now a little while.

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Having wandered or been wooed far away from the path I intended to tread, by the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will return to the Monroe doctrine just for a moment.

Mr. BLAINE. I might suggest that the Senator is extremely enlightening.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have said—and the Senator from Wisconsin may think I am very dogmatic—that we do not abandon the Monroe doctrine by joining in this treaty. I repeat, that doctrine is embraced within and forms an integral part of the inherent right of self-defense; and I add that it is as much alive to-day as it was in 1823, when James Monroe announced it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, what is the Senator's objection to saying so specifically?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If I deemed it at all necessary I would have no objection; but I do not think it at all necessary, and I do not want to defer entering into this treaty. I do not wish to have it necessary to engage in further correspondence as between us and other countries. I believe it is reserved, and hence unnecessary to reserve it specifically.

For over a hundred years we have maintained that doctrine as we understood it, by insisting on its observance whenever we had cause to think it was threatened. Did we not assert and maintain it when England threatened to use force in settling her controversy with Venezuela?

I hold in my hand, Mr. President, an address delivered by a great American, a former President of the United States. You may not have walked under his political banner—I did not—but American history will bear witness that Grover Cleveland was a man who loved his country well, and was alert and unafraid to assert the rights of the United States. This address was delivered by former President Grover Cleveland after he had become a teacher in a great university. I will not do more than refer to it.

I assume that Senators are familiar with the controversy we had with Great Britain when Great Britain threatened by force to take certain territory from Venezuela. Grover Cleveland here gives us a résumé of the correspondence and the ending of that controversy, and Great Britain yielded to the doctrine of Monroe as bravely insisted upon by Grover Cleveland.

Does the Senator from Michigan, or does any Senator, forget how we enforced the Monroe doctrine when Germany undertook by force to coerce the same little, weak South American country, Venezuela, when the immortal Theodore Roosevelt was President of the United States? Did we assert the doctrine then; and what was the controversy? I assume that Senators are familiar with that controversy and hence I need not here take up the time of the Senate in going into the details.

We asserted that doctrine when it was thought, and there was evidence, that Germany, then powerful, was by force or threat to take rights away from Venezuela. I do not quote him, but it was in the press of the Nation that President Roosevelt said that if a German man-of-war went into those waters to enforce demands of Germany against Venezuela Admiral Dewey would be there to meet it—and Germany seemed to recall the Monroe doctrine; she sent no man-of-war to overcome and coerce our neighboring Republic.

Is there any Senator who forgets the resolution introduced by Senator Lodge, then chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and passed by the Senate in 1912? It may be said that the Lodge resolution was an enlargement, an expansion it might be termed, of the Monroe doctrine, although, as he pointed out, and as the Senate then understood—and I assume now understands—that resolution was supported by a different but recognized principle of government. When it was thought that an Asiatic country was seeking a naval base at Magdalena Bay, yonder on the west coast of the peninsula of California, Senator Lodge's resolution, which I may ask to have inserted in the RECORD, set forth that the establishment of that naval base by the foreign nation, if permitted by the Republic of Mexico, would be regarded, in effect, as an unfriendly act toward the United States.

While the Monroe doctrine, originally put forth by Monroe, had reference, of course, to European nations, the resolution of Senator Lodge, which the Senate passed, in a sense expanded that doctrine to apply to Asiatic nations. In any event, we have never at any time hesitated to invoke that doctrine, and every nation on earth is familiar with that doctrine.

Whatever may be said or thought to the contrary, while we were a little slow in moving because of our then unhappy domestic troubles—I refer, of course, to our unhappy Civil War—we were preparing to assert and maintain the Monroe doctrine as it was being violated in Mexico, when necessity for action on our part was averted by the overthrow of Maximilian.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I asked him a question?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Not at all.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is the Senator's contention that we would still have full freedom of action in kindred circumstances, if such a condition again existed, in spite of this treaty?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It certainly is.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Although the Secretary of State, in defining our right of self-defense, delimited it to a territorial right and neglected to add that we had the right also to protect our vital interests?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think that was perhaps in a sense an unfortunate omission—failing to add the words suggested, but I do not think that the letter of the Secretary of State binds the Senate; I do not think it binds this Nation for all time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator thinks it was unfortunate for the Secretary of State to omit that phrase, why would he think it unfortunate, then, for the Senate to add it?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not say that it was a fatal omission, and therefore I say that it is not necessary now to insert it. When I say it was unfortunate I must be understood as meaning that if he had said that, then perhaps the Senator would have been satisfied.

Mr. VANDENBERG. He would have been.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And in that sense it is unfortunate. He might have added other phrases which would have quieted the fears of many other thoughtful men. But I do not think that his saying it or omitting to say it in any wise affects the true intent and meaning and binding force of this proposed treaty.

While the Monroe doctrine was and is designed primarily to safeguard our own country I hope it will not be regarded offensive to any nation now upon earth for me to say it made us self-appointed guardians of the then struggling peoples of the New World, by notifying Europe that the United States would not tolerate the interference of Europe, the extension of its political system, to the New World, to oppress the American Republics, to colonize, or control in any way their destiny.

Without any blush we may admit that we were not altogether altruistic when over a century ago we announced this American doctrine. We were indeed thinking first of our own infant Nation, but we were not unaware of the avowed designs of the Holy Alliance, falsely so called, when we declared, in effect, that we would not suffer the autocracies of the Old World to gain a foothold in the new.

Let no one think that our fathers were coldly indifferent to the fate of the heroic peoples of Central and South America, who, inspired by our example, had declared and achieved their independence. Let no one stand by the grave of James Monroe yonder in Richmond and defame his memory by saying or thinking that he was deaf or blind to the danger that threatened liberty in the New World.

By permission of the Senate I wish to incorporate here the words of James Monroe. Much has been said about the Monroe doctrine. Perhaps it might be well for us once more to listen to what President Monroe said in his seventh annual message, which came to the Senate December 2, 1823:

> The citizens of the United States cherish sentiments the most friendly in favor of the liberty and happiness of their fellow men on that side of the Atlantic.

Referring, of course, to Europe.

> In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparation for our defense.
> With the movements in this hemisphere we are of necessity more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers. The political system of the allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments; and to the defense of our own, which has been achieved by the loss of so much blood and treasure, and matured by the wisdom of their most enlightened citizens, and under which we have enjoyed unexampled felicity, this whole Nation is devoted.
> We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere, but with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

Out of that message sprang what we know as the Monroe doctrine, and on every occasion when this Nation has had reasons to think that any European power was preparing to violate or threatening to violate that doctrine, whether it be as to Venezuela or as to Mexico or as to Chile or as to any other nation in this hemisphere, we have been ready to invoke the doctrine and assert it, and we expanded it, so to speak, by the Lodge resolution, which I will ask to print without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Idaho in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Lodge resolution is as follows:

> Resolved, That when any harbor or other place in the American Continents is so situated that the occupation thereof for naval or military purposes might threaten the communications or the safety of the United States, the Government of the United States could not see without grave concern the possession of such harbor or other place by any corporation or association which has such a relation to another government, not American, as to give that Government practical power of control for naval or military purposes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Many of the once small and weak republics of the New World, guarded in their infancy by this doctrine, have become great and strong, and some may not think they further need its protection; but whether or not they need or think they need its protection, we may need its protection and will not hesitate to invoke it.

Mr. President, from what I have said I reached the conclusion that this American doctrine is not impaired or taken away by omission to mention or specifically, in express words, reserve it in this treaty. Whether the proposed treaty is signed by us or not, if any power violates or threatens to violate that doctrine, we hold ourselves at liberty to resort to such means as may be in our power to assert and defend it.

It has been suggested that by entering into the treaty we obligate ourselves to go to war as an ally or associate with other signatory power or powers that may be in war brought on by violation of the treaty. Sympathy or common interests might cause us to join in such a war, but it is enough to say that there is no such express or implied legal or moral obligation to do so found in the treaty.

I have in my mind the view of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], expressed here and elsewhere. With great respect for his legal ability, and certainly with respect for the motive which caused him to express the view, I venture to say two things: First, that there is no moral or legal obligation on our part to become the associate or the ally of any nation engaged in war in violation of this treaty; and, second, if violated and war comes on, we are relieved entirely from all obligations under the treaty.

It may not be necessary for me to say so, Mr. President, but, listening to the discussion and bearing in mind the language of the treaty which condemns war as an instrument of national policy, which renounces it as an instrument of national policy, some days ago I bethought me, does this treaty in anywise affect the right to carry on a revolution? It may be asked: What of the right of revolution, even though the assertion of that right leads to war? Is such war condemned or the right to engage in it renounced by this treaty?

Assuredly not. This treaty does not relate to that kind or character of war. It deals with and condemns "recourse to war for the solution of international controversies" and renounces it as "an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another." No one will claim or assert that a revolutionary war is a war for the solution of international controversies or that it is an instrument of national policy as against another nation. As in our own glorious revolution, for example, war may be an heroic effort of men "to alter or to abolish" an oppressive government and "to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem likely to effect their safety and happiness."

No; this treaty does not undertake to curb or deny, to condemn or renounce, the inherent, inalienable, right of a people to overthrow the oppressor, be that oppressor tyrannic king or tyrannic government. On the contrary, this treaty seeks to curb the tyrannic king and the tyrannic government from making use of war as an instrument of national policy—a national policy, it might be, which, if carried out successfully, would mean seizing the territory belonging, by right, to other nations, the overthrow of their governments, the deprivation of the rights and the enslavement of their people.

The preamble to this treaty recites that—

> Any signatory power which shall hereafter seek to promote its national interest by resort to war should be denied the benefits furnished by this treaty.

Here is a recital that expresses a moral as well as a legal truth—that a nation which breaks a contract freely and voluntarily entered into is not entitled to any of the benefits thereof. Thus it is sought to impress on nations the sanctity of treaties and, by anticipation, to place a brand of infamy on the brow of that nation which shall fail to observe this treaty according to its true intent and meaning.

I do not doubt or question the good faith of any of the signatory powers, present or prospective. I believe they are animated by the same motives and inspired by the same hopes that animate and inspire us; that they, as we, are highly resolved that all disputes or conflicts, of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which arise among them shall be settled by pacific means rather than by war.

But it is said—and my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] by questions brought up the thought—that treaties have been broken and that this treaty will be broken; wherefore, why enter into it? This is the counsel of despair. This is the doctrine of the fatalist. That such suggestions should be made is not strange, for, sad to admit, solemn treaties have been broken. But that such a suggestion should have weight to me is surprising, for we should not weary of well-doing even though our labor be unavailing. Let broken treaties lie in their dishonored graves along with the dishonored men who broke them, and let nations learn from the bitter experience of treaty breakers that it is not only right but wise to keep the plighted faith and walk in the path of honor, which is the path of safety.

There is a very thoughtful book entitled "Is Mankind Advancing?" written by a scholarly woman, Mrs. John Martin. It may be that Alexander has never been outranked as a military genius. It may be that no sculptor has ever excelled Phideas. It may be that no orator has ever surpassed Demosthenes, unless it be our own god-like Webster. It may be that no dramatic poet has ever risen above Sophocles, unless it be the "myriad-minded" Shakespeare. It may be that no painters have ever more glorified the canvas than Raphael or Michelangelo. But I do not concede that mankind is not advancing.

True, man's upward journey is wet by his tears and his blood. Greed and avarice, envy and ambition, have robbed the honest and trod upon the weak. Lust for power has arrayed nation against nation, filled countless graves with the young and brave, and transformed man, created in God's image for noble purposes, into a beast of prey. But have the nations learned nothing by recent world-wide disaster, the tears and the blood of which are scarcely dry? Do countless hospitals, do unnumbered graves, do broken hearts, do the heavy financial burdens of the world born of battle teach mankind nothing?

Let America, first to propose, be not the last to approve this world-wide treaty designed to prevent war; it might be another world war.

Mr. President, it is not proposed to coerce any nation into signing this solemn agreement. It is to be voluntarily, freely entered into or not at all. This treaty is not to be imposed on a prostrate foe in an hour of battle victory, but is to be signed in a time of peace, when passion is asleep and fear does not inspire. No one will intimate that we are inspired by fear to enter into this treaty. We are moved by a desire to contribute to the cause of peace, believing that cause to be the cause of civilization. Looking back over the wreck and ruin caused by war employed as an instrument of national policy, war commenced and carried on to gratify national avarice and ambition and in wicked disregard of the rights of the peoples attacked, what civilized nation should now hesitate or decline to condemn that barbaric crime and to enter into a treaty pledging its honor never to be guilty of like conduct? Thus freely entered into, for of loss of national honor will restrain unholy ambition and join with prudence in obedience to this covenant.

What is true of individual man is true of nations. A good name is "the immediate jewel" of their souls, and when good name is lost all is lost. The signing of this treaty, I want to repeat in the hope that my view may prevail with Senators—and I am speaking to them and, though I know that many of them are necessarily absent, I hope they will note my words—the signing of this treaty does not legally or morally, expressly or impliedly, bind or obligate us to go to war or to join as an ally or associate with any signatory nation that may be at war, brought on in violation of this treaty.

There is no rule for the interpretation of treaties that would so construe this treaty as to require us as a legal or moral duty to go to war with any nation. Every word in the preamble, which may be referred to for light as to the true intent and purpose of the parties and as to their respective duties and obligations, negatives any such supposed legal or moral duty. To hold or to argue otherwise is to ignore the outstanding and controlling purpose of the parties as expressed in plain, certain, unambiguous English words, and that outstanding and controlling purpose is to condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, not to approve recourse to war for the solution of such controversies.

Of course, if this treaty should be broken and war should ensue between other nations we would be at perfect liberty to shape our conduct according to the exigencies of the time; but we would be under no legal or moral duty to espouse the cause of either of the warring nations.

Mr. President, our policy is peace, peace with all nations of the New World and of the Old World. Will we be advancing the cause of peace among the nations by joining in this treaty? Will we imperil our safety by agreeing to seek a peaceful settlement or solution of international disputes?

First, in our hearts, America must be first in our thoughts. However much we may love humanity, however much we may strive by word and deed to assist mankind, our first and last duty as citizens and as Senators is to safeguard this Republic, and, if possible, add to its glory. Will we not be safeguarding this Republic and adding to its glory by entering into a treaty to furl battle flags and to walk beneath the blessed banner of the Prince of Peace? By entering into this treaty we surrender, we abandon, no American right, no American policy. All the nations of the earth understand our national policies.

Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate for having detained it so long. If the request I made at the opening of my remarks had been respected literally by Senators I should have finished in a half or three quarters of an hour, but diverted—and I make no complaint of the interruptions—I have consumed all together more time than I had anticipated doing. I wish, however, very earnestly to submit to the Senate that as matters stand it is our duty to consent to and approve the entering into of this multilateral peace treaty. Let us have faith; let us join gladly and unreservedly in laying—a new and living stone in the grand temple of universal peace, whose dome shall be lofty as the firmament of heaven, broad and comprehensive as earth itself.

And if, as we fondly hope, this nobly conceived treaty, this condemnation of war for the solution of international controversies, this renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy, shall be sacredly observed, then, Mr. President, for a second time the morning stars shall sing together and all the sons of God shout for joy.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, before the Senator from California takes his seat, I wish to apologize to him for not being here during his remarks. I was compelled to be away, but, in order to get a categorical statement before the Senate, I should like to ask the Senator three or four questions.

Does the Senator agree to the construction that by entering into this treaty we in no manner impair or imperil what is known as the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is my position.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator believe that in entering into this treaty we do not in any manner entangle ourselves in the obligations of the World Court or the Locarno treaty even to the extent of recognizing them as obligations that in any way bind us?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think that we are not entangled or obligated by any other treaty—that by this treaty we are not bound by treaties entered into by others.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think that by entering into this treaty we have assented in any way to the reservation and qualification that Mr. Chamberlain put upon the treaty to the effect that Great Britain reserved full liberty of action in certain undefined regions of the world, or are we still free to contend against that doctrine if it be hereafter asserted?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I can answer the question in this way, although I have covered it: Assuming for the moment that he can import into this treaty provisions or obligations not contained therein, I contend that we are not here affirmatively acceding to his view.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am glad that is the Senator's view.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is my view.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If that were my view I would make no contention. I am asking the Senator the questions because of his prominence in the Senate and the interest he has taken in this debate. If that view could be authoritatively recorded I would have no further opposition to this pact. I have not opposed the pact as a pact, but I have opposed it unless we may have a clear understanding. I wanted to get the Senator's views, and I thank him for his frank expression.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, while I am on my feet, let me add that I had something to say touching the attitude of my friend from Missouri at the beginning of my remarks, which perhaps I need not repeat. I do, however, beg leave to say, Mr. President, turning away from the discussion, that I have a very lively and high regard for the Senator from Missouri and a very deep sympathy with the view he has so often expressed that we as a nation should not become entangled in any of the controversies of Europe or of Asia; and, second, his view, as I understand it, that we should never by silence or by word abandon that doctrine which bears the name of James Monroe; that we should follow, as I intend to try to follow, the advice of Washington given in 1793, that America should keep out of Europe, and to follow the advice of Monroe when he told Europe to keep out of America.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, now that we have been diverted in part, will the Senator from California permit a further interruption?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I notice in the Washington Times of this afternoon the following statement:

HOOVER WANTS UNITED STATES IN COURT

President-elect Hoover has passed the word to authoritative diplomatic circles that he is favorably disposed toward a new effort to bring about American adherence to the World Court.

This was the assurance carried back to New York to-day by Elihu Root, former Secretary of State, following his breakfast conference Friday at Hoover's S Street home.

How does that strike the Senator?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If the question is germane to this discussion, I answer that I sat here in the Senate and listened to the debate when that subject was up, namely, our entrance to the so-called World Court, and I am not now disposed to go further than I went then.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BINGHAM subsequently said:

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD at the end of the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], as a part of the discussion of the treaty, a resolution in regard to the national defense and the treaty, unanimously adopted at the annual meeting of the chapter regents and treasurers of the Connecticut Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

National defense resolutions in support of cruiser bill and the Kellogg peace treaty unanimously adopted at annual meeting of chapter regents and treasurers, Connecticut Daughters of the American Revolution, January 8, 1929

Whereas the Connecticut Daughters of the American Revolution have continually signified their belief in the inherent right of self-defense for nations as well as individuals, and realize that it is the sacred duty of every citizen under the United States Constitution to defend the country in time of need against outside aggression or internal disorder; and

Whereas they believe that one method of securing that peace universal which all desire is for all peace-loving nations like ourselves to be strong enough to maintain peace, law, and order throughout the world against all subversive influences: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the chapter regents and treasurers of the Connecticut Daughters of the American Revolution, in annual meeting assembled, this 8th day of January, 1929, do reaffirm our society's support of the principle of national defense through an army and navy adequate to the needs of the Nation; and

Resolved, That we urge our Senators to support the cruiser bill (so called) now pending before the Senate, providing for 15 cruisers and 1 airplane carrier, to the end that peace may be preserved and our national interests protected by a navy powerful enough to command respect; and be it further

Resolved, That we likewise urge our Senators to support the Kellogg-Briand treaty with such safeguards as the inherent principles of self-defense may demand for the protection of the territory and vital interests of the United States of America, at the same time strongly affirming our belief that there can be no inconsistency or conflict between ratification of this noble effort to create the will to peace throughout the world and the maintenance of a navy strong enough to stand back of it, since treaties, like laws, depend on the power behind them to render them effective; and

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to Senators BINGHAM and MCLEAN, to our president general, Mrs. Brosseau, and to the press.

CALLING OF THE ROLL

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Idaho in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Deneen	McMaster	Sackett
Barkley	Dill	McNary	Schall
Bingham	Edge	Mayfield	Sheppard
Black	Frazier	Metcalf	Shipstead
Blaine	George	Moses	Shortridge
Blease	Gillett	Neely	Simmons
Borah	Goff	Norbeck	Steck
Bratton	Harris	Norris	Steiwer
Brookhart	Hayden	Nye	Swanson
Broussard	Heflin	Oddie	Thomas, Idaho
Bruce	Johnson	Overman	Thomas, Okla.
Burton	Jones	Pine	Trammell
Capper	Kendrick	Ransdell	Tyson
Caraway	Keyes	Reed, Mo.	Vandenberg
Copeland	King	Reed, Pa.	Wagner
Couzens	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Curtis	McKellar	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler

Mr. BURTON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. FESS] is absent to-day on important business. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to state that my colleague the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PANAMA AND NICARAGUA CANALS

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I propose to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up at this time, as in legislative session, Senate Joint Resolution 117——

Mr. MOSES. The form in which the Senator makes the proposal would displace the cruiser bill.

Mr. EDGE. I was about to explain that—the cruiser bill to be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate might take up Senate Joint Resolution 117; and, if I may be permitted a moment, I will explain the necessity for action as quickly as possible.

Mr. MOSES. May I suggest to the Senator that he first ask that the Senate go into legislative session, and then lay it aside temporarily.

Mr. EDGE. I assumed that unanimous consent would carry all that privilege, without going through the various stages. Then, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate resumed its legislative session.

Mr. EDGE. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the cruiser bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SWANSON. The cruiser bill must be put before the Senate before it can be laid aside.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I submit that that is becoming pretty technical.

Mr. SWANSON. It is not technical at all. It must be laid before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The unfinished business is the cruiser bill.

Mr. SWANSON. The unfinished business is usually laid before the Senate if we go from one measure to another. I do not want any question about it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the purpose of all this technicality?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that it automatically comes before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDGE. I renew my request that the unfinished business known as the cruiser bill be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate consider Senate Joint Resolution 117, now on the calendar, and that at the conclusion of that consideration, not longer than this afternoon, the unfinished business known as the cruiser bill be brought back as unfinished business. With that understanding I can not think that there will be any possible question about the matter.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New Jersey what is the subject matter of the joint resolution to which he refers?

Mr. EDGE. The subject matter of the joint resolution, briefly, is to provide that the Board of Engineers of the War Department shall furnish to the Congress of the United States certain very necessary information as to suggested improvements to the Panama Canal and as to the practicability and feasibility, from a survey, of the Nicaraguan canal. It in no way, shape, form, or manner commits Congress to any policy at all. It simply is in the nature of an information-seeking resolution, and I suggest that without this information Congress would not be properly equipped to decide these great questions. There is absolutely nothing provided in the joint resolution but the securing of this essential information.

Mr. DILL. Does the joint resolution require an additional appropriation?

Mr. EDGE. It provides for an appropriation of $150,000 that has been estimated for by the Budget and approved by the Budget. When we have $3,000,000 invested in a right of way in Nicaragua, and something like $400,000,000 invested in the Panama Canal, and when we face a situation that no one questions, as evidenced by the report of the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, that within from 12 to 20 years the absolute maximum capacity of the Panama Canal will have been reached, we must recognize that it is essential that we secure the information necessary to enable us to adopt a future policy. So that this resolution carries, I repeat, nothing with it except the request from Congress that the Board of Engineers secure and transmit to Congress that information.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, does it provide any definite time when they shall report back to Congress?

Mr. EDGE. No; it does not provide a definite time, because it is rather a large responsibility. If we do not start it, I might say to the Senator from Alabama, we will never receive this information. I presume it will take at least two years to get the information. As chairman of the committee having this legislation in charge, I am endeavoring to provide for Congress the information essential to the final adoption of a canal policy.

Mr. SWANSON. We simply are to make an authorization for an appropriation?

Mr. EDGE. An authorization for an appropriation.

Mr. SWANSON. Is there to be an annual appropriation to keep this thing going, or is this to be the total appropriation?

Mr. EDGE. This is for one specific appropriation of $150,000.

Mr. SWANSON. Does it say "annually"? If this is to be passed in order to parcel jobs out for 10 years for people who will be loafing down there on the job, a request coming in every year for $150,000, I shall be opposed to it.

Mr. EDGE. It does not authorize anything of the kind.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator read what it says about an authorization?

Mr. McKELLAR. May I suggest to the Senator from Alabama, and also to the Senator from Virginia, if the Senator will permit me, that section 7 of the joint resolution provides that—

> The President is requested to report to the Congress, as soon as practicable, the results of the investigation and survey, together with such recommendations in connection therewith as he deems advisable.

Mr. REED of Missouri. How much is to be appropriated?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is an authorizaiton for $150,000.

Mr. SWANSON. The term "as soon as practicable" is indefinite, providing for continuous jobs for about five or six engineers for 15 years and $150,000 every year. In cases where we have employed that phrase "as soon as practicable" I have never seen such officials make a report as long as they can keep their jobs going. I do not object to the appropriation of $150,000 to provide for this survey if the report is to be made in a given time, and it will not cost any more money.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all that is provided for.

Mr. SWANSON. Read it and see.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if I may interject there, the first appropriation suggested in the original resolution was, I think, for $300,000, and the Secretary of War, in the report which accompanies the bill, makes this statement:

> The resolution would, however, be in accordance with the fiscal policy of the Government if amended so as to contain an authorization of $250,000.
> It is considered that, when the matter of appropriations comes up, $150,000 will be sufficient.

Mr. SWANSON. Sufficient for what?

Mr. EDGE. Sufficient to carry on the work of the survey.

Mr. SWANSON. For one year, or to the completion of it? I have seen these ventures started, and they generally run for 10 years, with five or six engineers taking care of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will excuse me, he is not referring to the bridge across the Potomac, is he?

Mr. SWANSON. No; the time of 10 years was fixed in that case.

Mr. EDGE. In further reply to the Senator from Virginia, it appeals to me that even though it might cost more than $150,000, we simply must have this information. I hope it will cost less, but whether it costs $150,000 or $500,000, after the investment of $3,000,000 for the right of way, to secure the necessary information to enable Congress to reach some conclusion as to further Panama improvements, we must have this information.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator says we will need it in 10 or 12 years. If we start a commission now, with $150,000 appropriated this year, next year the commission will continue, and it will continue the next year, and the next. Limit it to report in two years.

Mr. EDGE. I have no objection to limiting it to report in two years because I think they can very readily complete the survey and report in two years.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think the report ought to be made sooner. I am afraid that if two years is put in the measure we will encourage a delay.

I am not going to object; I want to suggest, however, that we ought to be very careful about appropriating money for the national defense or for new canals. We may not have enough left to increase the appropriation for the enforcement of prohibition.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that this is not a proposition de novo. Surveys were made beginning away back in 1900—prior to that, indeed—and repeated surveys have been made and data brought down to within a very few years. So that when the Senator indicates—as I, at least, interpreted his remarks to indicate—that we had no information, I want to say that surveys have been made over and over again by the Navy Department, and Mr. Wilbur, the Secretary of the Navy, in a report upon this measure, has indicated that a large number of surveys have been made and that the data are available. There is a sort of insinuation in his letter—I do not use that word offensively—that the Navy Department, because of the vast amount of data which it has accumulated and the number of surveys which it has made, ought to be the one, if any further data are to be obtained, to secure it.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I do not want to consume the time of the Senate, as I spoke at some length on this resolution a few weeks ago; but as a matter of fact the report on the last survey was made in 1901, 27 years ago. During the intervening time, as every Senator must be well aware, methods of construction, with the development of sea-level canals, have been revolutionized as compared with the information which a board of engineers would have turned in 27 years ago. This resolution provides only that the additional information necessary because of changed methods of construction shall be transmitted to Congress. The topography of the country has not changed, it is true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, section 4 seems to expressly commit the Government to the construction of the Nicaraguan canal. It authorizes the President to notify the Government of Nicaragua of the desire and intention of this Government to construct such a canal and to agree upon "the details of the terms under which such canal shall be constructed, operated, and maintained." It seems to me that that language clearly implies something more than mere surveys. It contemplates foreclosing all question as to whether a Nicaraguan canal shall be constructed by the United States, and, in effect, directs the President to negotiate the details and terms of construction and proceed with the construction.

Mr. BINGHAM. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. BINGHAM. Has the unanimous consent been granted?

Mr. EDGE. I presumed the Chair had put my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. For consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator has made every effort to get consideration of this joint resolution, and I do not wish to be in the attitude of objecting to its consideration, or of further postponing consideration of it, but I would like to understand the true effect of the resolution.

My interpretation of section 4 is as I have just stated, that it has no relation to surveys, that it forecloses the national policy on the subject of a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] offered the amendment to which the Senator from Arkansas has referred. It does not direct; it only authorizes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will see that under section 4 as originally drawn the President was directed to notify the Government of Nicaragua that he would enter into negotiations for the construction of the canal. It was thought, after more careful consideration, that he should simply be empowered and not instructed to do it; and he is empowered to do it anyway, I imagine.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not think that is an accurate statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly he is not directed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is certainly a fact that we have negotiated a treaty with Nicaragua giving the Government of the United States, under conditions, rights of way for a canal.

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As far as Nicaragua is concerned, giving general permission for the construction of the canal. But the United States Government has not determined whether and when such canal shall be constructed. This, I think, leaves it to the President to proceed with the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; just to proceed to agree upon the details and recommend.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, under the treaty with Nicaragua we were given the exclusive right to construct a canal, the details of it, as I understand it, to be subsequently arranged by a treaty between the two Governments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the purpose is to see what the President can do about that negotiation.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all.

Mr. SWANSON. But the Senator's language goes further than that.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. SWANSON. The President ought to be directed, if we are going to draw it properly, to see what concessions can be obtained and, if negotiations are to be conducted, to reach some conclusion as to the plans under which a treaty will be drawn.

Mr. McKELLAR. This authorizes him to do that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The negotiation of a treaty being exclusively an Executive function, I think the language "authorized and empowered" is proper, unless the Senate also should choose to use the term "request." I do not think the Senate can direct the President to negotiate a treaty. Certainly this contemplates a foreclosure of the question as to whether a Nicaraguan canal shall be constructed.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, Mr. President; I think not, for this reason, if the Senator will permit me: All that the President could do under this authorization would be to take the steps provided in the Nicaragua treaty; and if he saw fit to recommend it, then he could do it or not, just as he saw fit, and it must be recommended to the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Of course, this means just what the Senator from Arkansas has said. The language is "notify the Government of Nicaragua of its desire or intention to construct such canal." What can be more explicit than that?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all right. Just read further.

Mr. SWANSON (reading):

> And to agree upon the details of the terms upon which such canal is to be constructed, operated, and maintained.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. SWANSON. It ought to authorize him, if the language is properly drawn, to conduct the negotiations authorized under the treaty between Nicaragua and the United States, and submit it to the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly what this does. The words used here are the same words that are used in the treaty with Nicaragua. It is just taking the initial step by which this Government, if it sees fit, may carry out its action, first, by having the President enter the negotiations, or agree upon the details, and then refer it back here for action. We can not take the step until we follow out the plan that was agreed upon between Nicaragua and the United States in the original treaty.

Mr. SWANSON. All right; put the language in this way, and I have no objection, "notify the Government of Nicaragua of his willingness to conduct negotiations in order to reach an agreement upon the details of the terms upon which a canal shall be constructed, operated, and maintained."

Mr. McKELLAR. We will accept that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before that is accepted I want to say a word. I have listened with a great deal of interest to this colloquy. As I understand, the object of this resolution is to ascertain how much the canal is going to cost. Am I right about that?

Mr. EDGE. That was my original object in introducing the resolution providing for the two surveys. The Senator from Tennessee, as I have already indicated, added the suggested amendment that has just been discussed.

May I suggest this, in addition to what the Senator from Tennessee has said, that the language be corrected so that there could be no question that we are not directing it. It would seem to me very essential that the details be discussed, not alone with Nicaragua, but with Costa Rica, Salvador, and Honduras, all of which countries have some rights, at the same time the survey is being made, because after all is said and done that information is essential.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the Senator quite gets my idea. I have not had time yet to state what I wanted to state. We are going to try to find out what a canal will cost. What is the object of having that information? If we are going to build the canal anyway, what do we care about what it does cost? We have two things here. We are going to find out what it will cost, and at the same time we are going to enter into negotiations which, in a moral way, at least, will bind Congress to go ahead with it regardless of what we may think about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Just a moment. I have not any objection to the resolution if it is confined to ascertain what such a canal would cost, and I anticipate that if things go on as it seems now they might, we will follow that up with negotiations for the construction of the canal. But we do not know that that is true. We do not know whether these conditions of increased traffic down in Panama are going to continue or not. It may be that by the time we get this information, conditions there will have changed, and that it will appear that there is no immediate necessity for going ahead. It may be that we will be greatly surprised at what it is going to cost. In fact, the joint resolution apparently is offered for the purpose of trying to find out what it is going to cost, which it seems to me presupposes that before we decide what we are going to do we are going to find out what it may cost, and that, it seems to me, is a good business proposition. Let us find out what it is going to cost.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; after a little while. We are going to be here all afternoon, so the Senator will have plenty of time.

When we have once found out what it will cost, then we will decide whether we want to go ahead. If we are going ahead anyway, if we are going to adopt a resolution that will bind us to build it whether we want to or not, regardless of cost, then let us save this $150,000 that we are asked to pay for the purpose of finding out how much it will cost. Why not do what seems to me is the businesslike way to do—pass the joint resolution without anything in it about the negotiations and the construction of the canal, but merely providing that we shall ascertain how much it will cost; and when we get that information, then we can take whatever step we think at that time is the proper step to take.

Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reason why that course can not be pursued is because we can not find out what the cost of the canal will be until we do enter into these negotiations, because of this fact: While we have a treaty with Nicaragua for the route so far as Nicaragua is concerned, and we have already paid the money over for that route, and while we know what it will cost or rather what the additional cost will be, though as to the additional cost to the Government of Nicaragua it will depend upon negotiations——

Mr. NORRIS. Nicaragua is not going to pay anything toward the construction of the canal.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; not at all; but we have to pay something under the treaty. In addition to that we have no treaty with Costa Rica, and this canal for many miles will be constructed, if at all, along the river that divides Costa Rica from Nicaragua. Unless we know what Nicaragua will charge for her interest in the canal or for furnishing the right of way for the canal we can not tell what the canal will cost. In addition to that, Honduras and San Salvador have made statements to our Government that they have some interest in it.

Mr. NORRIS. There is nothing in the pending joint resolution providing for negotiations to be entered into with Costa Rica and San Salvador.

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed there is, in section 5. Therefore we can not tell what the cost will be until we have the investigation.

Mr. NORRIS. The copy of the joint resolution I have before me does not have any such paragraph in it. Evidently I have the wrong resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. With pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Before the Senator discusses that proposition I wish to invite the consideration of both the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Tennessee to this suggestion:

We have in Panama a canal that has been adequate for the service required. The indications are that with the increase of commerce the facilities now existing there will not be sufficient for the future. But the question naturally arises, and ought to receive some consideration, whether we desire to construct a Nicaraguan canal or to enlarge the capacity of the Panama Canal. The joint resolution, as I construe it, determines that question and commits the Government to the construction of a Nicaraguan canal rather than to any inquiry as to whether the present canal at Panama can be enlarged to meet the reasonable requirements of commerce as we may anticipate them.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me it does that, as I understand the resolution. I think that is objectionable and that we ought not to do it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Originally there was a very prolonged and bitter controversy over the question as to whether the interoceanic canal should be constructed at Panama or in Nicaragua. We recall that that controversy lasted for several decades, and we recall that it was finally decided to make the connection between the two oceans at Panama. I am wondering if the joint resolution does not necessarily revive that old controversy. Are we to construct canals across all the Central American Republics as the conditions of commerce seem to require additional facilities for the transportation of commerce from ocean to ocean, or is it the logical policy to make some inquiry into the question of concentrating the transportation at the present canal and carrying it through the present canal?

There are a good many strategical reasons that lie behind that suggestion. We have to negotiate treaties. We have controversies that grow out of the maintenance and operation of the canal. We have large forces employed in the operation of the canal. It seems to me that is a question which, if it has not been considered by a committee of the Senate, ought to be thought out very carefully.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I will.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to section 3 of the joint resolution, which provides for the very thing the Senator so well suggested. I will read it:

SEC. 3. The Chief of Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, shall also make an engineering survey and an investigation for the purpose of determining the possibilities and cost of enlarging the Panama Canal to the extent which may be necessary to meet the future needs of interoceanic shipping.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that I see no possible objection to section 3.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No.

Mr. NORRIS. The objection is, and I think the Senator from Arkansas pointed it out, that we are going further than that. It is proposed to take a step under the joint resolution from which at least it can be implied that we will have a moral obligation to build the Nicaraguan canal. Until all these investigations are made, I take it that the Senate does not want to bind itself or bind the country to construct such a canal. Why ask the President to give any notice to the Nicaraguan Government? Why ask the President to enter into any negotiation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. With pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The President is expressly empowered to notify the Government of Nicaragua of the desire and intention of the United States to construct such a canal.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Why do that now?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That holds out to Nicaragua the intention to construct it. If the terms of the treaty which we might negotiate, and return here, are satisfactory, no matter what the survey at Panama might show, we would be morally obligated to ratify that treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we would.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to suggest an amendment to that passage in the joint resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator wants to take the floor to explain it I will yield the floor.

Mr. EDGE. I do not care to take the floor away from the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to retain the floor. I am merely trying to get some information.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] in quoting the same section that has been quoted by the Senator from Arkansas, section 4, has suggested the following amendment: At the top of page where it reads, "to be agreed to by the two governments," insert a period after the word "governments," and strike out all of the language thereafter to and including line 9, as follows:

Whenever the Government of the United States shall notify the Government of Nicaragua of its desire or intention to construct such canal, the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to notify the Government of Nicaragua of its desire and intention to construct such canal and to agree upon the details of the terms under which such canal shall be constructed, operated, and maintained.

That is all to be stricken out and there is to be inserted in lieu thereof, following the word "governments" and the period, the following:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations for an agreement upon the details of the terms under which such canal shall be constructed, operated, and maintained.

In other words, the language, as I interpret it, simply gives the President of the United States the power to find out, in addition to the engineering costs, what will be entailed in the way of settling the negotiations with Nicaragua on the one hand and with Costa Rica, San Salvador, and Honduras, as contained in section 5 of the joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. In order to remove entirely the objections that have been offered, I would suggest that on page 5, line 8, we strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may," so that it would read "to agree upon the details of the terms under which such canal may be constructed, operated, and maintained."

Mr. EDGE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me we are rather getting the cart before the horse. The joint resolution as it is before us really obligates the President of the United States to enter upon negotiations not only with the Government of Nicaragua but with the Governments of Honduras, Costa Rica, and San Salvador. The moment the President begins negotiations with Nicaragua and the other Governments to which I have referred with reference to the details of a canal to be constructed, with reference to the lands that are to be occupied, immediately there will arise in their minds the view—and it will be perfectly legitimate and inevitable—that the United States is committed to the construction of the canal regardless of the physical facts which may be found by the survey which is to be made. It seems to me that we ought not to lead those countries, by negotiations of the character indicated in the joint resolution, into the belief that we are about to construct a great canal across Nicaragua.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we ought to determine, first, whether the Panama Canal can be enlarged for the purpose of taking care of our trade and commerce. Secondly, if it is possible and practical and economical, that may conclude the investigation that is proposed here to be made in the other countries. If the Panama Canal may not be enlarged for the purposes indicated, then we should determine whether or not a parallel canal can be constructed which, in conjunction with the Panama Canal, will meet for an indefinite period the demands of our Government and of our trade and commerce.

Finally, if it shall be determined that the Panama Canal can not be enlarged so as to answer all the demands of our trade and commerce and if it shall be determined that a parallel canal will not answer the purpose or is not feasible and practicable, then let a survey be made, if one shall be necessary, across Nicaragua.

But to commit ourselves in advance morally to the proposition that we are going to construct a canal across Nicaragua, I think, would be unwise and unfortunate. I recall that a year ago or thereabouts, perhaps not so long ago, some discussion in the Senate revealed the fact of some report, or at least some information, from Government officials that the Panama Canal was adequate for an indefinite—perhaps for 50 years; that it can be enlarged and another system of locks installed that would enable the canal to answer the demands of our Government and our trade and commerce for a very long period of time.

I am not averse, Mr. President, to a survey of the Nicaraguan route, notwithstanding the fact that such surveys have been made beginning many years ago. Senators will recall that when the great John T. Morgan was in the Senate of the United States he spent years in investigating the Nicaraguan route. Elaborate and detailed surveys were then made, and I think the consensus of opinion among engineers and among many others who gave attention to the matter was that the Nicaraguan route was better than the Panama route, but, for reasons which I shall not at this time attempt to explain, the Nicaraguan route was abandoned and the Panama Canal was constructed. The arguments made by former Senator Morgan, which were irrefutable, were not heeded by the legislative authority and the executive authority at that time. Those surveys, however, have been made, and additional surveys have supplemented those surveys. We have before us a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Wilbur, calling attention to the numerous surveys which have been made, to the activities of the naval authorities, and the information and data which have been acquired by the Navy Department.

I would be in favor of a resolution—and if the pending joint resolution shall be so amended I shall vote for it—which would require, first, an investigation of the feasibility of enlarging the Panama Canal; and, secondly, the feasibility of constructing a parallel canal; and, thirdly, if those reports indicate that neither is satisfactory and that a canal other than the one in Panama is required, that the commission shall proceed to complete any surveys that may be needed in Nicaragua in order to determine whether a canal shall be constructed in Nicaragua. It seems to me that would be the sensible and the orderly course to pursue. I shall vote against the pending joint resolution because it proceeds in the inverse order, and seeks now to commit the Government morally, if not legally, to the construction of a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we could easily meet the objection which the Senator from Utah and other Senators have suggested to the pending joint resolution by adding, after the word "maintained," at the end of line 9 on page 5, the following:

Provided, That nothing contained in this resolution shall be construed to bind the United States to build said Nicaragua canal.

I offer that proviso as an amendment to the resolution, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I yielded merely for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. KING. Certainly; I merely wished to say that I did not want to yield the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. I am very happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. President, I can not see any reason for putting any provision in this joint resolution committing us in any way to the construction of the Nicaraguan canal. I see nothing to be gained by providing for negotiations to be conducted with Nicaragua or with Honduras or Costa Rica or any of the other Latin-American States. Why excite their cupidity or their apprehensions or their desires by opening up negotiations now looking toward the construction of a canal through Nicaragua? Why not, if we have not sufficient data, obtain sufficient data?

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] has said we know something about the topography of the country. Yes; we not only know something about the topography of the country but, as I have stated, elaborate surveys were made which revealed the physical conditions and the feasibility of the construction of a canal there. If additional data are required in order for us to determine whether or not it can be constructed or should be constructed, let us obtain the additional data.

When we have them before us, then it will be time to inaugurate negotiations with the countries referred to with a view to securing additional consent, if we have not now sufficient consent; but, of course, under the treaty which we have with Nicaragua, and in view of the fact that we have made payments and have acquired an indefeasible right to occupy Nicaraguan territory and to construct a canal there, there is no hurry and nothing to be gained by further negotiations at this time.

Let us determine whether we need a canal through Nicaragua. Let us determine when we ought to begin constructing it—shall it be 20 years, 30 years, 40 years, or 50 years hence—when we get the report. By that time we shall know something further in regard to the Panama Canal, its capacity and suitableness for our needs. We can then determine what course to pursue.

It may be that further negotiations will be required with Costa Rica and Honduras; it may be that the route originally selected should be modified, calling for concessions from Costa Rica or Honduras; but until a further survey shall have been made, if one is found to be necessary, and full data obtained, it seems to me it would be an act of futility and unwisdom to begin negotiations with Nicaragua or with any other Latin-American country.

A few days ago I offered a joint resolution, merely for the purpose of presenting my views in regard to this matter. I will call attention to the first section of that resolution, which reads:

That the President is authorized to appoint a commission of three members, to be known as the Interoceanic Canal Commission. The commission shall make an investigation for the purpose of determining whether the present Panama Canal is adequate for the traffic which may reasonably be anticipated, and, if additional interoceanic canal facilities are required, whether such facilities can be provided by enlarging or paralleling the Panama Canal. If the commission is of the opinion that it is not practicable so to enlarge or parallel the Panama Canal it shall make a further investigation to determine whether the most feasible location for another interoceanic canal is the proposed Nicaraguan canal route or some other route. The commission shall make a report to the Congress, with its recommendations, upon the completion of such investigations.

That was the authority to be given the proposed commission.

I submit, with all due deference to my friends who are the sponsors for the other joint resolution, that that is as far as we should go, and that it proposes the proper course to be pursued. We should ascertain what the necessity is for enlarging the Panama Canal, whether it can be enlarged, whether it can be paralleled, whether we need another canal in Nicaragua or elsewhere, and, if so, a survey should be made and a report submitted. When such report shall have been submitted, then we will know with whom to deal. If we have not a sufficient concession from Nicaragua we can obtain it. If concessions are needed from Costa Rica or Honduras or other Latin-American States we can obtain them; but I submit that it would be unwise and unfortunate at this time to initiate negotiations with those countries until we know whether we need another canal, where it should be constructed, and the conditions under which its construction should be begun.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, though I followed the Senator from Utah very closely, I can not see any material difference between the views he has expressed and the object sought to be attained by the pending joint resolution. Neither can I see any material difference, excepting as to the formation of the tribunal to secure the information, between the joint resolution which he has introduced and to which he has just referred and the joint resolution which is now pending. His joint resolution provides for the setting up of a new commission of three members, at a compensation not stated, who shall investigate as to the possibility of enlarging the Panama Canal, and likewise the cost and feasibility of the proposed Nicaraguan canal. That is precisely the object of Senate Joint Resolution 117, the difference being—and I think it a practical difference—that under the pending joint resolution we would depend upon the Board of Engineers already employed by the Government rather than upon a new commission.

As has been frequently referred to, a survey was made 27 years ago, or at least a report was transmitted at that time. All of the data in connection with that survey, of course, are now in the custody of the Board of Engineers. There are to-day engineers in the department, with whom I have had the privilege of discussing the subject, who were there during the time of the former investigation or survey. It is a matter of continuity of business that any further survey necessary should be conducted by the engineers of the Government rather than by three new men who have, perhaps, had not particular experience in this work and who, assuming that they have had such experience, would necessarily be compelled to use the material and information now in the custody of the Board of Engineers.

The pending joint resolution very clearly, so far as the survey is concerned, provides for these two responsibilities, namely, a careful investigation as to whether the suggestion that has been made by the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone for enlarging the facilities of the Panama Canal shall be authorized by Congress or shall be adopted. That includes a consideration of the question of providing three locks where there are now two locks. Some time ago I spoke in the Senate at length as to the additional facilities which such an enlargement would provide should it be authorized by Congress; but we have not the slightest idea of the cost of such an improvement; we have no real direct knowledge as to whether it is mechanically wise to make it because the question of sufficient water enters into the operation of three locks to an extent one-third greater than it would in the case of the operation of the two locks. So it is absolutely essential, if Congress is to act intelligently, to have this information so far as the Panama Canal is concerned.

The same argument applies to the proposed Nicaraguan canal. Some thirteen or fourteen years ago, under the Bryan-Chamorro treaty, we paid Nicaragua $3,000,000, but we have done nothing since to ascertain whether it is practicable or feasible to take advantage of the right of way we thus purchased.

The report submitted in 1901, which I have studied with considerable attention, discusses the possibilities from the standpoint necessarily of 1901. Since that time engineers in this country and abroad have been discussing the possibility and the practicability of sea-level canals. A sea-level canal, of course, as the name implies, eliminates all locks, with their great expense and danger of destruction in time of war. All this information, which was not touched upon at all in the report of 1901, or, if so, in a very small way, Congress should have before they even give consideration to the expenditure of millions and hundreds of millions of dollars in improving canal facilities.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. If I interpret his remarks accurately, I think the Senator is not quite correct. Senator Morgan discussed the question of a sea-level canal and its superiority over a lock system. There was spread before the Senate at that time and before Congress a vast amount of information in regard to sea-level canals and lock canals. Some of the surveys went into that subject very fully, and I think that the engineers who examined the situation at that time away back in 1896, 1897, 1898, and 1899, reached the conclusion that a sea-level canal was better than a lock canal. So, if the Senator meant to convey the idea that the sea-level system was not given consideration, I think he is in error, because it was fully considered, and the consensus of opinion was that it was superior to the lock system.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I did not intend to convey the idea that the construction of a sea-level canal was not considered at all.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I am going to ask the Senator from New Jersey if he would not be willing to let this joint resolution go over for consideration until Monday or some other time next week. I am sure there are a number of Senators absent from the Chamber this afternoon who at least are very much interested in this matter.

I think everyone knows that the passage of this joint resolution means that it is the beginning of the first steps in the construction of a new canal or in the enlarging of the Panama Canal. When the Panama Canal was built everyone, of course, concedes that it did confer great benefits upon the country as a whole; but it also imposed very serious burdens upon the people of the interior. I observe that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is now occupying the chair. A manufacturer in Columbus told me not long ago that he absolutely had to move his factory from the city of Columbus so that he could get out on the waterways in order to compete with his rivals; and in the interior there are many industries that have been curtailed and their markets have been partially destroyed because of the advantages their competitors have had.

We have no objection to that, provided this policy of developing the interior waterways of the country shall be carried forward to completion. The incoming administration promises that there will be a great forward movement along this line; but certainly the people from the Middle West ought strenuously to object to any further enlargement of the Panama Canal, or to the building of another canal down there, until the waterway program of the Middle West keeps pace with your southern program.

There are a large number of Senators absent this afternoon who are interested in this measure and who ought to be heard upon it. I think that in the end they probably will vote for this joint resolution; but I feel that they want some assurance that there is going to be a great forward element of this interior program before we begin to enlarge our program in the South.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from South Dakota, I will state that I have no desire to press unduly any measure; but I draw attention to the fact that this joint resolution was reported unanimously by the Committee on Interoceanic Canals on April 9. It has been before the Senate on different occasions many times; and at this time it seems to me there is quite a free opportunity for full discussion. But, beyond that, we are not asking Congress to establish a policy of enlarging the present canal or building a new canal. We are simply asking for information. I disagree with the Senator when he gives the impression that the passage of this measure would in any way commit the Government either to build a Nicaraguan canal or to spend one additional dollar on the Panama Canal. It does not in the slightest degree do either. It secures for us information that we must have sooner or later before we can even discuss it intelligently from the standpoint of policy.

Mr. McMASTER. But everyone knows that the starting of the construction of a new canal or the development of interior waterways always begins with a resolution, and that is followed up very quickly by a bill. Possibly there is no one who has any serious objection to the passage of this resolution, providing it comes a little later on. Let us know what the new administration is going to do in regard to giving encouragement to this other program; but it is absolutely impossible for the Middle West to continue, or for their industries to develop, if you go on constructing more Panama canals without carrying forward this waterway movement in the Middle West.

Mr. EDGE. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota, from the standpoint of an individual Senator, that I join with him absolutely in a complete accord as to the necessity of an all-American or some other type of northern canal.

Mr. McMASTER. Oh, I have not reference only to the northern canal but to the whole system of waterway development and of the interior; and that absolutely has to keep pace with this policy that you have inaugurated for the South.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator whether I am mistaken in thinking that a commission has been appointed to report on the St. Lawrence waterway scheme?

Mr. McMASTER. I think not. Of course, that is only one part of that development.

Mr. SWANSON. All that this measure does is to have the engineers examine and make a report; and it seems to me that a commission was appointed for the St. Lawrence River project.

Mr. EDGE. A joint commission.

Mr. SWANSON. It was directed to make a report; and I do not see why we should not go along with southern development at the same time. I do not see why you should insist that one be investigated and reported on, and the other not.

Mr. McMASTER. But, Mr. President, the Panama Canal has been constructed, and the great interior part of the country has been paying very expensively for the construction of that canal. There is no question about that.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the returns from the canal have not only paid the interest on the bonds——

Mr. EDGE. As a matter of fact, the returns from the Panama Canal to-day pay 7½ per cent interest on the investment.

Mr. McMASTER. I did not intend to make any reference to the income of the Panama Canal. I made the statement that there were industries in the interior part of this country that were forced to change their location and go out on the great waterways of the country in order to continue their existence, and that there were such industries in the State of Ohio as well as in Indiana, Illinois, and all through that section of the country. That is the point I am making.

Mr. SWANSON. Were they not benefited so far as they got cheaper transportation to other parts of the world?

Mr. McMASTER. Does the Senator think it is perfectly proper, then, for all the industries of the Middle West to go out on the coast because they can get cheaper transportation?

Mr. SWANSON. No; but I say that if the railroads are charging them such rates that they can not get to a port and ship out to the markets of the world it is your duty to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission and get reasonable rates.

Mr. McMASTER. But you can not get rates that will confiscate a railroad property.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not say "confiscate."

Mr. McMASTER. Of course, that is an involved subject and I do not propose this afternoon to go into a discussion of those interior rates; but I do think the consideration of this joint resolution ought to go over until next week, until more of the Senators are here and have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield just a moment?

Mr. EDGE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is not every objection that the Senator might possibly make done away with by the proviso that has been offered here, which reads:

Provided, That nothing contained in this resolution shall be construed to bind the United States to build said Nicaragua Canal.

We are just getting information.

Mr. McMASTER. The passage of the joint resolution, if it contains simply instructions to survey and to ascertain the cost, is the stepping-stone, the starting point of the building of a new canal; and every one knows that, and knows that that is just exactly what it means. It is always sugar-coated, of course, with a resolution. A resolution always starts a project of that kind.

Mr. EDGE. We have river and harbor bills, and, of course, there are many surveys asked in different parts of the country. To the best of my recollection there is seldom, if ever, an objection made to such surveys. I differ with the Senator. If this resolution in the slighest degree committed the Government to any policy, he would be entirely justified; but we are simply asking for information that sooner or later we must have, and why put it off? We do not in the slightest degree put forward a determination of policy.

Mr. McMASTER. I think, by putting off a resolution like this we can emphasize the needs of some other parts of the country in such a forceful manner that it will accomplish a great good.

Mr. EDGE. Then, as I understand the Senator's last remark, he simply wishes to hang this joint resolution up in the air in order to force something else? I hardly think that is a fair way to deal with legislation.

Mr. McMASTER. I simply say that there is no use of the interior part of the country continually supporting the building of Panama canals until they develop their own interior waterways, because every time you build a Panama canal you work irreparable injury to the Middle West; and that program can not go on until the development of the interior part of the country corresponds with the development through the Panama Canal.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether the fact that more canals are built will not increase the markets for those parts of the country that are upon the seaboard and remove part of the competition of the interior factories? It only tends to send the products of those that live upon the seaboard farther afield and removes that competition from the interior points.

Mr. McMASTER. Why, we had industries in the Middle West that had markets on the Pacific coast and that had markets nearly to the Atlantic coast. Now your industries on the Pacific coast and the Atlantic coast have competed with those through their cheaper rates, with the consequence that we have lost industries in the Middle West. Was the Senator on the floor when I stated the example from Columbus?

Mr. SACKETT. I was here.

Mr. McMASTER. That is a city in Ohio with 300,000 people.

Mr. SACKETT. Yet there are lots of new industries in Columbus, Ohio.

Mr. McMASTER. They could not compete with any industry that has water transportation.

Mr. SACKETT. But the industries there are increasing by leaps and bounds. Take the statistics of Columbus, Ohio, and the Senator will find that that is so.

Mr. McMASTER. If there is any industry in Columbus, Ohio, that is increasing by leaps and bounds, it is because of the local market; and it does not attempt to compete in the markets where other factories have water transportation.

Mr. SACKETT. No; and the factories that have the water transportation——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that some confusion has arisen here.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. SACKETT. The Senator from Kentucky believes that the wider the markets that can be made for the products of American factories, the better the business will be for all the factories, interior and exterior.

Mr. McMASTER. Providing you develop your interior waterways at the same time, so as to give to each section of the country the same opportunities that other sections enjoy.

Mr. SACKETT. They are being developed right straight along. We are getting them now. The interior development is going on rapidly.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, do I understand that the St. Lawrence River scheme is being advocated, not as a great national issue to help the entire country, but to develop enterprises in certain inland States so as to enable them to compete with coast cities? I had an idea it was for the entire Nation.

Mr. McMASTER. It is for the general commercial development.

Mr. SWANSON. If it is simply designed to build up manufactories and enterprises in the interior to compete with the coast cities, I should like to know it.

Mr. McMASTER. We have an idea that it is perfectly proper to have an industry occasionally in the interior. We do not feel that the coast cities have a mortgage upon all the industries, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. EDGE. I do not want to stop the colloquy, but I should like to proceed in order if I can.

Mr. McMASTER. I am going to ask the chairman of the committee to let this bill go over until Monday, until there are more Senators in the Chamber.

Mr. EDGE. I will answer the Senator in a few minutes, if I can at least have the attention of the Senate to perfect the joint resolution by offering and endeavoring to have adopted the three or four amendments that have been more or less generally agreed to on the floor.

On page 5, the first amendment, after the word "Governments," strike out the language "whenever the Government of the United States shall notify the Government of Nicaragua of its desire or intention to construct such canal, the President of the United States is," and insert in its place:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations for an agreement upon the details of the terms under which such canal may be constructed, operated, and maintained: Provided, That nothing contained in this resolution shall be construed to bind the United States to build said Nicaraguan canal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After what line does that amendment begin?

Mr. EDGE. Line 1, page 5, after the word "Governments." I have read the entire amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will please state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 1, after the word "Governments," it is proposed to insert a period and to strike out down to and including the word "agree," in line 7, and insert the following:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations for an agreement—

So as to read:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations for an agreement upon the details of the terms under which such canal may be constructed, operated, and maintained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it would be well if the clerk read the rest of that paragraph.

Mr. EDGE. I have made it all one amendment, if the Secretary will read the balance of the amendment, because it is all one:

Provided, That nothing contained in this resolution shall be construed to bind the United States to build said Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. McMASTER], I understand that he has made a reasonable request that this joint resolution may go over until next week. If that course shall be pursued, I shall not debate the amendment which the Senator from New Jersey now offers, but will have no objection to its being accepted pro forma, with the understanding that opportunity to amend it or to strike it out be afforded when the resolution shall be finally under consideration.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I had intended, after perfecting the joint resolution so that it could be reprinted and thoroughly understood, to accept the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota that the final consideration of it go over, with the understanding that I may have on Monday, if time and opportunity permit, a chance to continue the discussion.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope no agreement will be made for Monday. We want to take up on Monday the appropriation bill that is ready for consideration.

Mr. EDGE. I do not want to interfere with the appropriation bill, but if we can have a gentleman's agreement—I shall not ask for unanimous consent—that time will be given for further consideration of this joint resolution early next week I shall be satisfied.

Mr. CURTIS. That will be all right.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that, and I think it is a very wise conclusion to be reached. But I desire to have the Senator agree with me, so far as he can, that opportunity will not be denied to amend the joint resolution by reason of his raising the point of order that an amendment is in the third degree.

Mr. EDGE. Certainly not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that when the resolution reaches the Senate opportunity for amendment will still be open.

Mr. KING. Of course; but I prefer to offer my amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey and reported by the clerk.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDGE. Now, I ask the clerk to read section 5 for the amendments already printed.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the proposed amendment, section 5, on page 5, line 10, it is proposed, after the word "having," to strike out the comma and to insert the word "incorporated"; on line 11, after the word "its," to insert the words "resolution advising and consenting to"; on line 13, after the word "aforesaid" and the comma, to insert the words "a declaration"; on the same line, to strike out the words "inserted the words, 'it is declared by the Senate'"; on line 21, after the word "and," to strike out the word "directed" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "empowered"; on page 6, line 3, to strike out "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$150,000," so as to read:

SEC. 5. The Senate of the United States having incorporated in its resolution advising and consenting to ratification of the treaty with Nicaragua, as aforesaid, a declaration "that in advising and consenting to the ratification of the said convention as amended such advice and consent are given with the understanding, to be expressed as a part of the instrument of ratification, that nothing in said convention is intended to affect any existing right of any of the said named States," namely, Costa Rica, Salvador, and Honduras, the President is authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations with said States and determine whether they, or any of them, have any interest in said proposed canal.

SEC. 6. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150,000, to be expended by the Secretary of War for the purposes of this resolution and to remain available until expended; and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such additional sums as may be necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 7. The President is requested to report to the Congress, as soon as practicable, the results of the investigation and survey, together with such recommendations in connection therewith as he deems advisable.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. EDGE. I propose another amendment—in section 7, page 2, line 9, after the word "practicable," to insert the words "not later than two years."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDGE. A parliamentary inquiry. Has the amendment on page 4, section 4, line 14, been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been considered, and the clerk will report the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, line 14, at the beginning of the sentence, to strike out the word "That."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDGE. I now request that the joint resolution be reprinted in its amended form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution will be reprinted in its amended form.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, January 14, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Merciful Father, whose love passeth knowledge and whose peace passeth understanding, to whom all sons of men are dear, help us to realize that we are members one of another, for Thou hast made of one blood all nations of mankind. Purge away the vanity, intolerance, and unforgiving spirit which keep us far apart; and since man's need is one, grant that the spirit of the Christ may break down all barriers and answer the desire of all nations. May we never be content with aught that excludes another from the fullness of Thy grace or the welcome of Thy heart, and do Thou make us faithful and true followers of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, January 7, 1929, when, on request of Mr. JONES and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting, pursuant to law, a schedule of papers on the files of the Post Office Department not needed in the transaction of public business and having no permanent value or historic interest, and asking for action looking toward their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. MOSES and Mr. MCKELLAR members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers on the files of the Navy Department no longer needed in the transaction of public business and having no permanent value or historic interest, and asking for action looking toward their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Vice President appointed Mr. HALE and Mr. SWANSON members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the nature of a memorial, I present a concurrent resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Michigan on the question of reapportionment. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A concurrent resolution relative to reapportionment of the National House of Representatives

Whereas the Constitution of the United States requires Congress to reapportion the seats in the House of Representatives to the various States, according to their respective numbers, following each decennial census; and

Whereas the Congress, prior to 1920, has invariably complied with the constitutional provisions covering this subject, so that the next succeeding Congress might be rightfully represented in numbers, based upon the population of the several States; and

Whereas each succeeding Congress has, since 1920, failed to make such reapportionment of districts, which failure has resulted in the disfranchisement of a large number of citizens in many of the States, among which is the State of Michigan, and has brought about a condition of disproportionate representation in the House of Representatives; and

Whereas this condition has resulted in accumulative discontent among the citizens of the States so discriminated against: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we, the representatives of the people of the State of Michigan, assembled in regular session, do most earnestly urge the immediate performance of this duty; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Hon. Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States; to the Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, Speaker of the House of Representatives; to the Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, United States Senator from Michigan; to the Hon. JAMES COUZENS, United States Senator from Michigan; the Hon. JOHN Q. TILSON, Member of Congress, and all of the Michigan Members of the lower House of Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution shall be forwarded to the members of the several legislatures now in session, urging them to take similar action: California, Ohio, New Jersey, Connecticut, North Carolina, and Texas.

Mr. BLAINE presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of La Crosse, Wis., favoring the prompt ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which was ordered to lie on the table.

SABINE RIVER BRIDGE, TEXAS

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 15067) authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River where Louisiana Highway No. 21 meets Texas Highway No. 45, and I submit a report (No. 1428) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Louisiana Highway Commission and the State Highway Commission of Texas be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Sabine River, between Vernon Parish, La., and Newton County, Tex., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, where Louisiana Highway No. 21 meets Texas Highway No. 45, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Louisiana Highway Commission and the State Highway Commission of Texas all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 4. The act of Congress approved May 29, 1928, authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct a bridge across the Sabine River at or near Burr Ferry, La., is hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

S. 21, p. 38) and to give the consent of Congress to said States to enter into a compact with each other and with the United States relating to such subject matter; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 197) providing for the placement of ex-service women in the new barracks at Sawtelle, Calif.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXAMINATION AND RATING OF FLYING SCHOOLS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill which is very brief. I ask to have the clerk read it, and then I shall ask to explain it for about a minute.

The bill (S. 5350) to amend the air commerce act of 1926 with reference to the examination and rating of schools giving instruction in flying, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 (d) of the air commerce act of 1926 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and adding a semicolon and the following: "and provide for the annual examination and rating of civilian schools giving instruction in flying as to the adequacy of the course of instruction, as to the suitability and airworthiness of the equipment, and as to the competency of the instructors."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill referred to the Committee on Commerce, and I should like to request the chairman of the committee to secure action on it at the earliest possible moment, for this reason: Within the last 12 months the number of flying schools all over the country has increased by leaps and bounds. I am sure that practically every Senator receives frequent requests from his constituents to know what are the good schools to which they can send their sons and daughters who desire to learn to fly. There is at the present time no way of telling, except by the use of some well-known name in connection therewith, whether a school is reputable or not. Many of the smaller schools have very fine equipment, the best pilots, and an excellent course of instruction, but they are overshadowed by schools that have more money with which to advertise.

The amendment to the air commerce act which the bill proposes provides that the Secretary of Commerce may upon request rate a school so that we may know what are the schools of the highest rating and what are those of lesser rating. It is not obligatory any more than the rating of airports is obligatory. It puts the flying schools in the same position we now put, so far as the law is concerned, air navigation facilities, pilots, and planes. I hope that the bill may be passed at an early date, for this is the one lack in our legislation which is most seriously felt at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GRAND TETON NATIONAL PARK

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4674) to establish the Grand Teton National Park in the State of Wyoming, to revise the boundary of the Yellowstone National Park in the States of Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN NATIONAL PARK OR RESERVATION

Mr. KEYES. There was recently referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (S. 5228) to provide for the improvement and preservation of the land and buildings of the Abraham Lincoln National Park or Reservation. By the act creating this park or reservation it is placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War, and, after consulting the author of the bill, we agreed that it should have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I now ask that it be so referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and it will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CASUALTIES IN ARMY AND NAVY AVIATION

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which I should like to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 296), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be requested to transmit to the Senate a list of fatalities in the aviation service of the Army and Navy during the past five years, the causes for each accident, and what, if anything, is needed in the way of legislation or appropriation to make safe and more efficient this important arm of the naval and military service.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution. I desire to say to the Senate that I am not intending to be critical or to seek in any way to reflect upon the Air Service of the Army or Navy. It must be admitted, however, that there have been a good many fatal accidents recently.

The statement has been made that there are more accidents proportionately in the Army and Navy aviation than in commercial aviation. I do not believe that to be true, but in order that the country may be at rest regarding the matter I think that we should have the facts and present them to the country. Certainly the Senate is entitled to have the information. I have therefore asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as I gather from hearing the resolution read it calls for more than the facts; it calls for the opinion, and so forth, of the Secretary of War and Secretary of Navy. I am in hearty sympathy with the general purpose of the resolution, but it rather seems to me that it goes beyond calling for the facts.

Mr. COPELAND. I sympathize with what the Senator from Washington said, but I think the Senate is entitled to have the opinion of each Secretary as to what we should do, if anything, to make the aviation service safer. I can not see any reason at all why we should hesitate about it. We are not asking for an appropriation. We are simply asking that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall inform us about the accidents, what conclusions they have reached as to the causes of the accidents, and what recommendations they have in the way of legislation or appropriation to make safer this important service.

Mr. JONES. I suggest to the Senator that the committee might want to call for more than the resolution specifies, if it is going to call for recommendations from the Secretaries. I shall have to ask that the resolution may go over for the day.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator to what committee he thinks the resolution should be referred?

Mr. JONES. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COPELAND. I have asked both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to report.

Mr. JONES. It ought to go to one or the other of those committees. If we are to ask the Secretary of the Navy to report, it ought to be in a separate resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. I can not see why the Senator should hesitate a moment.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator would confine his resolution to inquiring for the facts, there would be no objection whatever, but practically all resolutions calling for the opinion of a Secretary, going beyond asking for the facts, should go to the table for a day or else go to a committee.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I make this suggestion? I am asking that each Secretary send us a list of the fatal accidents——

Mr. JONES. That is all right.

Mr. COPELAND. And why those accidents occurred.

Mr. JONES. That is all right, too.

Mr. COPELAND. The third point is what suggestions they have to offer in the way of legislation or appropriation to make the Air Service safer.

Mr. JONES. It has been the general rule of the Senate to confine resolutions that are to be passed without reference to a committee to an inquiry as to the facts.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; if it will facilitate the end I have in mind, I shall be glad to omit from my resolution the advice asked as to what should be done, and to ask merely for a list of the fatalities and the reasons.

Mr. JONES. I would have no objection to the immediate consideration of such a resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, let us have the resolution read again as it is now proposed to amend it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the proposed amended resolution.

The CHIEF CLERK. As modified the resolution reads:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be requested to transmit to the Senate a list of the fatalities in the Aviation Service of the Army and the Navy during the past five years, and the causes for each accident.

As originally submitted the following words appeared in the resolution after the word "accident":

And what, if anything, is needed in the way of legislation or appropriation to make safe and more efficient this important arm of the naval and military service.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it seems to me that latter language is the most important part of the resolution, because I think if there is anything the Congress needs to do now it is to protect the lives of the fine fighting boys in the aviation service. They are being killed at terrific rate. Eight of them were killed the other day in the same machine. What is the matter with the machines in which they are flying, or is it the fault of the engine? What is the trouble?

I dare say such a thing as that never would have occurred in the air service of Germany. Eight fine young men would not have been permitted to go up in a plane about which there was any question whatsoever. It is a terrible thing, a shocking thing, a tragic thing in the life of our country.

The Senator from New York is entirely right in his position. He wants a list given of the casualties; he wants to have the Senate and the country told something about why these boys have been killed; and he wants the judgment of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as to why they were killed and to know whether they have any suggestions to make as to how to prevent the killing of other boys in the service.

We want to get action. Why should not the Secretary of War be permitted to say, "In my judgment, if such-and-such a thing were done, we would not have these accidents." What harm can come if the Secretary of the Army or the Secretary of the Navy expresses his opinion about it? We have them in those positions for the purpose of studying conditions of this sort and making recommendations to us. They certainly ought to be informed, and they ought to have opinions. Why should not they give those opinions to us?

I would like to see the resolution passed just as it was introduced. This, it seems to me, is an emergency matter. The killing of these fine American boys is no small matter. Eight of the best-equipped men, probably, in the whole service were killed in one accident. Mr. President, I do not think we can act too quickly in a positive way to put down this awful slaughter of our boys in the aviation service.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I would not have the Senate feel that my purpose is a critical one. It is not. I have had the feeling, in view of my conversation with many men in aviation outside of the Army and Navy, that there are devices which could be used and that expenditures are required which would make this very important service a safer and more efficient one. It was my purpose in presenting the resolution to find out from those in authority whether or not there is any legislation and whether or not additional appropriations may be needed for this specific purpose. The officers of the Government are embarrassed about making recommendations directly to Congress because of our relation to the Budget; and yet here is a thing that has to do with the protection of human life.

It is not right to let these young men go out in airplanes unless the airplanes are safe and efficient and up to date in a mechanical way and in perfect condition. If the Congress should enact proper legislation or should make sufficient appropriations for this service, we should be told so in set terms. It is not right at all that these young men should be endangered in life and limb by reason of our failure to act. That was my purpose in presenting the resolution.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to make this suggestion: A resolution calling on the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War for opinions, and so forth, I have no doubt, if referred to the committee to-day, would probably be reported to-morrow; but it has not heretofore been the practice of the Senate immediately to adopt resolutions calling for opinions and recommendations, though it has been the practice to adopt resolutions calling for facts. I have no objection to the adoption of such a resolution as this, and am in hearty sympathy with the suggestions of the Senator. There is nothing now to prevent the Secretary from sending recommendations to Congress for legislation; but to adopt this resolution immediately calling for recommendations and so on is so contrary to the practice of the Senate that I do not think it ought to be done.

As I have suggested, I think the Committee on Military Affairs or the Naval Affairs Committee would have no hesitation in recommending this resolution, either in the form in which the Senator presents it or with amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. I know the fair-mindedness of the Senator from Washington, and I have no objection to the resolution taking the course he suggests, provided there shall not be delay. I know how busy the committees now are. If there is reasonable hope or expectation that we may have the resolution reported back speedily, I have no objection to the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. JONES. Let me suggest that the Senator modify his resolution by striking out the latter part of it. We could then adopt the first part of the resolution calling for information, and the Senator could present another resolution calling on the Secretary for recommendations, and so forth. I can see no reason why the committee should not act promptly on such a resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York that in view of the fact that the Senator from Washington wishes the resolution referred to a committee, I think merely a day's delay will not be material. I should like to see the resolution passed just as it is. I think the Senator could have the resolution reported by the committee to-morrow, should it be referred, and that we could then get action on it.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it the idea of the Senator from Alabama that the resolution should go to the committee, expecting a report on it?

Mr. HEFLIN. I should think so.

Mr. COPELAND. To what committee does the Senator think it should be referred?

Mr. HEFLIN. To the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES. As the resolution is framed, I think it could be appropriately referred either to the Naval or the Military Committee. The resolution calls upon both departments for information, and I think it might just as well be referred to one committee as the other. It would really be better if the Senator wants a report both from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to offer two separate resolutions. Then one would go to the Military Affairs Committee and the other to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COPELAND. Then I assume that the Senator entertains the hope that from either one committee or the other we would get an immediate report.

Mr. JONES. I think that the Senator would get a prompt report from both those committees.

Mr. COPELAND. In that event I have no objection, and, with the consent of the Senate, will divide my resolution into two, and ask that in each instance it be referred to the proper committee.

Mr. HALE. I should like to suggest to the Senator that he leave the resolution as it is now and have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That is very commonly done in a bill affecting both services.

Mr. COPELAND. Is the Committee on Military Affairs more competent than is the Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. HALE. No; but I have been suffering from an attack of grippe and I shall not be able to be here this afternoon to hold a meeting of the Naval Committee. I am sure that such a course would be entirely satisfactory. I have no objection whatever to the Senator's resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say that it does not seem to me that the Senator from Washington is quite correct in stating that this resolution ought to go to a committee. If the Senator from New York will let the resolution lie over one day we could pass it to-morrow without its even going to a committee.

Personally, I can see no objection whatever to the request for facts and for information. My faith in what the Army and the Navy have recently been doing in the way of military and naval aeronautics is such that I know that there is nothing to conceal. The record of both departments with regard to the loss of life and the number of fatal accidents from flying is better than that of any other service in the world. There is nothing to be gained by having the committee pass upon the matter. I suggest to the Senator from New York, if the Senator from Washington still feels that the resolution ought not to be acted on immediately, that he permit the resolution to lie over a day, and that we consider it to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that the Senator from Washington withdraw his objection and that we act on the resolution to-day.

Mr. JONES. No; I can not do that. Let me suggest to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] that this resolution as originally introduced goes further than he has suggested. It does not call alone for the facts regarding accidents and the causes of them, but it calls for such recommendations for legislation as the respective Secretaries might desire to recommend. The Secretaries can submit recommendations now without the passage of a resolution. I think if it should be desired to adopt this resolution calling for recommendations the committee might ask for additional information, and so on.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say to the Senator from Washington that while it is true that the Secretaries of War and the Navy may make recommendations, if the recommendations call for appropriations of which the Budget Bureau does not approve, then the Secretaries can not make the recommendations.

Mr. JONES. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy can recommend legislation without consulting the Budget Bureau or anybody else. For legislative action we are under no obligation to call on the Budget Bureau, and they are under no obligation to ask the Budget Bureau whether or not legislation shall be passed.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the resolution also calls, does it not, for a suggestion as to whether appropriations are needed? The Senator will remember that there have been several occasions in recent years when appropriations for new engines to take the place of the old Liberty motors were made before the committee as a result of questions asked by members of the committee; that the committee recommended and the Senate provided for such appropriations, but my recollection is that the House conferees would not agree to the appropriations which were needed in order to provide entirely new motors.

Mr. JONES. That was not a case of an authorization but an appropriation. The Secretary can recommend authorizations without conferring with the Budget if he desires to do so.

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly. I understood that this resolution also called for the Secretaries to report on the necessity of appropriations.

Mr. JONES. They can report on the necessity of appropriations, but it is up to Congress to authorize them.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it seems to me, if the Senator submitting the resolution is willing to have it lie over, that we should take that action, and proceed, as I wish to do, to the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. I wish to say that we are now half way through the session and have passed only two appropriation bills. They have been somewhat more active on the House side, and such bills are coming now to the Senate almost four or five at once, but are clogged in the Senate. We can not afford to spend time on the smaller matters, it seems to me, until we get further along with some of the appropriation bills.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from New York is perfectly willing to let the resolution go to the committee.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. This discussion does not seem to be getting anywhere. Senators seem to be just about as far apart, if not farther apart, than when they began, and I feel bound, under the circumstances, to object, unless some agreement can be reached regarding the disposition of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over under the rule.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

Mr. REED of Missouri. As in open executive session, I ask leave to submit a resolution. I do not ask to have it acted upon at this time, but I simply want to have it in form and before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Is it likely to create debate?

Mr. REED of Missouri. There will be no debate at all. I merely wish to submit it as in open executive session, so that it will be in order and so that it may be in the RECORD this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Missouri submits a resolution as in open executive session.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That in view of the importance of the pending treaty (the so-called Kellogg-Briand treaty) and in view of the many different interpretations which have been placed upon said treaty by Members of the Senate, and also in view of the fact that the Committee on Foreign Relations has not made any report giving its reasons for recommending ratification, the committee is respectfully requested to report to the Senate as soon as possible its views as to the proper interpretation of the treaty.

LEASING OF CUMBERLAND FALLS FOR POWER PURPOSES

Mr. NYE. I send to the desk a Senate resolution which I ask to have read, and then I shall ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 297) was read, as follows:

Whereas application, now pending before the Federal Power Commission, has been filed by the Cumberland Hydroelectric Power Co. for a lease of the Great Falls of the Cumberland River for the purpose of constructing a storage reservoir and power development; and

Whereas the Cumberland Hydroelectric Power Co. is controlled by the Insull power interests, which, through various subsidiaries, have filed applications with the Federal Power Commission for 19 additional power sites on the Cumberland and Kentucky Rivers and their tributaries, which the report of the executive secretary declares "cover the greater part of the power possibilities of the two chief streams of Kentucky"; and

Whereas the 20 power sites thus sought are estimated by the commission's engineers to be capable of producing from 1,700,000,000 to 2,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity per year, and their lease to this closely affiliated group of corporations would give the Insull power interests a practical monopoly of the hydroelectric power of the State of Kentucky; and

Whereas the Great Falls of the Cumberland are stated by responsible authorities to be of exceptional beauty and scenic value, second only to Niagara among the water falls of the East; and

Whereas the Director of the National Park Service has declared, after personal investigation, that the Cumberland Falls should be preserved, and the national conference on the State parks has repeatedly adopted resolutions urging their preservation; and

Whereas the American Civic Association, the National Audubon Society, the Izaak Walton League, the Camp Fire Club of America, and other national organizations, with hundreds of thousands of members, have taken official action directed to the same end; and

Whereas leading newspapers of Kentucky and Ohio, including the Louisville Courier-Journal, Louisville Times, Cleveland Press, Cincinnati Post, Cincinnati Enquirer, and Cincinnati Times-Star, have as a result of their independent investigations editorially denounced the proposed lease and urged the preservation of the natural scenic beauty of the falls; and

Whereas at a meeting of the various organizations of Ohio and Kentucky held at Cincinnati on November 27, 1928, resolutions were adopted and filed with the Federal Power Commission, embodying substantially the facts set forth above and respectfully requesting that the Hon. Roy O. West should not sit as a member of the Federal Power Commission in view of his former interest in and close association with the Insull power corporations; and

Whereas in spite of these and other protests the Hon. Roy O. West did participate in the hearings upon the Cumberland Falls and other Kentucky projects held at Washington upon December 5, 1928: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Power Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate all protests of individuals, organizations, and public officials which it may have received in opposition to the leasing of Cumberland Falls for power development or to the participation of the Hon. Roy O. West in the consideration of this and other leases.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection to the immediate passage of this resolution.

Mr. WARREN. The matter is out of order. Unless it can be passed immediately, without debate, I shall have to object to it.

Mr. NYE. I so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest that the resolution lie over. It is a very long resolution.

Mr. NYE. The resolution itself is embodied in one paragraph, and simply calls for the transmission to the Senate of all protests which have been filed with the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. JONES. Yes, I know; but the "whereases" upon which the resolution are based are rather long, and I will say to the Senator that I have heard a couple of Senators say they did not catch them from the reading. I suggest that the Senator allow the resolution to lie over for a day. There may not be any objection to it then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over, under the rule.

CONTINUING SPECIAL INVESTIGATIONS BY SENATE COMMITTEES

Mr. FRAZIER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 298), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolutions heretofore agreed to during the present Congress authorizing special investigations by the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and the special committee investigating expenditures in senatorial primary and general elections, hereby are continued in full force and effect until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress, unless final report of their proceedings be made to the Senate before such time.

JOHN W. CLEAVENGER, DECEASED

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to restore to its place on the calendar House bill 4280, which was indefinitely postponed on a report made by me. The bill had been before the Committee on Military Affairs. New evidence has developed; the request which I am now making was presented to the Military Affairs Committee, and they unanimously gave me authority to ask that the bill be restored to the calendar in order that action might be taken. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the bill to which I have referred may be restored to its place on the calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I did not understand the Senator's request. I should like to know what it is; I could not hear the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent to restore to its place on the calendar the bill (H. R. 4280) to correct the military record of John W. Cleavenger, deceased, which was indefinitely postponed several months ago. This is a matter which I took up before the Military Affairs Committee on the new evidence which has been presented, and the Military Affairs Committee authorized me to submit the request which I have now made.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator does not propose to discuss it or to ask for the passage of the bill this morning?

Mr. BLACK. Not at the present time; I merely desire to have the bill restored to its place on the calendar.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be restored to the calendar.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent to take up H. R. 15848, the first deficiency appropriation bill, and I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to make a statement. There is an appropriation provided for in the bill of $75,000,000 for tax refunds.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, had we not better get the bill up before we debate it?

Mr. McKELLAR. I object to its coming up if the Senator is not willing to have me make the statement.

Mr. WARREN. Then I move to take it up.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am reserving the right to object. I think I have a right to be heard and I expect to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator can be heard after the bill is up, certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think I have a right to be heard now, and I desire to make a statement about the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I make the point that the Senator is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to state to the Senator from Wyoming that on Monday, which is calendar day, his motion would be out of order. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, Mr. President, I desire to make a statement, if I may.

The principal provision in the bill is a provision of $75,000,000 for additional tax refunds for this year. The Committee on the Judiciary has reported favorably a bill introduced by me putting in the hands of the Board of Tax Appeals all tax refunds in excess of $10,000. I propose to offer this bill, favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee, as an amendment to the appropriation bill. Under the rules I have a right to do that. That bill has just been reported this morning. The report has not been printed. The amended bill as reported by the committee has not been printed.

Mr. WARREN. The report has been printed.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; neither the bill nor the report has been printed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely.

Mr. NORRIS. Both of the Senators are right in one sense; and if the Senator will permit me, I should like to state the correct parliamentary situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield; certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that business be suspended until the Senate is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please be in order, and this applies to the occupants of the galleries the same as to Members of the body.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is a very important matter, and I hope Senators will listen to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Tennessee introduced his bill first several days ago. The Judiciary Committee acted on it. They directed that the bill be reported to the Senate, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] was designated by the chairman of the committee to make the report, with several amendments. That report was made day before yesterday. This morning the committee again had the matter up for consideration at their meeting, and the committee were convinced that some amendments ought to be made to the bill that were not made. We found on examining the records of the committee that after the bill had been reported from the committee and put on the calendar the Senator from Tennessee reintroduced the bill in the form the committee had recommended.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the form the committee had first recommended.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. In order to get the further amendments that the Judiciary Committee thought ought to be put on the bill we reported this morning the second bill that the Senator introduced on the same subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. So on that particular bill the report has not been printed, and will not be until to-morrow. The first report has been printed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Nor has the bill as amended by the committee yet been printed, because there are a considerable number of amendments, and a clean bill has to be reported in order to have it accurately before the Senate.

Under those circumstances it seems to me the deficiency bill should be considered to-morrow. I say that for the reason that there is already before the Senate the Interior Department appropriation bill, which has not yet been acted upon. We could act on the Interior Department appropriation bill to-day during the morning hour, in the time that we have between now and 2 o'clock. I want to say, however, that the question involved in these refunds is such an important question and the hearings which have been had are so very important that it seems to me the Senate ought to have the bill and the report of the committee before it before action is taken on it.

If the Senator from Wyoming desires to go as far as agreeing to all of the bill except the proposed amendments to the refund section I am perfectly willing to go that far and let that matter go over until to-morrow; but unless the Senator is willing to accept the amendments as reported out by the Judiciary Committee I am not willing to have the matter voted on during the morning hour to-day, and in that I think I am acting reasonably and with due consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator on that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The final amendments of the Judiciary Committee have not yet been printed. I do not think this bill ought to be taken up with the understanding that they will be agreed to, because that is hardly fair to those who have not had an opportunity even to read the amendments we have reported this morning.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course. That is what I am asking—that the matter may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has said that he would be willing to take it up for action on the unobjected amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would. I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and I want to do everything possible to expedite the consideration of the appropriation bills.

Mr. NORRIS. As far as I am concerned, I am a member of the Judiciary Committee, and I am favorable to the amendments that we reported this morning; but I should hardly like to ask other Senators here to adopt them before they have been printed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can understand that.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that would hardly be fair, and I do not think we ought to take up the matter to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the chairman of the committee again to let us take up the appropriation bill for the Interior Department and pass upon that to-day, and let this bill go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object to the request for unanimous consent to consider the deficiency appropriation bill at this time?

Mr. McKELLAR. I object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, of course I can not consent to put a bill over until it is first before us. I understood the Presiding Officer to rule that this was calendar day, and that I was out of order in moving to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill. I beg to differ with the Presiding Officer, because our rules provide for the taking up of appropriation bills before any other matter whenever they are so moved; but I do not care to make any point of that.

As to the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, of course the reports are here, all made out last Friday and Saturday. The Senator was provided with one hundred and odd copies, and I understood that he put them on the desks of different Senators. I hope he has done so. As I remarked a few moments ago, while it is possible that the Interior Department bill, in charge of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], is not finished and can be taken up, yet there is no reason why every other bill should lie over when we have only two appropriation bills completed at this session, and we have nine more still here, very important ones. So these moves to delay simply mean that we do not pass the supply bills, all of which we are supposed to pass before the end of the session.

I want to cooperate with the Senator from Tennessee; but his motion to delay seems to me hardly to bear out the proposition of intention to finish the appropriation bills before the close of this session. I do not think it is necessary to delay from day to day, because the Senator never lacks words and arguments, and is very forceful and enthusiastic in his advocacy of the matters which he presents. I shall have a great deal of pleasure in listening to whatever he may have to say; but I do not feel like agreeing to lay the bill over. I should be glad to proceed at once with the consideration of the bill and take up the unobjected matters. Two matters are objected to, I understand, one of which is the amendments, some five in number, of the Senator from Tennessee; the other is the matter of my friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I should be glad to take up the others. It will take only a few minutes, probably.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to take up the deficiency appropriation bill for the purpose of acting on the unobjected amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar, under Rule VIII.

Mr. MOSES. We shall have very few Mondays between now and the 4th of March, and there are many pieces of business on the calendar in which a great many Senators are interested. I do not see why the Senators who are interested in this bill can not let us go on with the calendar for an hour and a quarter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we ought to do that, because we are well up on our appropriation bills—better than usual.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows that at 2 o'clock we shall have to lay it aside. Of course, if it is the intention of my friend from New Hampshire, as was done in the case of the Senator from New Hampshire two years ago, to delay these bills and not pass them at all——

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I can not be put in that position.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will probably remember what happened two years ago to the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. MOSES. Indeed, I do; but I am on an entirely different footing.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator does not want that to happen again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McKELLAR. In view of what the Senator from Nebraska said, I feel compelled to object.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order. The clerk will report the first bill on the calendar.

The first business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting war, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who introduced the joint resolution, is not present, and I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 1414) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cottonseed oil by regulating transactions on futures exchanges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1728) placing service postmasters in the classified service was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1266) to create in the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor a division of safety was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], I know, would like to be present when this bill is taken up. In his absence, I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 759) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in common-law actions was announced as next in order.

Mr. SACKETT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2864) to establish the standard of weights and measures for the following wheat-mill, rye-mill, and corn-mill products, namely, flours, semolina, hominy, grits, and meals, and all commercial feeding stuffs, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1093) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ROLL CALL

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we are on the calendar, and that a number of Senators are not present who do not know that the calendar is now being taken up, it seems to me that we ought to have a quorum call. Unless the leaders object, I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	La Follette	Schall
Barkley	Fletcher	Larrazolo	Sheppard
Bayard	Frazier	McKellar	Shipstead
Bingham	George	McMaster	Shortridge
Black	Gillett	McNary	Simmons
Blaine	Glass	Metcalf	Smoot
Blease	Goff	Moses	Steck
Borah	Gould	Neely	Steiwer
Bratton	Greene	Norbeck	Stephens
Brookhart	Hale	Norris	Swanson
Broussard	Harris	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Bruce	Harrison	Oddie	Thomas, Okla.
Burton	Hastings	Overman	Trammell
Capper	Hawes	Phipps	Tydings
Caraway	Hayden	Pine	Vandenberg
Copeland	Heflin	Pittman	Wagner
Couzens	Johnson	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Deneen	Jones	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Dill	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Edge	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Edwards	King	Sackett	Wheeler

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate owing to illness in his family.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. I would like to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent on account of illness.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is necessarily absent on account of threatened illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. TYSON] is absent because of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. DENEEN. I desire to announce that my colleague is absent from the city, and will not return until Wednesday. I ask that this statement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, Senate bill 1728, Order of Business 325, was passed over a moment ago. It is a bill to place service postmasters in the classified service. That means civil-service postmasters, not military postmasters. I desire to move to proceed to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill was passed over, and the clerk is about to call Order of Business 507.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is not a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the only thing the Senator could do would be to ask unanimous consent to return to it.

Mr. BROOKHART. I ask unanimous consent that we may return to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. BLEASE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) requesting the President to immediately withdraw the armed forces of the United States from Nicaragua was announced as next in order. The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations adversely.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2679) to limit the period for which an officer appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate may hold over his term shall have expired was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1263) to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 173) expressing it as the sense of the Senate that Andrew W. Mellon should resign as Secretary of the Treasury was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 1748) relating to the qualifications of jurors in the Federal courts was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3151) to limit the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) to declare the 11th day of November, celebrated and known as Armistice Day, a legal holiday was announced as next in order. The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary adversely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Did anyone object to the consideration of the joint resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thought he heard some one object, but does not know who it was.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the measure?

Mr. SMOOT. It is to create another national holiday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution was adversely reported.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the Senator from Utah want to have it passed?

Mr. SMOOT. It was reported adversely.

Mr. BLEASE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over, under objection.

The bill (S. 1729) extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the third class, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES

The bill (S. 742) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Washington if at some time during the session he will not attempt to get action on this bill?

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator, frankly, that I do not see what possibility there is of getting action on it during this session.

Mr. COPELAND. It is a very important bill.

Mr. JONES. I know it is, and I think it ought to pass, but I have hopes that it will be incorporated, at least substantially, in the tariff legislation that will come up during the extra session. I see no possibility of getting it up during this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BUREAU OF PROHIBITION

The bill (S. 1995) placing certain employees of the Bureau of Prohibition in the classified service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HELEN F. GRIFFIN

The bill (S. 1215) for the relief of Helen F. Griffin was announced as next in order. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims adversely.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, that is a bill which was introduced by the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and at each call of the calendar he has asked that it go over instead of being indefinitely postponed. Therefore, in his behalf, I now ask that it be restored to its place on the calendar, and go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be restored to its place on the calendar and will go over.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

The bill (S. 2901) to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

NICARAGUA CANAL

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, in view of the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER], repeated this morning, I am not going to make the motion I would otherwise have made, to take this measure up during the morning hour, with the hope, and tacit understanding, at least, that on Wednesday the parliamentary situation will be such that we can consider the joint resolution. I shall not call it up to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

MUNICIPAL WATERSHEDS IN THE NATIONAL FORESTS

The bill (S. 2097) to provide for the protection of municipal watersheds within the national forests was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. JONES. With respect to that bill, I have had several inquiries from my State. I have looked it over very hurriedly and I can see no possible objection to it. It seems to be a very desirable and very necessary bill to be passed. I do not know who made the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill went over on the objection of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON].

Mr. BRATTON. I desire to investigate the measure further before the bill is passed.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator will do so soon.

Mr. BRATTON. I shall do that at once.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3458) to create the reserve division of the War Department, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1625) to fix the salaries of the members of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1945) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes, approved July 11, 1916," and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. The bill provides for the expenditure of only $50,000,000. Of course, that is not very much, but I think we had better let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1718) to authorize the President to detail engineers of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture to assist the governments of the Latin American Republics in highway matters was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1294) to suppress unfair and fraudulent practices in the marketing of perishable agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. I have an understanding with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] regarding this bill, and it will be entirely agreeable to him if it goes over to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1762) granting consent to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from Rincon Hill to a point near the South Mole of San Antonio Estuary, in the county of Alameda, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. The junior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] is absent, and at his request I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2475) to create a prosperity reserve and to stabilize industry and employment by the expansion of public works during periods of unemployment and industrial depression was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess I did not anticipate that we would proceed with the calendar this morning. I have several amendments to the bill, which I have not had time to perfect. I thought we would proceed with consideration of the treaty this morning. I shall prepare the amendments and submit them to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] within the next day or two.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator will do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 11074) to promote the agriculture of the United States by expanding in the foreign field the service now rendered by the United States Department of Agriculture in acquiring and diffusing useful information regarding agriculture, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JAMES W. PRINGLE

The bill (H. R. 1320) for the relief of James W. Pringle was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "days," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, James W. Pringle shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered in and mustered out of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and to have been honorably discharged as a member of said company and regiment after having served therein more than 90 days: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2192) for the relief of Lemuel Simpson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

B. C. MILLER

The bill (H. R. 11859) for the relief of B. C. Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, lines 7, 8, and 9, to strike out the words "the acts of Congress of March 4, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1413), and June 16, 1921 (42 Stat. L. 41), notwithstanding," and insert in lieu thereof "without suffering any penalty prescribed by the act of Congress of March 4, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1413), and June 16, 1921 (42 Stat. L. 41)," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That B. C. Miller, of Cleveland, Ohio, who was duly appointed a special master by the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio, on June 17, 1919, in the cases of Meurer Steel Barrel Co. (Inc.) v. The Cleveland Steel Barrel Co., No. 464 in equity, and Meurer Steel Barrel Co. (Inc.) v. The Ohio Corrugating Co., No. 465 in equity, then pending in said court, be permitted to withdraw the sum of $525, with accrued interest, now on deposit in the Central National Bank of Cleveland, Ohio, in an official savings account, to the credit of the clerk of said court, said sum being the compensation allowed to B. C. Miller as special master in said cases by the court, with the consent of the parties, and paid into court by the parties pursuant to such order of allowance, without suffering any penalty prescribed by the acts of Congress of March 4, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1413), and June 16, 1921 (42 Stat. L. 41).

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 14800) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers, sailors, and marines of said war was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT TOQUOTHTY

The bill (S. 2362) to authorize the payment to Robert Toquothty of royalties arising from an oil and gas well in the bed of the Red River, Okla., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Over.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. BRUCE. I objected, but I withdraw my objection. I thought the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] also objected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to know the reason why the claim of the beneficiary of the proposed legislation was not referred to the Court of Claims? I am not insisting that that should be done, but my understanding is that large claims of this character against the Government should be so referred.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, as I recall, all claims of this sort against the Government have usually been settled in court; but under the provisions in relation to oil lands 12½ per cent of the amount of oil and gas taken from the wells on Indian lands was to go to the Indians. On this particular tract of land, which was right along the Red River, that river formed one of the boundaries. A change in the center of the Red River because of a flood took this particular well off the Indian reservation or allotment, but up to the time when the court decided that the allotment boundary was changed due to the flood there had been $130,717.45 worth of oil taken from the well, and the royalty on that would amount at that time to the sum of $16,339.69. The department believes that the Indian is entitled to that amount and recommends that it should be paid. Both the Senators from Oklahoma are in favor of the bill, and I think it should be passed.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, am I to understand that this well was in the bed of a navigable stream?

Mr. FRAZIER. At that time it was just at the edge of the river. A flood which occurred down there changed the bed of the river, and the court held that after the flood this well was not on the Indian allotment, but there was no question about its being on the Indian allotment before the flood came. Prior to the time of the flood the amount of oil taken from the well would entitle this Indian to a royalty of more than $16,000, as provided in the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. The oil was discovered before this diversion took place?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; the well was in operation before the flood.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to pay to Robert Toquothty, Comanche allottee No. 3413, the sum of $16,339.69 from the moneys now on deposit in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians under joint resolution of June 12, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 704).

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN SANTA FE COUNTY, N. MEX.

The bill (S. 5146) to reserve certain lands on the public domain in Santa Fe County, N. Mex., for the use and benefit of the Indians of the San Ildefonso Pueblo, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the vacant, unappropriated, and undisposed of lands within the unsurveyed area in township 19 north, range 7 east, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, identified as a narrow strip, a little more than 1½ miles wide and 4 miles long, running north and south, lying between the western boundary of the San Ildefonso Pueblo grant on the east and the eastern boundary of a portion of the Santa Fe National Forest on the west, be, and they are hereby, reserved for the sole use and benefit of the Indians of the San Ildefonso Pueblo: Provided, That the rights and claims of any bona fide settler initiated under the public land laws prior to July 27, 1928, the date of withdrawal of the lands from all forms of entry, shall not be affected by this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KANOSH INDIAN RESERVATION

The bill (S. 5147) to reserve 920 acres on the public domain for the use and benefit of the Kanosh Band of Indians residing in the vicinity of Kanosh, Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That 920 acres of land described as the east half west half, west half southwest quarter section 1; east half southwest quarter section 10; northeast quarter section 11; southeast quarter northwest quarter section 12; southwest quarter section 23; east half east half, west half southwest quarter section 27; all in township 23 south, range 5 west, Salt Lake meridian, Utah, be, and the same is hereby, reserved for the sole use and occupancy of the Kanosh Band of Indians in Utah: Provided, That the rights and claims of any bona fide settler initiated under the public land laws prior to October 27, 1928, the date of withdrawal of lands from all form of entry, shall not be affected by this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTEREST ON INDIAN TRUST FUNDS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5180) to authorize the payment of interest on certain funds held in trust by the United States for Indian tribes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all money in excess of $500 held by the United States in a trust fund account, and carried on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of an Indian tribe, if the payment of interest thereon is not otherwise authorized by law, shall bear simple interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date of the passage of this act. The amount held in any such trust fund account, which in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may not be required for payment in accordance with law, shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury; but so much thereof as may be necessary for making any such payment may, at any time thereafter, be restored to such account without reappropriation by Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES GILFILLAN

The bill (S. 88) for the relief of James Gilfillan, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Claims, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

EDNA E. SNABLY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8859) for the relief of Edna E. Snably, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the account of Edna E. Snably, postmaster at Hollsopple, Pa., in the sum of $1,000, being an amount charged in the postal account due to the cashing of war savings stamps in year 1924, which were found by the Treasury Department to be counterfeit and charged back to the postmaster's account; for which amount the postmaster was in no way responsible, the loss having occurred without fault or negligence on her part.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLARENCE P. SMITH

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13498) for the relief of Clarence P. Smith. It proposes to pay in full settlement against the Government to Clarence P. Smith, postmaster, Eden, Idaho, $140 to reimburse him for damage to the post-office safe by burglars July 1, 1927, and ruination of the safe by burglars September 5, 1927.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L. PICKERT FISH CO. (INC.)

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10908) for the relief of L. Pickert Fish Co. (Inc.), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of L. Pickert Fish Co., a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the State of Maine, the legal owner of a wharf and factory thereon, at Provincetown, Mass., which was damaged and practically destroyed on or about November 15, 1926, through collision therewith by the United States Coast Guard cutter Morrill, for damages caused by said collision may be sued for in the District Court of Massachusetts, and that said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit according to the principles of law and rules of practice obtaining in like cases between private parties at common law and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the said L. Pickert Fish Co. upon the same principles and measures of liability and damage as in like cases between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in said district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within six months of the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary to pay the amount of any judgment rendered by the court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF SECTION 284 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE

The bill (S. 2204) to amend section 284 of the Judicial Code of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

APPOINTMENT OF ELECTRICIANS TO GRADE OF ENSIGN

The bill (H. R. 5528) to enable electricians, radio electricians, chief electricians, and chief radio electricians to be appointed to the grade of ensign was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That electricians, radio electricians, chief electricians, and chief radio electricians shall be eligible for appointment to the grade of ensign under the restrictions imposed by law upon the appointment of boatswains, gunners, machinists, chief boatswains, chief gunners, and chief machinists to that grade.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FILING OF CLAIMS FOR RETAINER PAY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5617) to limit the date of filing claims for retainer pay, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no claim for retainer pay which accrued to enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force or Marine Corps Reserve prior to July 1, 1925, shall be allowed unless such claim shall have been filed with the General Accounting Office within one year from the date of this act.

SEC. 2. No advance payment to assigned members of the Fleet Naval Reserve or Marine Corps Reserve, no payment of compensation for the performance of drills, equivalent instruction or duty, appropriate duty or for administrative functions, nor any payment for uniform gratuity accruing to members of the Naval Reserve or Marine Corps Reserve subsequent to July 1, 1925, shall be made upon any claim unless such claim shall have been filed with the General Accounting Office within three years from the expiration of the quarter in which the right to such payment accrued: Provided, That no claim shall be debarred if submitted within one year from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. The provisions of this act shall not apply to members of the Fleet Naval Reserve or Fleet Marine Corps Reserve, transferred thereto, after 16, 20, or more years' service in the regular Navy or Marine Corps.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TREATMENT OF NAVAL PATIENTS IN GOVERNMENT HOSPITALS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7209) to provide for the care and treatment of naval patients on the active or retired list in other Government hospitals when naval hospital facilities are not available, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy may provide for the care and treatment of naval patients on the active or retired list and members of the Naval Reserve or Marine Corps Reserve entitled to treatment in naval hospitals in other Government hospitals when appropriate naval hospital facilities are not available and the Government agencies having control of such other hospitals consent thereto. All expenses incident to such care and treatment received by naval patients in other Government hospitals, excepting St. Elizabeths Hospital, shall be chargeable to the same appropriation or fund as would be chargeable with the care and treatment of such patients in a naval hospital: Provided, That the deductions authorized by sections 4812 and 4813, Revised Statutes, shall apply to such care and treatment in other Government hospitals, except St. Elizabeths Hospital, and shall be credited to said appropriation or fund.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISCHARGED MEMBERS OF NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8327) for the relief of certain members of the Navy and Marine Corps who were discharged because of misrepresentation of age, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged members of the military or naval forces of the United States, their widows and dependent children, a member of the Navy or Marine Corps who was enlisted between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, and who was discharged for fraudulent enlistment on account of misrepresentation of his age, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the Navy or Marine Corps on the date of his actual separation therefrom, if his service otherwise was such as would have entitled him to a discharge under honorable conditions. No back pay or allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act. In any such case the Secretary of the Navy shall, upon request, grant to such individual or his widow or next of kin a discharge certificate showing that such former member of the Navy or Marine Corps is held and considered to have been honorably discharged under the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMBERS OF NAVAL RESERVE FORCE AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 8537) for the relief of retired and transferred members of the Naval Reserve Force, Naval Reserve, and Marine Corps Reserve, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF NAVAL OFFICERS

The bill (H. R. 12879) to repeal section 1445 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this bill seeks to clarify existing law relative to the retirement of naval officers at the age of 64 years and to provide for the retirement of a few dental officers who under existing law are not eligible for retirement until they shall have reached the age of 70, placing them on a parity with other officers in the naval service.

Under the old law officers of the Navy were retired at 62 years of age. When that law was in effect a provision was adopted that it should not apply to certain officers, such as dentists, who kept on until retired for physical disability. When the law was changed providing that all officers should retire at the age of 64 it was meant that it should apply to all officers of the Navy of whatever class or description, but the comptroller has held that the clause of the old law relating to dental surgeons still is in effect. That means that these men can not retire until the age of 70. This bill merely clears that situation up and makes the retirement law apply to all officers so that they will retire at the age of 64.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator advise me what section 1445 of the Revised Statutes is?

Mr. HALE. I will read it, as well as the two sections which precede it. Section 1443 of the Revised Statutes reads:

When any officer of the Navy has been 40 years in the service of the United States he may be retired from active service by the President upon his own application.

Section 1444 reads:

When any officer below the rank of vice admiral is 62 years old, he shall, except in the case provided in the next section, be retired by the President from active service.

Section 1445 reads:

The two preceding sections shall not apply to any lieutenant commander, lieutenant, master, ensign, midshipman, passed assistant surgeon, passed assistant paymaster, first assistant engineer, assistant surgeon, assistant paymaster, or second assistant engineer; and such officers shall not be placed upon the retired list, except on account of physical or mental disability.

Mr. SMOOT. What was the date of the enactment of that provision?

Mr. HALE. That was prior to the act of August, 1917, when the law was changed providing for retirement at the age of 64.

Mr. JONES. According to its title the bill seems to be an absolute repeal of section 1445.

Mr. HALE. It was intended to repeal that section. The comptroller held that it had not been repealed by the act of 1917, and, as a result of that ruling, the men whom it is now sought to cover have to stay in the service until they are 70 years of age. It is not desirable that officers should remain in the service after they are 64.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall have to ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

REPAIRS TO CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

The bill (H. R. 13249) to authorize an increase in the limit of cost of alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we will consider that bill when we take up the cruiser bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to make a brief statement, let me say that this bill refers to two ships that are under reconstruction at the present time—the Oklahoma and the Nevada. The appropriations provided will not complete the reconstruction, and the ships, therefore, can not go out until an additional appropriation is provided and that appropriation can not be made until there is an authorization. This bill merely authorizes an additional appropriation of $450,000, which, of course, will have to be appropriated in some bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Where are the ships being repaired—in private yards or in Government navy yards?

Mr. HALE. The work is being done in the navy yards. It is purely a matter of economy. Work can not be done on these ships until further provision is made. In the meanwhile the work is held up and the ship can not be used. Considerable additional expense to the Government is involved while that situation remains.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to a consideration of the bill, but I should like——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that I think it would be a saving to the Government if the bill were allowed to pass without delay.

Mr. KING. I stated to the Senate that I would not object to the consideration of the bill. I notice, however, that the original estimate for repairs is being increased. How many times has the estimate been increased, I will ask the Senator from Maine? He knows that the Navy has the happy, or unhappy, faculty of representing that certain work will cost a certain amount; that the construction of certain ships will not exceed a certain amount, or their estimated cost will be a certain amount, but from time to time we are called upon for additional appropriations, so that in the aggregate in the case of many of the vessels the cost is nearly double what it was originally estimated to be.

The Senator will recall that in the act of 1916, which authorized the construction of a large number of vessels, the estimated cost was less than $500,000,000. We spent toward the construction of those vessels nearly that amount, and when we ceased the construction we ascertained that it would cost for their completion more than the amount which we had expended; all of which evidences the lack of—shall I say frankness?—at any rate, the lack of information furnished to the Senate when we are called upon to make appropriations for construction of naval craft and for their repair.

I should like to ask the Senator now what repairs are called for upon these two vessels, what the original estimates were, what the reasons for this additional appropriation is, where the vessels are being repaired, and if there has been any delay the reason for it. I hope the Senator will pardon me for asking a number of questions at one time, but I have done so to save interrupting him.

Mr. HALE. I have a table here giving the estimates for the modernization of the Oklahoma and the Nevada. Previous to this time no changes in those vessels have been undertaken. I will put the table in the RECORD if the Senator would like to have it there.

Mr. KING. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I will put this table in the RECORD if the Senator would like to have it there. It sets forth what work is proposed to be done on each of the ships.

Mr. KING. I should be very glad to have the Senator state briefly the facts.

Mr. HALE. The battleships in question are two——

Mr. KING. I am familiar with them.

Mr. HALE. Which have been modernized by putting on blister protection, putting on armored decks against aircraft, changing the boilers, and making other changes. As I have said, this is the first increase that has been made in the original estimate.

Mr. KING. Will this appropriation complete the repairs?

Mr. HALE. It will more than complete them.

Mr. KING. If we are appropriating more than is required, why should we do it?

Mr. HALE. The repairs can not be completed with the amount now available. The amount now proposed to be appropriated will undoubtedly take care of all of the work with perfect safety, and, of course, if there should be anything left over it will be turned back to the Treasury.

Mr. KING. Do the contemplated repairs call for the elevation of the guns of these two vessels?

Mr. HALE. Oh, yes; the guns are elevated on these ships.

Mr. KING. And is this for the purpose of transforming them from coal to oil burners?

Mr. HALE. No; the appropriations heretofore made for that purpose had to do with six older ships of the Navy.

Mr. KING. These vessels are oil burners now?

Mr. HALE. They are both oil burners.

Mr. KING. The repairs, of course, will add to the efficiency of these vessels as fighting craft.

Mr. HALE. They will add to the efficiency of the ships, and these vessels will be given sufficient protection against submarines and aircraft.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost for the alterations and repairs to the U. S. S. Oklahoma and Nevada, authorized to be modernized by the act of March 2, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1343), in accordance with the limitations prescribed in the treaty limiting naval armaments ratified August 17, 1923, is hereby increased from $13,150,000 to $13,600,000 in all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 13414) to amend section 1396 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relative to the appointment of chaplains in the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

REPAIRS TO THE BATTLESHIP "CALIFORNIA"

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14660) to authorize alterations and repairs to the U. S. S. California, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That alterations and repairs are hereby authorized to the U. S. S. California at a total cost not to exceed $350,000 in addition to the sum of $300,000 authorized to be expended under existing law. The alterations herein authorized shall be subject to the limitations prescribed in the treaty limiting naval armament ratified August 17, 1923.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the California will shortly go into dry dock for her usual annual repairs. Under existing law not more than $300,000 may be expended for any repairs to be made to a naval vessel. The department is very anxious to put on her a 5-inch antiaircraft gun battery and also a flag battle station, and they have informed the committee that this can be done economically at the same time that the vessel's annual overhaul is being made. Therefore, this bill increases the limit that may be expended from $300,000 to $650,000.

Mr. KING. And how much has been expended up to date in transforming, rearranging, and improving this ship?

Mr. HALE. This is one of the later ships of the Navy, and nothing has been expended on her for such purposes.

Mr. KING. Exactly. I am wondering why now so quickly money is needed for improvements.

Mr. HALE. The last three ships of the Navy, the Colorado, the West Virginia, and the Maryland, have antiaircraft batteries of 5-inch guns, which are very much more effective than the old-fashioned 3-inch antiaircraft batteries. Two of the latest ships, the California and the Tennessee, have the old 3-inch gun batteries, and the Navy Department is very anxious to install as quickly as possible effective 5-inch gun batteries. That is the reason for this bill. The improvements can be made at this time more economically when the vessel is undergoing her regular overhaul.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can sympathize with the position of my friend. We are discussing a treaty here—and I hope we will soon ratify it—which we hope will provide for world peace. I think it is quite important to indicate our desire for world peace by increasing our appropriations for war. This is in harmony with the paradox——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator has given a good deal of study to the question of building naval craft. I should like to ask him if he has known of any case where a naval vessel has been built within the estimates?

Mr. KING. Never.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is it of frequent occurrence to have bills introduced authorizing further expenditures on these craft?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when I was on the Naval Affairs Committee I was more familiar with those proceedings than I am now, although I have tried to follow, with the best care I could bestow upon the subject, the question of these recurring estimates and demands for appropriations ever since.

I recall that when Mr. Wilbur, the Secretary of the Navy, submitted, last December, with the approval of the President of the United States, his bill calling for seven hundred and odd million dollars—$746,000,000 or $764,000,000—they said that it was an estimate. It is certain that the construction of the 71 naval craft asked for by the administration then, and denounced by the people of the United States almost universally, would have cost considerably more than a billion dollars. That, however, is one of the methods employed in securing appropriations for naval craft. The department submit what they call an estimate. That is followed, later on, by an authorization for a larger appropriation, and that is followed by an authorization for a still larger appropriation; and when you have authorized the construction of a naval vessel neither the Navy itself nor anyone else knows just what the cost will be.

I will not say that there is a deliberate failure to present full data; but it would seem that with the multitude of vessels that we have built, and the knowledge we have of the technique of naval construction, there ought to be a reasonable approximation of the cost of these vessels.

I submit that the Navy Department ought to furnish more information when they ask for these appropriations. I think the Senate should call now for a report from the Navy Department as to whether the appropriation which we have authorized in the preceding bill and that which we are about to authorize in this bill will be all that will be asked for, or whether these are only estimates, to be followed by subsequent demands for additional appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, both the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives have taken up these matters many times with the Secretary of the Navy. We have made the same objection that the Senator makes, that we ought to be given accurate information when an appropriation is asked for; but they tell us it is impossible in all cases to do it, because, after they have started fixing up a vessel, some change in plan comes along that utilizes some modern idea, possibly, or something that will be for the benefit of the Navy, and so the department runs over what it expected to spend. That has happened in the case of a number of ships and it has happened in the case of the next bill on the calendar; and I will explain that, if the Senator desires.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? This appropriation is not for elevating the guns on our battleships, is it?

Mr. HALE. No. The guns on the Tennessee and California are already elevated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator tell us how many of the ships have had their guns elevated—how many of the 13 battleships?

Mr. KING. We have 18 battleships.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that.

Mr. HALE. The Colorado, the Maryland, the West Virginia, the Tennessee, and the California all were given a gun elevation of 30° when built.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would leave eight more of our great battleships on which the guns are not elevated?

Mr. HALE. That leaves 13; but the Oklahoma and the Nevada, which are in process of refitting, are having their guns elevated. That will give us seven that will have an elevation of 30°, and then the proposition is to fix up the others as they go along.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then we have, as I understand, 18, while Great Britain has 22. Of the 18, we will then have 7 with guns that can shoot as far as the British guns?

Mr. HALE. No; they shoot rather farther than the British guns except in the case of the Rodney, the Nelson, and possibly the Hood.

Mr. McKELLAR. When is it contemplated that the remaining 11 will have their guns elevated?

Mr. HALE. We are fixing up two battleships every year. The older battleships, the coal-burning battleships, which we converted into oil burners, did not have this elevation provided for for their guns when they were converted, so it is probable that these six ships will not be touched. They are the older vessels of the Battle Fleet, some of them mounting 12-inch guns.

Mr. McKELLAR. So that we will have 12 real battleships and the 6 old ones will not be reconditioned?

Mr. HALE. That has not been decided definitely. It may possibly at some future conference be decided to extend the life of battleships beyond 20 years, and then it may be found advisable to elevate the guns of these older ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the Senator's bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE IN LIMIT OF COST OF TWO FLEET SUBMARINES

The bill (H. R. 14922) to authorize an increase in the limit of cost of two fleet submarines was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the original appropriation for these two boats was $5,300,000. We are now asked to make an additional appropriation of $1,250,000.

Mr. HALE. One million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars for each of the vessels. These vessels are now under process of construction, and, as in the other case, the department has found that it can not complete them under the existing appropriation.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator whether they are being constructed under the cost-plus system?

Mr. HALE. No, indeed; there are no cost-plus contracts now.

Mr. KING. Was there any contract for their construction?

Mr. HALE. They are being built in the navy yards.

Mr. KING. Did not the department know within more than 25 per cent of the cost when it authorized the laying down of these boats?

Mr. HALE. These ships, Mr. President, are the latest thing that we have in the way of fleet submarines. We are using all sorts of experimental ideas in them, and when they were originally provided for it was impossible to tell exactly what would go in them. The ships are under process of construction now. If this request for an authorization for the additional appropriation is refused, the ships will simply have to stay on the ways, and nothing further will be done on them.

Mr. KING. Are these fleet submarines?

Mr. HALE. These are the latest fleet submarines; yes.

Mr. KING. What is their displacement—1,200 or 1,400 tons?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; they are larger ships—over 2,000 tons.

Mr. KING. What is their cruising radius?

Mr. HALE. Very large. It is not entirely settled what speed they will make. The V–1, V–2, and V–3 were supposed to make 21 knots. I think it has been found that submarines of such great speed are not altogether successful. I think the speed of these submarines will probably be somewhere in the vicinity of 17 or 18 knots.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, away back in 1914—in fact, for a number of years prior to that time—Germany was constructing submarines that were able to cross the Atlantic and to cruise for thousands of miles. We, apparently, were unable to construct submarines, and apparently now are unable to construct submarines, that are comparable to those that were constructed then.

Mr. HALE. No; I think not, Mr. President. The cruising radius of these vessels is very great; but it has been found not feasible to build submarines with such high speed as I have stated. I recall that the British six or eight years ago had a submarine that made 23 knots; but they have never built any more, and they are dropping down, the Japanese are dropping down, and the French are dropping down to submarines of lesser speed.

Mr. KING. I am not so much concerned about the speed as about other qualities which are necessary in naval fighting craft; but I am just a little curious to know why, with the experience we have had—we have built considerably more than a hundred submarines, perhaps between 124 and 148 submarines——

Mr. HALE. We have 112 now. We had others that went out; yes.

Mr. KING. We have constructed, I think, more than the number I stated; and one would suppose that the Navy by this time could come a little nearer the estimate of cost than that which they have furnished in respect of these boats.

Mr. HALE. I wish it could. As I have said to the committee, we are trying as a committee to get them to do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator about the safety of these latest models? Is it believed that they are absolutely safe?

Mr. HALE. No, sir; no submarine can be absolutely safe.

Mr. McKELLAR. No submarine can be built that is absolutely safe?

Mr. HALE. No, sir.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, they have all the newest and most up-to-date appliances, then?

Mr. HALE. I can assure the Senator that they will have on them all of the latest safety appliances that it is possible to put on.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, as I understand, in the case of nearly every ship that is built, whether by contract or in the yards of the Government, it usually requires more money to complete it than is first estimated for.

Mr. HALE. Very often that is the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC—MEMORIAL DAY

The bill (S. 5060) to aid the Grand Army of the Republic in its Memorial Day services, May 30, 1929, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

I do not care to object to the consideration of this bill; but I am very much afraid it is going to open up the floodgates in the future. Many States may come here later and ask for appropriations along this very line. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, if he knows, just offhand, whether it is constitutional to appropriate money in this manner for such purpose?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator will observe that this bill does not come from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BLEASE. I understand that. That is the reason why I asked the question. If it had come from that committee I would have known that the committee considered its constitutionality.

Mr. NORRIS. The Judiciary Committee has not had the bill before it for consideration.

Mr. BLEASE. Then I move to refer the bill to that committee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BLEASE. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. This bill was first referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and then to the Pensions Committee. I am a member of the latter committee. It seems that it has been the custom for years for the Grand Army post of the city of Washington to decorate the graves of all the soldiers in the National Cemetery here on Memorial Day. Owing to the fact that the Grand Army men are getting so few in number and so advanced in years, it is practically impossible for them to raise the money necessary to do this decorating.

There are some 38,000 soldiers' graves in the national cemetery here at Arlington. This bill provides $2,500 for their decoration on the coming Memorial Day. It would amount to 6½ cents for each grave. It seems to me we can well afford to pass a small appropriation of that kind in order that the members of the Grand Army here in the District may be relieved of the necessity of raising the funds themselves, personally and from their friends, and allow them to show this little act of respect on the next Decoration Day, the 30th of next May.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I am not objecting to the bill. So far as that part of it is concerned, it is a small amount of money. The question I should like to have answered is, If we do this for the District of Columbia, then later suppose the various States find themselves in the same position in reference to their soldiers: Do we not open the flood gates for making appropriations for every State in the Union, possibly, to do this very work?

In my State we have two of these cemeteries; and very often the sons and daughters of Confederate soldiers go down freely and voluntarily on Memorial Day and place flowers on the graves of Union soldiers in the national cemeteries at Florence, S. C., and Beaufort, S. C. We ask no pay, nor would we accept any.

I do not object to the amount of money. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if this bill is passed I believe we are going to have trouble; and I think the question should be settled before we go any further in the passage of the bill. I do not want anybody to say that I am objecting simply because I am from the South or because I am the son of a Confederate soldier. I am inquiring because I believe the bill will open the floodgates in a way that will be dangerous to the country.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I have the greatest respect for the opinion of the Senator from South Carolina, and I do not pose as an authority on constitutional law, but I respectfully call his attention to the fact that the Supreme Court has held that the Government had the right to take by condemnation proceedings the lands on which one or two of the great battles of the Civil War had been fought, and while I have not read the decision in many years, as I recall it, the reasoning was that the Government had an interest in preserving and beautifying the places that had been made historic and sacred by the sacrifice of American lives. If they could take the ground of a battle field and expend many thousands of dollars beautifying it and in marking it, it seems to me that the appropriation of money to pay respect to the dead who sleep in a national cemetery would certainly come within the rule.

I would like to see this measure passed, and I will go further; I would not object, I would insist, if there were buried here in the District Confederate soldiers, that their graves should be decorated in like manner, because I think we have all passed the time, and I know the Senator from South Carolina has passed the time, when we desire to preserve any longer any sectional feeling in the country. I hope the bill may pass; and I assure the Senator, as far as my judgment is concerned, as far as it is of any value, there is nothing unconstitutional in the measure.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I regret to say that the fact was brought to my attention only recently that all of the feelings engendered by the Civil War have not passed away, because among the most painful letters I have ever received in my life is a considerable number of letters I have received only recently from members of posts of the Grand Army of the Republic protesting against the loan of a little material by the Government to the next encampment of the Confederate veterans. The letters all came from the State of Maryland, and I felt it my duty to write back to those individuals and to say to them that my breast was simply filled with sorrow at the thought that any bosom, North or South, after such a long lapse of time, could harbor such sentiments of bitterness.

Now, I trust that they will be impressed with the spectacle of a Senator, who is the son of an old Confederate captain, and who yet rejoices that the Civil War resulted exactly as it did, voting and voting cheerfully, without any reservations of any kind, for this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,500 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to aid the Grand Army of the Republic Memorial Day Corporation in its Memorial Day services, May 30, 1929, and in the decoration of the graves of the Union soldiers, sailors, and marines with flags and flowers in the national cemeteries in the District of Columbia and in the Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia.

SEC. 2. That said fund shall be paid to the treasurer of the Grand Army of the Republic Memorial Day Corporation and shall be disbursed by him for said memorial service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLASSIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT CLERKS

The bill (S. 5148) to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1923, entitled "An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services," as amended by the act of May 28, 1928, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Iowa if this is to amend what is known as the Welch bill?

Mr. BROOKHART. It is.

Mr. BLEASE. Then, I would like to ask to have an article printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is a very important bill. We had a classification bill passed a few years ago which was supposed to do justice to the employees of the Government. Much time was devoted to that bill. No sooner was it passed, than we began the stepladder process, which more or less changed it and devitalized it. We had the Welch bill to correct the existing inequalities, and now we have another bill. Whether it will correct inequalities or not I can not say.

I have had no opportunity to examine this bill. I think it ought to go over so that we can have a chance to examine it and compare it with the Welch law, and what its effect would be. I am prompted to do this because I have received some six or seven letters suggesting that the bill was not yet fair. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, in connection with this matter, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a clipping from a paper in reference to an interview supposed to have been given out by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE]. I would like to request the Senator from Vermont, when this bill comes up, to state whether or not he gave out the interview as it is reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, November 22, 1928]

PURPOSELY CONFUSED, SENATOR DALE CLAIMS

Congress was misled by the personnel experts of the executive branch of the Government in the drafting of the Welch bill to increase the pay of Federal employees, Senator PORTER H. DALE, of Vermont, chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee, declared to-day.

Senator DALE charged that the Government departments had purposely confused Congress on the pay situation and established a complicated system of salary schedules in order to keep control of the pay situation and prevent Congress from enforcing its will.

TO BACK LAW CHANGE

He said the raises granted under the Welch law were not in accordance with the intentions of Congress, and announced that he will sponsor a move to correct and amend the law.

The Welch law, as it finally passed Congress, was very crude, Senator DALE said. It was necessarily so because of the hurry in which at was written, he said.

"I believe, however, that there was a deliberate attempt on the part of the departments to keep us confused and prevent us from understanding the pay schedules.

NOT THIS SESSION

"They told us that if we wrote the law in such a way it would have certain results, but when we wrote the law and passed it that way they interpreted it in another way and, as a result, the raises that Congress intended to give were not granted."

Senator DALE was not very optimistic about the chances of amending the Welch bill in the coming short session because of the pressure of national legislation. He said, however, that there is a strong sentiment on the committee to correct the bill and that it will undoubtedly be done sooner or later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

REFUNDS OF TAXES

The bill (S. 5223) to amend subsection 3 of section 3220 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, relating to claim for refunds of taxes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is interested in this bill, and he is necessarily absent on account of illness. At his request I ask that it may go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a substitute for this bill is going to be offered as an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill; so it is all right to have it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE AND SCHOOL OF MINES, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 10157) making an additional grant of lands for the support and maintenance of the Agricultural College and School of Mines of the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALL-AMERICAN INDIAN LEGION

The bill (H. R. 13744) to provide for the acquisition by Parker I-See-O Post, No. 12, All-American Indian Legion, Lawton, Okla., of the east half northeast quarter northeast quarter northwest quarter of section 20, township 2 north, range 11 west, Indian meridian, in Comanche County, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NIOBRARA ISLAND

The bill (S. 4979) to authorize the city of Niobrara, Nebr., to transfer Niobrara Island to the State of Nebraska was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, to strike out "of" and to insert in lieu thereof "to," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the United States is hereby granted to the city of Niobrara, Nebr., to transfer to the State of Nebraska all the rights, title, and interest of such city in and to Niobrara Island, an island in the Niobrara River, if the State of Nebraska, before the expiration of five years from the date of the enactment of this act, formally accepts such island subject to the same conditions (except the condition as to time of acceptance) as are imposed by section 21 of the act entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889, in respect of the donation to the city of Niobrara of such island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENTRIES ON PUBLIC LANDS

The bill (S. 5110) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue patents upon the entries hereinafter named upon which proof compliance with law has been filed, upon the payment of all moneys due thereon:

Desert-land entry, Evanston, Wyo., No. 07863, made by Charles G. Jewett on January 5, 1922, for the east half of the southwest quarter and north half of the southeast quarter, section 26, township 34 north, range 114 west, sixth principal meridian.

Stock-raising homestead entries, Cheyenne, Wyo., Nos. 035367, 039066, and 042059, made by Edwin T. Pfister for the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, section 34, and north half and north half of the south half, section 35, township 38 north, and lot 4, southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, and northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, section 1, township 37 north, range 62 west, sixth principal meridian.

Stock-raising homestead entries, Buffalo, Wyo., Nos. 024570 and 024571, made by James R. Rice on February 21, 1923, for the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the southeast quarter, section 30, and lots 1, 2, and 3, east half of the northwest quarter, southwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, section 31, township 52 north, range 70 west, sixth principal meridian.

SEC. 2. That stock-raising homestead entry, Billings, Mont, No. 029013, made by Vera M. Diers (now Vera M. Watts), on December 5, 1927, for the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter and east half of the southeast quarter, section 31, north half of the southwest quarter, section 32, township 7 south, range 58 east, lots 3 and 4, section 5, and lot 1, section 6, township 8 south, range 58 east, Montana principal meridian, be, and the same is hereby validated.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to James C. Willox, of LaBonte, Wyo., for the north half of the northwest quarter, section 23, township 29 north, range 73 west, sixth principal meridian.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to Lillian Badger, of Hollywood, Calif., a patent for lot 5 and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, section 26, and lots 1 and 2, section 35, township 15 south, range 35 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California, such patent to contain the terms and conditions of section 24 of the Federal water power act: Provided, That Lillian Badger make payment for the land within 90 days after notice of the approval of this act at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 5. That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized to quitclaim to Paris M. McPhetridge the south half of the southeast quarter, section 24, township 5 north, range 13 west, San Bernardino meridian, California.

SEC. 6. That homestead entry, Santa Fe, N. Mex., No. 044344, made by Carolina Salazar on February 14, 1923, under the stock-raising homestead act of December 29, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 862), embracing the south half of the south half, section 12, and the west half of the east half, section 13, township 7 north, range 16 east, New Mexico meridian, be, and the same is hereby validated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEYER SHIELD POST, AMERICAN LEGION

The bill (H. R. 10550) to provide for the acquisition by Meyer Shield Post, No. 92, American Legion, Alva, Okla., of lot 19, block 41, the original town site of Alva, Okla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LASSEN VOLCANIC NATIONAL PARK

The bill (H. R. 11719) to revise the boundaries of the Lassen Volcanic National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAFAYETTE NATIONAL PARK

The bill (H. R. 15088) to provide for the extension of the boundary limits of the Lafayette National Park, in the State of Maine, and for change of name of said park to the Acadia National Park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not objected to these bills, but I would like to ask those who are familiar with them whether a considerable amount of public domain is brought under the jurisdiction of the park system, and whether it is deemed necessary that such action should be taken. As a matter of fact, I rather dislike to withdraw public domain from public entry, because the more of the public domain that can be acquired by private persons the more homes will be built and the more property there will be within the States subject to taxation. The Senator knows that in some of our Western States 65 to 70 per cent of the land is held by the Government, and the States can not tax it. I am anxious to have Government land get into private ownership as much as possible.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the pending bill only changes the name of the Lafayette National Park.

Mr. KING. I was speaking, generally, of all these bills.

Mr. NORBECK. Replying to the Senator's inquiry, I will state that most of the lands are lands without great value for any purpose, which have been added to the national parks in recent years.

Mr. KING. None of these bills add to the forest reserves?

Mr. NORBECK. I think not; certainly this bill does not.

Mr. KING. I know this one does not.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF MINING LAWS

The bill (S. 4691) to extend the provisions of section 18a of an act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), to certain lands in Utah, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the period of 12 months from and after the approval of this act, the provisions of section 18a of an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), be, and the same are hereby, extended to land in Utah embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued October 4, 1909: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as otherwise enlarging, continuing, or extending the provisions of the aforesaid section 18a of the act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437).

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAN JUAN COUNTY, WASH.

The bill (H. R. 12775) providing for a grant of land to the county of San Juan, in the State of Washington, for recreational and public-park purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUITS BY CITIZENS OF MARYLAND

The bill (S. 1640) for the relief of certain persons formerly having interests in Baltimore and Harford Counties, Md., was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Whereas pursuant to an act of the Congress of the United States, approved October 6, 1917, the President of the United States, by proclamation, did declare that certain lands lying in Baltimore and Harford Counties, in the State of Maryland, were needed for military purposes, and did acquire said lands under the provisions of said act; and

Whereas the lands so taken constituted a large tract, including about 50 square miles of territory, and were located in the heart of a community which has been thickly settled and closely cultivated for more than a century; and

Whereas the taking of said lands resulted in totally disrupting and destroying the life of an entire community which had been for many years self-sustaining and caused the destruction of and damage to lands, rights, businesses, employments, and the like, of many persons, frequently amounting to a total destruction of all means of livelihood; and

Whereas said taking gave rise among the residents of said communities to much opposition to said taking, and it was represented by agents of the Government of the Unted States that upon such taking compensation would be made for all damages of every kind, direct and indirect, immediate and consequential, arising therefrom; and

Whereas said act made appropriations under the head of "Proving ground" to provide for "the necessary buildings, construction, equipment, lands, and damages, and losses to persons, firms, and corporations, resulting from the procuring of the land for this purpose"; and

Whereas it was the intention of the Congress that all actual damages growing out of said taking should be paid without regard to whether they were direct or indirect, immediate, or consequental; and

Whereas the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States have construed said act of Congress as allowing only such damages as were direct and immediate and excluding all such as were indirect and consequential; and

Whereas as a result of said action many persons have never been compensated for damages suffered by them as the result of said taking; and

Whereas it is important that the intention of the Congress to make just compensation for said losses shall be carried out and the said courts should be authorized and empowered to determine and allow all actual damages resulting from said taking, whether direct and immediate or consequential and indirect: Now therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to hear and determine the claims of all persons formerly residing or having interests in Harford and Baltimore Counties, in the State of Maryland, and suffering any losses arising out of the taking of said lands, whether such losses have been direct or indirect, immediate or consequential, including losses arising from decrease or destruction of the value of real estate not taken; destruction or injury to an established business, professional practice, or other means of livelihood by loss of custom or otherwise; loss of employment; injury or destruction of property rights, including water rights and fishing rights; and losses of like character; and to award such damages as shall fully compensate such persons for all losses for which full compensation has not heretofore been paid. All claims for damages based on this act shall be made by petition filed in the Court of Claims within one year from the passage of this act, and in case any of said claimants have heretofore brought suits and the same have been determined against them, the judgments in said respective causes shall be reopened, the findings therein set aside, and the court shall then proceed to determine the damage claimed by the rule hereinbefore by this act established, or in the discretion of the Court of Claims a new suit in said court may be brought, heard, and determined as though the said previous suit had not been brought and judgment had not been entered therein: Provided, That the Supreme Court shall have the same power to review judgments of the Court of Claims under this act as now exists in other cases arising in the Court of Claims.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, we ought to have a brief explanation of the purpose of this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. The bill carries no appropriation, and it has the approval of the War Department. It simply provides that certain citizens shall have the right to bring their claims in the Court of Claims. Before any of the cases can be finally disposed of, even after the Court of Claims has taken action, Congress will have to appropriate the money.

Mr. JONES. Has the bill a favorable report from the department?

Mr. TYDINGS. It has.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

O'FALLON RAILWAY VALUATION CASE

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31) to provide for the printing of briefs of counsel and transcript of record filed with the Supreme Court of the United States in the St. Louis & O'Fallon Railway case was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from North Dakota? I notice this resolution calls not only for the printing but for the binding of a large number of these records. I think the printing is quite necessary. I was wondering if the Senator deemed it necessary to have this large number of copies bound.

Mr. NYE. The Senator should make his inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the chairman of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the concurrent resolution may go over, because in ordering documents printed the Senate has never provided that they shall be bound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will go over, under objection.

JOHN W. CLEAVENGER

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, this morning there was restored to the calendar House bill 4280, to correct the military record of John W. Cleavenger, deceased. I desire to have the bill brought up for consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Let it be reported.

The bill was read by title.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not object to this bill being restored.

Mr. BLACK. I would like to explain it, and I think the Senator will agree to its passage.

Mr. KING. Is it a case of desertion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the bill has already been restored.

Mr. BLACK. I would like to explain the bill and ask for its passage.

It is a bill which was introduced in the House for the correction of the military record of a man from Kansas. It has passed the House twice. It was referred to the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, and the committee turned the bill over to me for investigation. On the evidence at that time I reported the bill unfavorably, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Since that time there has been additional evidence, and the matter was taken up before the entire Military Affairs Committee by me, with an explanation of the evidence, and the committee authorized me to ask to have it restored and passed. I can explain the facts in about two minutes.

This man volunteered and served during the Civil War in a company from the State of Illinois. After being in the service for six or eight months he became ill and was sent to the hospital. He stayed in the hospital for several months and then went home. He stated that he was sent home. The records show that he was away on account of illness.

Some time thereafter he was marked up as a deserter from his company. He stayed away from the company, as he stated, with authority, and in 1864, the first part of the year, he reenlisted in the same company. He served until after the war had ended in the identical company on the rolls of which it is now stated he was carried as a deserter. He was promoted from a private to a sergeant. The man is now dead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to continue for not more than two minutes on the bill which I have been discussing. If there is objection, of course, it will go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. BLACK. The widow is now very old, and, according to information which I have received to-day, will likely not live many months. It will cost the Government very little. The man was restored to his own company, was promoted to a sergeantcy, and in my judgment and in the judgment of the committee there is no reason why the bill should not pass. I ask for its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4280) to correct the military record of John W. Cleavenger, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, John W. Cleavenger, who was a member of Company B, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 26th day of April, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed, in open executive session, to the consideration of the multilateral peace treaty.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty for the renunciation of war transmitted to the Senate for ratification by the President of the United States, December 4, 1928, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, December 19, 1928.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	King	Schall
Barkley	Edwards	La Follette	Sheppard
Bayard	Fess	Larrazolo	Shipstead
Bingham	Fletcher	McKellar	Shortridge
Black	Frazier	McMaster	Simmons

Couzens	Johnson	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Dale	Jones	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Deneen	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Dill	Keyes	Sackett	Wheeler

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of the illness of the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] and the absence from the Chamber of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], I ask the Senator if he will refrain from submitting his request for a few moments?

Mr. EDGE. Why not have it stated, but not actually put the question for a few minutes?

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request to the effect that beginning to-morrow at 3 o'clock all debate on the treaty shall be limited to 20 minutes for each Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not want to be put in the position of delaying action on the treaty. At the same time the opinion has been expressed in high quarters that we must vote on the treaty without having an expression of opinion from the Committee on Foreign Relations as to what the treaty means. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] introduced this morning and had laid on the table a resolution requesting the Committee on Foreign Relations, in view of the different interpretations and the fact that that committee made no explanatory report when they submitted the treaty, to give us a written statement as to what they believe to be the scope and meaning of the treaty and that they do it at the earliest possible moment.

In view of the fact that that resolution has not been acted upon and that if it is adopted it may lead to a report from that committee, and in view of the fact that we do not know, officially at least, what the committee has in mind to report, it does not seem to me that it is quite fair for the advocates of the treaty to ask at the present time a limitation of debate, although I will say to the Senator from Idaho that there is no desire on my part, or of those who are joining with me in the earnest request for a report, to delay a vote at all.

Mr. BORAH. This is simply a proposition to limit debate. It is not asking for a vote at any particular time. If any such program as the Senator indicates should be carried out, the limitation would not interfere with it at all, because it does not go into effect until to-morrow at 3 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it seems to me that the time has arrived when some forward step should be taken for the disposition of the business before the Senate, particularly the unfinished business, which is the cruiser bill and the renunciation-of-war treaty. For my part, I can see no reason why the Senate, affording ample time for full discussion by all Senators who desire to be heard, should not enter into an arrangement now to vote both on the treaty and the cruiser bill.

I am fully aware of the fact, sir, that some who favor the treaty are against the cruiser bill and some who favor the cruiser bill have little sympathy for the treaty. We all know what the treaty means. The course of the debate, having proceeded for 10 days, has disclosed that there are practically no important differences as to the true meaning and effect of the treaty. I have no objection to making a report if anyone has reasonable doubt as to the correct interpretation of the treaty. I have no objection to the committee filing its report. I made that suggestion.

It has seemed to me that a part of the insistence for an expression on the part of the committee has been entirely unnecessary. That is the way it has appeared to me. We have been proceeding now for a week or 10 days or perhaps 2 weeks with the cruiser bill as the unfinished business and with the treaty actually before the Senate in open executive session. It is not my desire or my suggestion that anyone who thinks he can further illuminate the subject shall be deprived of an opportunity of doing so. But the adoption of the treaty—and I say it as a sponsor for the treaty—does not mean or imply the rejection of a measure providing for the construction of cruisers within reasonable limitations, such a measure as is now before the Senate.

During the period that I have served here every proposal designed or intended to promote the peaceful settlement of international disputes has had my support. If I could have had my way, if my desire could have been recognized, the pending treaty would have been accepted without serious opposition, not on the theory that it means the complete outlawry of war or the prevention of future military conflicts, but on the theory that it is promotive of good will, calculated to stimulate public sentiment throughout the various countries signing it in favor of peaceful arrangements for the settlement of controversies, and in that sense—and in that sense chiefly—important and desirable.

Those who have held out to the United States that an agreement not to enter into warfare under the terms of this treaty means the outlawry of war, the end of strife, and consequently the prompt disbandment of armies and navies, are rendering little service to the cause to which they have attached themselves. If this treaty were ratified immediately without report and without reservation, the cruiser bill or some comparable measure would still be demanded, in my judgment. I realize that sharp issues arise touching that subject. If that bill were passed promptly, following the advice and consent of the Senate to this treaty, the passage of the bill would constitute all the explanation that anyone could desire.

It has seemed to me far-fetched to say that an agreement not to make war constitutes an abandonment of the right of self-defense. It is unnecessary to declare that as a part of the right of self-defense, the proper application of the Monroe doctrine is preserved in this undertaking. I have not the slightest objection to joining in a report to that effect, but let no one proceed here or elsewhere on the theory that the signing and ratification of this treaty heralds the beginning of the millennium. The armaments of the principal civilized nations are greater now than they were when the thunder of the first gun alarmed Europe in 1914. As a practical proposition, neither the United States, Great Britain, France, nor any other great power signing this treaty will disarm; not one of them contemplates it, until, as a great statesman said, the peace has been organized and arrangements have been made for the effectual observance and execution of the agreement not to make war.

As has been said, we have wrangled much over trivial matters. We are all interested in the progress and consummation of legislation. We understand these questions and are about ready to decide them. For my part, I am ready to vote on the treaty and ready to vote on the cruiser bill, admitting the right of any Senator to exercise the privilege that I am now enjoying of expressing his views on the subject.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the request for unanimous consent to limit debate is the matter before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether he would be willing to couple with that request an understanding that before we have the limitation on debate we may have a vote on the resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] requesting the Foreign Relations Committee to make a report on the treaty to-morrow?

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President; I have submitted a request for a unanimous-consent agreement for the limitation of debate, and that, to my mind, is wholly dissociated from the other proposition. The limitation of debate will not take place until 3 o'clock, and any arrangement which might be made with reference to other matters would either be made or not be made before that time. I do not desire to include anything more at this time in the request than I have done.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho, as he is the Senator in charge of the treaty, if he will consent to an adjournment of the Senate this afternoon, which would automatically afford us a chance to-morrow to consider the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. No; I am going to move a recess.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I did not understand the statement of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I have stated that I am going to ask for a recess, but the Senate may determine for itself what it desires to do.

Mr. REED of Missouri. When is the Senator from Idaho going to ask for the recess?

Mr. BORAH. When we finish the business of the day.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, obviously the Senator in charge of the treaty is unwilling for us to have an opportunity to vote on the resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri, as he is unwilling for the Senate to adjourn to-night in order that we may have the privilege of voting on the resolution to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not disposed to change the parliamentary situation under the unanimous-consent agreement under which we are proceeding.

Mr. BINGHAM. But, Mr. President, does the parliamentary situation involve a continual daily recess?

Mr. BORAH. I have been very severely taken to task to-day by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], because I am not making sufficient progress; he desires night sessions; and I feel under obligations, in view of the talk we had when the discussion of the treaty began, to do the best I can to keep the treaty before the Senate. In addition I feel myself we should make progress.

Mr. MOSES. I can assure the Senator that there will be no resistance to an effort to go into executive session at 2 o'clock to-morrow if he will consent to an adjournment. Then, the Reed resolution will come automatically before the Senate and we can vote upon it.

Mr. BORAH. Let us take up the question of adjournment when we come to it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. The resolution, which I offered this morning, is as follows:

Resolved, That in view of the importance of the pending treaty (the so-called Kellogg-Briand treaty) and in view of the many different interpretations which have been placed upon said treaty by Members of the Senate, and also in view of the fact that the Committee on Foreign Relations has not made any report giving its reasons for recommending ratification, the committee is respectfully requested to report to the Senate as soon as possible its views as to the proper interpretation of the treaty.

The inquiry I desire to submit is whether the resolution is not privileged in the sense that it can be considered at any time while the treaty is pending.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, perhaps I can simplify this matter to some extent. I will say this, that, so far as I am individually concerned, I will not raise the question when we come to consider the resolution that one day has not intervened since its introduction.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. I ask unanimous consent then to proceed to the consideration of the resolution without displacing the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. I object to that at this time, Mr. President.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then, Mr. President, I ask the parliamentary question whether I have not the right under the rules of the Senate to offer the resolution at this time. It is not formally a demand that the treaty shall be sent back to the committee, which would be a privileged motion and undoubtedly parliamentary, but it is in substance of the same nature; it leaves the treaty, however, here before the Senate subject to consideration, even though the committee may be engaged in preparing a report. I wanted to leave it in that situation, I will say to the Senate, because it is not my purpose to delay a vote upon the treaty a moment longer than is necessary in order to get the sense of the Senate upon that which I think it ought to express itself.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have stated to the Senator that when the resolution comes up to-morrow, I shall not interpose an objection because of the fact that the Senate did not adjourn; so that the Senator will lose nothing at all by reason of the failure to adjourn.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. But I am not prepared at this time to go further. I am perfectly willing, however, in order that we may have a recess instead of an adjournment, to waive the benefit that I might have to object by reason of their being no adjournment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Of course, the Senator's statement would have very great weight with the Senate, but there might be objection. So I ask unanimous consent now that the resolution which I have offered may be considered on the calendar day of to-morrow, unless sooner considered and disposed of, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate may be in the same legislative day as at present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the way the Senator puts the request it would amount, if granted, to unanimous consent to consider it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. To that I am not consenting, but I am perfectly willing to have the Senator submit a request for unanimous consent that there shall be no objection by reason of the fact that the Senate did not adjourn to-day.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask the view of the Vice President upon the question I have propounded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. What was the request, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Senator from Missouri to restate it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that if the Senate shall this evening recess instead of adjourning the resolution I have offered shall have the same standing before the Senate as it would have, had the Senate adjourned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to ask that the request I made be submitted to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho requests unanimous consent that debate be limited to 20 minutes after 3 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho if he would not be willing to make it 30 minutes?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I am perfectly willing to make it 30 minutes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What is the request? Let us understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That debate on the treaty be limited to 30 minutes after 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. The treaty and any amendments.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And that the treaty shall remain the unfinished business and not be displaced until disposed of.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator need not be uneasy about that. We have the votes. It is not going to be displaced.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. My reason for making the suggestion is that so often when we make agreements of this kind other business is thrust into the Senate and other matters are taken up, and I just want to know that between now and 3 o'clock to-morrow the treaty will be kept before the Senate during the time the Senate is in session.

Mr. BORAH. It will be kept before the Senate at any time there is anyone to speak upon it or consider it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, could not the Senator make that 12 o'clock instead of 3?

Mr. BORAH. No; I can not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that the proposal is that after the agreement goes into effect, if it does go into effect, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 30 minutes on the treaty or any proposal submitted in reference thereto. The limitation is general and not confined to the pending question.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. MOSES. Let it be reduced to writing.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the request did not say "only once." It said that no Senator should speak longer than 30 minutes. A Senator might want to speak 10 or 15 minutes at a time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is what I wanted to make clear.

Mr. DILL. The request of the Senator from Idaho did not say "only once."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, I understand the Senator's point.

Mr. BORAH. Let us have the understanding, then, that each Senator is allotted 30 minutes, and that he can utilize it on the treaty or on a reservation or on any other subject which may come up.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Or on the cruiser bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Am I correct in thinking that this limitation applies to the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri as well as to the treaty?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement did not so state.

Mr. MOSES. The unanimous-consent agreement has to be reduced to writing and read before it can be agreed to, and anything that the Senator from Connecticut does not like in it can then be changed or he can object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The purpose of my question was to make clear the object of the Senator from Idaho. I take it that it was the intention to limit each Senator to 30 minutes on the treaty and all proposals in relation thereto.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that was my intention—to cover all subjects relative to the treaty.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Chair rule that the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri is included within the unanimous-consent agreement asked by the Senator from Idaho?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is for the proposer of the unanimous-consent request to decide.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then may I ask the Senator from Idaho if it is his understanding that debate may be had on the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri and the debate limited on that resolution?

Mr. BORAH. My understanding was that each Senator should be given 30 minutes, and that he could utilize that 30 minutes to suit himself upon the treaty or any subject relative to the treaty. That would include the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. After 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. Before that agreement is definitely entered into I should like to ask the Chair whether there is any agreement that we may be permitted to vote on the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri before we vote on the treaty?

Mr. BORAH. There is no agreement to that effect.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, before I give my consent to this request I should like to have the ruling of the Chair as to whether or not the resolution which is offered will be in order to-morrow morning upon the convening of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule that unless a legislative day intervened the resolution would not be in order, unless in connection with some unanimous-consent agreement reached to-day.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has not one already been reached to that effect?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understood that the unanimous consent had been granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the unanimous-consent agreement in reference to the Reed resolution.

Mr. BORAH. The effect of the unanimous-consent agreement was simply to waive the fact that we do not adjourn. It does not effectuate anything else.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That simply means, then, that when the Senate convenes to-morrow that portion of the morning business which relates to resolutions coming over from the previous day would be in order, and until 2 o'clock it would be in order to discuss the resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Idaho has just stated that he intends to move a recess. There will be no morning hour.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But the agreement was that the resolution should not be prejudiced by the fact that the Senate recesses to-day; in other words, that it should have the identical status that it would have if the Senate adjourned.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Now, suppose the Senate adjourned. What would happen? When we convened to-morrow we would proceed with the morning business, and when the morning business was about to end the Chair would announce that feature of it that relates to resolutions coming over from the previous day; and the discussion of the resolution then would be in order until the close of the morning hour at 2 o'clock, assuming that we recess until 12 o'clock.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not understand that, because, as the Senator knows, this resolution was introduced as in open executive session.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it did not go under legislative business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And how it could come over from a previous legislative morning hour I do not understand.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; but if we recess we meet again in open executive session, unless some other order be made; and the effect of this agreement, fairly construed, is to put that phase of the morning business on the open executive calendar. Otherwise it could have no effect.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I think there is some misunderstanding about this matter.

I introduced this resolution to-day. I introduced it as in open executive session. If the Senate were to proceed in the ordinary way, and run through to-day, and then adjourn, to-morrow morning the morning business would come up; and when the treaty came up—the unfinished business—it seemed to me that I would then have the right, the resolution having lain over one day, to call it up for action, because it is in the nature of furthering the business that is before the Senate and is really in the nature of a return of the measure to the Senate.

I should like to get the opinion of the Chair on that point, because it is going to determine my action as to giving consent or not.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator introduced his resolution as in open executive session. I am not clear at this time as to what status that would give it with reference to the morning hour; but I am perfectly willing, whatever the status may be, that it shall not be prejudiced by the failure to adjourn. I do not want to agree what the status is; but, whatever it may be and whatever it is determined to be under parliamentary rules, the Senator is entitled to enjoy it, and I will not object by reason of the fact that we do not adjourn.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I want it understood that this matter can be brought up for consideration and voted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would hold that the Reed resolution would be in order only in open executive session. A motion to take it up at any time, however, would be in order.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. Then, with that understanding—to put it in my own words, so that I am sure I do not misunderstand—if we give the unanimous-consent request to-morrow when the Senate convenes for the consideration of this treaty, the resolution I have offered will be in order.

Mr. BORAH. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion to consider the resolution will be in order.

Mr. REED of Missouri. A motion to consider it will be in order; very well; and if that motion should be defeated, of course it would defeat the resolution; but if it should prevail, then the resolution would come before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me ask a question before this matter is decided.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement under which we are proceeding, how would a motion to make a report from a committee be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator restate his inquiry?

Mr. BORAH. We are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement with reference to the treaty. That being true, under what parliamentary rule would a motion for a report from a committee be in order? I do not think it is in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the resolution is agreed to, it directs a report of the committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that if the Senator from Idaho insists on that construction of this agreement, it will leave the resolution to be considered after the peace treaty has been considered, and the cruiser bill, too.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Reed resolution directs the committee to report as soon as possible its views as to the proper interpretation of the treaty. If a motion is made to proceed to the consideration of that resolution to-morrow in open session, and it is carried, the committee, under the resolution itself, would make the report.

Mr. BORAH. But the question I desire to submit is, in view of the fact that we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement for the consideration of the treaty, would a motion directing the committee to report be in order prior to the time that we dispose of the treaty?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution itself directs the committee to report; not the unanimous-consent agreement. The resolution is an order.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Do I understand the position to be, then, that if we recess to-day and meet to-morrow in open executive session, the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri is the first order of business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. A motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Missouri is the first order of business that comes before the Senate at that time.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Under what rule would that kind of a motion be in order, in view of the unanimous-consent agreement under which we are now considering the treaty?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Anything can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRATTON. But the inquiry propounded to the Chair is: Under what rule would a motion to take up the resolution of the Senator from Missouri be in order while we are considering the treaty?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would temporarily displace the discussion on the treaty. It does not interfere with the status of the unfinished business—the treaty—in open executive session, but by unanimous consent it will be in order upon motion to proceed to the consideration of the Reed resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there has been no unanimous consent that the motion shall be made. The only unanimous consent was that there would be no objection by reason of the fact that we did not adjourn.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, if there are going to be any sharp practices here, or fine technicalities, let us know them now, and there will be no unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BORAH. Now, Mr. President, the Senator should not say "sharp practices," because that is precisely what was agreed to, that I would not interpose an objection because we did not adjourn.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not mean to say the Senator has been guilty of sharp practices. If my words were susceptible of that construction, I withdraw them. I do not mean to impugn his motives at all, but I do mean to say that if there is going to be any question about the right to introduce this resolution to-morrow, or at any other time when this treaty is before the Senate, I want to know it now, before I give my consent to anything.

Mr. BRATTON. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that I raised the question in the interest of clarity.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I know the Senator did.

Mr. BRATTON. Not to confuse.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I hope nothing I said will be taken by any Senator as intending to say anything of an offensive character.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes to-morrow he may make his motion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no need to make that unanimous-consent request, because I would not agree to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this discussion has become somewhat technical, but——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would rule——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Just a moment. I insist that my interpretation of this agreement, if accepted by the Senate, will enable us to escape just such results as have been witnessed here in the discussion that has immediately proceeded.

The proposal was and the agreement was that the resolution should not be prejudiced; that is, that it should have the same status it would have if the Senate adjourned to-day. Assuming that the resolution, as I said a while ago, had been offered and the Senate had adjourned, on reassembling the morning business would have been in order. General morning business would not be in order under such an agreement, but it would in so far as it relates to this resolution, and the Chair, under this agreement, if it gives the resolution the status that it would have had if the Senate had adjourned, would call that phase of the morning business, "Resolutions coming over from a previous day," and discussion of it would be in order during the morning hour, and only in order during that time, unless a motion were made, which prevailed, to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, there is no morning hour in executive session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, no; but the agreement is that so far as this resolution is concerned it shall have the same status it would have if we adjourn, and, therefore, had a morning hour. You can not give effect to the agreement in any other way. It does not mean anything unless it means that.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Missouri had introduced his resolution in legislative session, as a legislative matter, that would be absolutely correct; but he introduced it as in open executive session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That makes no difference.

Mr. BORAH. And it went to the executive calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That makes no difference. In order to give any effect to the agreement you have to recognize it as having the same status that it would have had if presented in legislative session and carried over from the previous day by the Senate adjourning.

Mr. JONES. I want to suggest, Mr. President, that the rules with reference to morning business do not apply to executive sessions, whether open or closed. This is executive business, in open executive session. It is not a regular legislative resolution, and there is no such thing as a morning hour in executive session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That does not make the slightest difference. We have entered into an agreement that the resolution should have the same status it would have if we adjourned.

Mr. JONES. I do not know what the agreement was, because I was out of the Chamber at the time it was submitted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That was the agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hold that a motion made in open executive session to proceed to the consideration of the Reed resolution is in order at any time in open executive session. If adjournment should be taken to-night, under the regular morning business this resolution, being one made in open executive session, would not be taken up, and a unanimous consent agreement should be entered into at this time if this Reed resolution is to be considered in the morning hour to-morrow after adjournment to-night.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, does the Chair then hold that in the open executive session the discussion on the Reed resolution can not operate beyond 2 o'clock?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that if we adjourn as in open executive session there will be no morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, coming into open executive session in recess to-morrow morning, it will be in order to move to proceed to the consideration of the Reed resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution will be in order.

Mr. MOSES. Without limitation of time on it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unless by unanimous consent it is arranged that there shall be a limitation of 30 minutes in debate upon the resolution, as well as on the treaty, there will be no limitation of time.

Mr. MOSES. The status just declared by the Chair now exists?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The status declared by the Chair now exists, except that the limitation upon time has not yet been agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire that the request which I submitted include the treaty and all things relative to the treaty, including the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; I shall not, in view of the ruling of the Chair, object to the request which the Senator made before he just now amended it, and I will say to the Senator that all that I want is a fair chance to present this resolution. I shall not unreasonably delay it or try to hold up the business of the Senate.

The Senator knows that I have appealed to him and other members of the committee time and again to bring in a clarifying report so that something authoritative shall be here presented which shall embrace the very views the Senator has expressed upon the floor of the Senate. We thought that an arrangement of this kind had been substantially agreed to on two or three occasions. Unfortunately, that did not go through. Now it appears that the Senator wants to limit debate. I want time to present this resolution. There will be plenty of time between 12 o'clock to-morrow and 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, if we can devote it to the discussion of the resolution, but there are others here who will want to speak upon the treaty, and perhaps at some length, so that we will probably be placed in the position where the resolution can only be considered under the limit of time the Senator has named, if we assent to his modified request.

I do not want to do that. I can not to save my life understand why this committee should not bring in a report saying just what it means; why there should be any opposition to that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I thought the Senator from Missouri was through.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will stop.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MOSES. Let us have it stated again, please?

Mr. BORAH. Just a word before the matter is submitted. There is no need of submitting a proposition for a limitation upon debate if it is not going to include this resolution, because we would make nothing by that program whatever, in my judgment. Therefore, I must include the resolution, because in my opinion the resolution would not be here if it were not for the fact that it has relation to the treaty, and it is a part of the treaty program. I therefore include it, and do not wish to submit any request without it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was merely going to suggest, in view of all the confusion concerning the previous unanimous consent request that was entered into, that the Senator's request be reduced to writing, so that it will be at the desk and can be reported to the Senate, and then all may understand just what it includes.

Mr. BORAH. The request is that, beginning to-morrow at 3 o'clock, all debate be limited to 30 minutes for each Senator upon the treaty and upon all matters relating to the treaty, including the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I suggest as an amendment that upon the convening of the Senate on the calendar day of to-morrow the resolution I have offered shall be laid before the Senate, and that it shall be open to debate without limitation until the hour of 3 o'clock.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to have my request for unanimous consent submitted first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A unanimous-consent agreement can not be amended.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am stating that amendment to the Senator because otherwise I am going to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. GLASS. As I understand the unanimous-consent agreement suggested by the Senator from Idaho, no limitation would go into effect until 3 o'clock.

Mr. BORAH. That is quite right.

Mr. GLASS. Therefore he and the Senator from Missouri are not disagreeing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BORAH. If I can have my unanimous-consent agreement submitted, I think it will cover the matter.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then please let it go in in words; I do not want any more implications. We are having trouble over this treaty now because nobody will authoritatively define it.

Mr. GLASS. In words, the Senator from Idaho proposes that after 3 o'clock to-morrow the limitation be applied. Therefore it does not apply to the Senator's resolution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But he does not agree that the resolution shall be taken up.

Mr. GLASS. The Chair has decided that it may be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has decided that a motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is in order.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is very different from agreeing to take it up and discuss it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That could be debated until judgment day.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, whether it is actually taken up or not, the Senator can debate it, and we can proceed with the debate. I can not agree at this time that it shall be taken up, because that would put us in a parliamentary situation which I am not willing at this time to concede. But we will be here at 12 o'clock, and for three hours he could talk upon his resolution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If there is going to be any dispute about it, we might just as well——

Mr. BORAH. There is no dispute.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Let us go on with the business before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is in Committee of the Whole, and amendments to Article I are in order.

Mr. REED of Missouri and Mr. BORAH rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to speak?

Mr. BORAH. If we could have a vote, I would like a vote, but I understand the Senator is not ready to vote.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Not until this resolution is disposed of. Now I will ask the Senator if he is willing to waive the parliamentary point that a day has not intervened since the offering of the resolution, so that I may make the motion now to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have already stated my position on that. The unanimous-consent agreement which the Senate made and to which I agree, was that on to-morrow there would not be objection.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am asking the Senator if he will agree to it now?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not wish to change the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, just to test the feeling of the Senate, I move that we proceed to the consideration of the resolution I have read, without prejudice.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Senators around me say that perhaps it would be offensive to put it in that way, so I shall not do so. I am ready to go on with the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is in Committee of the Whole, and Article I is open to amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senators who are in opposition to the treaty if they would be willing for us to proceed with the treaty up to the time that the resolution of ratification comes before the Senate. We must first adopt the separate articles, and the only real question between us is what we shall do prior to the actual adoption of the resolution of ratification. We can adopt the articles and then proceed to the ratification of the resolution later.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not think we would gain anything by that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator want us to adopt the articles before the committee has told us what the articles mean?

Mr. KING. We know.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know anybody who is in doubt, unless it is the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I think there is very serious doubt about what they mean. If the Senator is going to address the Senate I will yield the floor; otherwise I am going to say something about the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in connection with the observation made by the Senator from Idaho that there is no doubt in the mind of anybody, except perhaps the mind of the Senator from Connecticut, as to what the treaty means?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield the floor to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to read to the Senate a part of an editorial from the Manchester Guardian showing the interpretation that is placed upon the treaty by that British newspaper.

Mr. President, the editorial appeared in the Manchester Guardian a few days ago. It is entitled "The Peace Campaign." I shall not read it all.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator said "a few days ago." He is mistaken about that, is he not? Has he the date?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have not the date, but it comes, I think, in the form of a clipping from the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. BORAH. It is not material, but it appeared about two months ago.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not think the date is material. What is stated about the subject matter is material.

I shall not read the whole editorial, but only that part which seems pertinent to the discussion at the moment. After concluding what I have to say now I shall ask that the entire editorial be printed in the RECORD. I read from the editorial as follows:

> The first point in the Liberal policy is "the complete suppression of war as a means of settling disputes between nations." To this the Government would no doubt formally agree. Indeed, the statement amounts to no more than has been said in the Kellogg pact, which the Government has signed. But it is noteworthy that when it came to the point of signing Sir Austen Chamberlain put in a reservation which would allow this country to fight not merely in self-defense but even when it was not attacked, on the plea that territory not ours but important to us was in danger. It is too soon to judge of the effect the Kellogg pact will ultimately have upon international relations; but if it is to be judged by the spirit of such reservations as this, its influence will be not toward the suppression of war but toward the legitimatizing of war—that is, toward enabling any government to declare war on its own responsibility, without consent of the league, as judge in its own cause and in defense of certain purely strategic objects which, even if remote, it chooses to call vital.

Mr. President, I submit that is at least one English interpretation of the treaty, and from a rather reliable source.

That there is much difference of opinion as to what the treaty means is evidenced by this editorial from the Manchester Guardian. There seems to be no doubt in the minds of the English people, if their views are reflected by the editorial, that the Chamberlain correspondence represents a reservation to the treaty itself. There seems to be no doubt but that much the same view as has been expressed by those opposed to the ratification in this body without interpretative statement, is held in England.

All of which, Mr. President, makes it seem of the utmost importance, while there is yet time, that the Senate of the United States in ratifying the treaty should make a definite statement of just what it conceives the treaty to mean. So I submit to the Senator from Idaho that there is apparently considerable difference of opinion not only among the Members of this body but of other countries as well with reference to the meaning of the pact.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator if he believes the treaty will be construed to deny the right of the United States to defend itself or to defend the Monroe doctrine from any foreign aggression?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I certainly think, as long as other countries have found it necessary to reiterate their right of self-defense, that there can be no harm in our country's making that statement itself.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator regard a report of the committee as a reservation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not know that such a report would be a reservation.

Mr. BORAH. How does the Senator regard it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But it would be such an interpretation as could be considered when later this very question might come up for decision. In any event, it certainly would serve notice to the world of our notion of what the treaty means and what is the interpretation of the Senate. Yes; I think it ought to be put in there.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator regard it in the nature of a reservation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I regard it certainly as in the nature of a reservation, but not such a reservation as would necessarily need be submitted to the other signatories.

Mr. BORAH. Would it have the effect of a reservation as a legal proposition?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think it might. I think it would certainly be considered as the meaning placed on the treaty by the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator from Indiana has just stated that he considers a report of the committee as being of the same effect as a reservation. That opinion has not been expressed heretofore, although I understand that it is the view taken by the highest officials of the administration—that a report of the committee would be a reservation.

In order that I might have the best possible opinion on that subject, unbiased from anything connected with the various streams of opinion and of influence on this floor, I sent a telegram Saturday night to two or three of the most distinguished authorities on international law in this country asking them what was the difference between a treaty reservation, an interpretative resolution, and an explanatory report from the Foreign Relations Committee, and what difference these various forms of declaration would have upon the peace pact.

In answer to that telegram I received this morning a letter from Professor Borchard, professor of international law in the school of law of Yale University and one of the highest authorities on international law in this country, in which he states:

> The three forms of declaration in question are all designed to express the Senate and, therefore, the United States understanding of the obligations incurred by the ratification of the treaty. Unless, therefore, the declaration in question, whatever its form, is communicated to foreign governments signatory to the treaty, and accepted by them—at least by silent acquiescence—it would not, in my opinion, be effective to safeguard the rights of the United States.

Professor Borchard is interested in having reservations but he does not believe that a report from the committee not communicated to and accepted by foreign governments would have the same value as a reservation. He goes on to say:

> A reservation is the most formal method in which the Senate could express an exception to or interpretation of the treaty. It becomes in effect a counteroffer, must necessarily be communicated to the foreign government before or at the time of ratification, and usually, though not always, requires express assent from the other party signatory. Ratification after notice of the reservation would, however, I believe, be construed as assent.

With regard to an interpretative resolution Professor Borchard says that it—would not, unless specifically so stated by the Senate, necessarily be communicated to foreign governments by the Secretary of State, and would therefore, unless so communicated, be merely a unilateral expression by the Senate of its understanding of the obligations the United States was undertaking.

In that event—

And please note what this authority says—

In that event the resolution would have no legal effect, I believe, as a limitation of the obligations of the United States, though it would undoubtedly have a strong moral and political effect and might serve as a defense later to a charge of bad faith.

May I say to the Senator, while he so graciously yields, that that is the view of a large number of those who are interested in securing an interpretation either by the committee or by resolution, in that, although not of legal effect, it would have undoubtedly a strong moral and political effect and might serve as a defense later to a charge of bad faith?

But without communication and acquiescence—

Said Professor Borchard—no foreign government has official notice of our understanding or is legally bound by it.

His interpretation of an explanatory report from the Foreign Relations Committee is that it—is the most informal of the three methods suggested. If not independently voted by the Senate, then any Senate resolution advising the President that the Senate consents to the ratification of the treaty should, I think, refer to the terms of the suggested report and state that it embodies the Senate's understanding of the obligations incurred by the United States. Unless the Senate were to take some official notice of the report, it might (a) not be sent to the President, or (b) not be sent to any foreign powers. The legal position would then be the same as in the case of an uncommunicated interpretative resolution. It might have a moral and political effect and serve a useful purpose in the event of later dispute, but it would not be legally binding on anybody.

A formal reservation would involve a changed treaty and would necessitate either new negotiations or, as a rule, formal assent of foreign governments to the change. Being a multilateral treaty, this might cause difficulty, because some might accept and others might not. An interpretative resolution or a committee report communicated to foreign powers would not require foreign powers to do anything more than ratify—their assent being implied by ratification—and reference to it would not appear in the instrument of ratification. Nevertheless, I think the acquiescence implied in ratification would protect the interests of the United States.

The other principal governments have carefully reserved their rights and understanding in advance of signature. By securing Secretary Kellogg's assent to their views and now by obtaining a Senate acquiescence in their views—the result of not protesting or excepting—they would seem to have world-treaty support for their reservations, qualifications, exceptions, and understandings. The least we can do is to ask the same world support for our understanding of the obligations now incurred.

So, Mr. President, it would seem that there is in the minds of the highest legal authorities—and when I have the floor I shall refer to one or two other opinions which I have received—a very great difference between a reservation and an interpretative resolution and a report from the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Connecticut sits down will he permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do.

Mr. BORAH. What does the Senator from Connecticut understand Professor Borchard to understand by the "political and moral effect" of the report of a committee? What does he understand by "political effect"? What is the meaning of the term in the letter the Senator has read?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not so much interested in its "political effect" as in its "moral effect"; and I have not given any particular thought to what the professor meant by a "political effect."

Mr. BORAH. That is exceedingly important. I wish the Senator from Connecticut would telegraph the professor again.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator from Idaho state before he sits down why he regards its "political effect" as exceedingly important?

Mr. BORAH. The professor says its "political effect" might be precisely the same as a reservation in full. I do not know what he means by "political effect." He does not confine it to "moral effect." He does not say that it is simply our interpretation, but that it may have "political effects" on other governments. That is precisely what I object to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I assume that the "political effect" referred to would be with reference to the political relationship between this country and other nations with whom we are bound together in the treaty. A simple interpretative statement from the Committee on Foreign Relations might have conceivably the same practical "political effect" or "moral effect" between nations as would a formal technical reservation, excepting that it would not necessitate the exchange again of notes and a meeting of minds again all over the world.

Mr. BORAH. That is one reason why the question of a report has become a difficult and very important one. Men like Professor Borchard and others are construing it, in my judgment, out of all relationship to its real effect; and what effect that might have on other countries it is very difficult to know. I do not want to do that which may be misconstrued abroad.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In any event, Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] who the other authorities are to whom he submitted this inquiry.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have in my hand a telegram from Prof. Philip Marshall Brown, professor of international law at Princeton University, and also one of the well-recognized authorities on international law in the world. With the Senator's permission, I should like to read his answer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator first give us the name of the third authority? I recognize that both of the gentlemen whom he has named have already expressed themselves in various ways as against this treaty, and I want to know whether the third occupies the same position?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say to the Senator from Montana that I am not at liberty to divulge the name of the third at present, because his reply begins with the words, "This reply not to be published." I have sent him a telegram asking if I might not give the substance of the reply but have received no answer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Connecticut is aware that both Professor Brown and Professor Borchard have heretofore expressed their convictions against this treaty?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am aware that those gentlemen are international lawyers of the very highest repute. When the Senator from Montana was not in the Chamber I referred to the fact that it seemed significant to me that the chief persons objecting to this treaty were not militarists or manufacturers of arms and ammunition but international lawyers of the highest standing. However, in asking them this question I did not intend to bring any reflection on the treaty, for I myself am in favor of the treaty, provided we know exactly what it means; but these are the only professors of international law whom I know personally and whom I thought that I had a right to ask what was the difference in their opinion between a reservation and a report of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator from Connecticut did submit the question at least to two out of three professors whom he knew were adverse to the treaty?

Mr. BINGHAM. It happens that of the three professors of international law with whom I am acquainted, those two are adverse to the treaty in its present form; that is true.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, why does the Senator from Connecticut say he is in favor of the treaty provided he knows what it means? If he does not know what it means, why should he be in favor of it? [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Connecticut did not say that. He said he was in favor of the treaty, but he did not know what it meant.

Mr. BARKLEY. How can the Senator be either for or against a document the meaning of which he says he does not understand?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, the only purpose I have——

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to answer the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will yield the floor in a very few moments, if the Senator will permit me to proceed now.

The purpose I had chiefly in mind in reading this editorial was to show the Senate that there is much difference of opinion as to what the treaty means and that the opinion held by many of those in this body who oppose ratification of the treaty without an interpretative statement is the same as that held, at any rate, by some important sections of British opinion. Therefore, at this point, I ask that the editorial in full be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Manchester Guardian]

THE PEACE CAMPAIGN

The world peace campaign which is being conducted by the Liberal Party this week, and in which Mr. Lloyd George led off, coincides with the meeting of the council of the League of Nations at Lugano. This contrast between the ideal and the real is likely to be striking. An examination of it would reveal the deep divergence between Liberal and Conservative policy better than could a comparison of rival programs. Of the eight cardinal points which make the substance of the Liberal policy all but two have received some sort of official Conservative backing. Even the encouragement of international free trade was once tepidly indicated as a legitimate item of Conservative activity. That, of course, was not taken very seriously, and nobody supposes that international free trade will, in fact, receive encouragement at the hands of Mr. Baldwin's government. But what of the five points for which Conservative support might be claimed on the strength of official pledges and declarations? There is, unhappily, not one of the five causes which has not been betrayed by the present Government within the last two years. One or two of them, notably the "fair and impartial administration" of the treaty of Versailles, will be discussed at Lugano. Unless Sir Austen Chamberlain's attitude undergoes a considerable change in this and other respects the proceedings at Lugano are likely to emphasize once more the need for caution in accepting at their face value Conservative professions of faith in the league, in disarmament, and in the possibility of creating an effective machinery of peace.

The first point in the Liberal policy is "the complete suppression of war as a means of settling disputes between nations." To this the Government would no doubt formally agree. Indeed, the statement amounts to no more than has been said in the Kellogg pact, which the Government has signed. But it is noteworthy that when it came to the point of signing Sir Austen Chamberlain put in a reservation which would allow this country to fight not merely in self-defense but even when it was not attacked, on the plea that territory not ours but important to us was in danger. It is too soon to judge of the effect the Kellogg pact will ultimately have upon international relations, but if it is to be judged by the spirit of such reservations as this its influence will be not toward the suppression of war but toward the legitimizing of war—that is, toward enabling any government to declare war on its own responsibility without the sanction of the league, as judge in its own cause and in defense of certain purely strategic objects which, even if remote, it chooses to call vital.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does the Senator from Indiana think that a report from the committee would be authoritative or binding upon any other nation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think so; sufficiently so, at any rate, to protect our reputation for good faith, for when ultimately it comes to construing the treaty according to our notion of it, we would have a senatorial interpretation.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Our reputation for good faith will never be drawn in question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is another question on which there is a wide difference of opinion.

I now yield the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] in one of his most playful moments took advantage a moment ago of a slip of the tongue on my part to bring ridicule on the effort which I am making to secure an efficient interpretation of the treaty from the only body in the Senate which has been recognized as competent to give such an interpretation, namely, the Foreign Relations Committee. I am not denying to the Senator that I said what he said I said at the moment; but what I thought I had said was that I was in favor of the treaty, provided it meant what the Senator from Idaho, the chairman of the committee, said it meant in a draft of a report of the committee which he showed me and which was entirely satisfactory. If it means what the majority of the committee believe it to mean and they will so state, then I will cheerfully vote for the treaty.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not think that I had any desire in the world to bring ridicule upon his attempt to disclose the real meaning of the treaty. I wish him success in that effort. But what he said was that he was for the treaty, although he did not know what the treaty meant. I could not resist calling his attention to that faux pas which a scholar in politics should never perpetrate anywhere.

Mr. BINGHAM. I admit the soft impeachment; but what I meant to say was that I was in favor of the treaty, provided the rights of the United States as to self-defense and as to the protection of the lives and property of our citizens abroad were absolutely protected.

Mr. GLASS. To that I subscribe.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the Senator to mean that he is willing to abdicate his judgment as to what the treaty means, textually or otherwise, and submit his judgment and interpretation to some statement which may be made by the Senator from Idaho and other members of the committee furnished in writing?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is my practice, Mr. President, usually to submit my own judgment to the judgment of any of the major standing committees of the Senate as to what is meant by a bill, treaty, or other measure which they may have considered and reported, and not to assume that I know more about what it means than they do.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator feel that the responsibility rests upon him, as well as upon every other Senator, to determine for himself as best he can, availing himself of all sources of information, exactly what the treaty means, and having so determined, to vote according to his own judgment?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President; for the reason that not being a member of the committee and most of the Senators present not being members of the committee, it can hardly be held that they are in any position to know exactly what it means.

Mr. President, if I may, I should like to read the telegram from Doctor Brown, professor of international law at Princeton University, who, as was pointed out by the Senator from Montana, is an opponent of the treaty, but I am sure that that does not influence his view with regard to the difference between a reservation and an interpretation by some other means. He replies:

PRINCETON, N. J., January 13, 1929.

Hon. HIRAM BINGHAM,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

A clear distinction must be made between an amendment modifying text of treaty and a simple reservation expressing interpretations of limitations placed on it by one of the signatories. Such reservations do not require formal action by other signatories, witness Hague conventions and recent Pan American Arbitration Convention. An interpretative resolution or accompanying report from Senate Committee on Foreign Relations would have only an attenuated legal significance unless officially conveyed to other signatories. But given the unusual moral character of the Kellogg treaty any indication whatever of the intent of the contracting parties, whether in the preliminary correspondence in statements by officials, by legislative declarations, or formal reservations, all have great moral significance. President Wilson acknowledged this respecting the interpretative reservation to the Versailles treaty. In view of conflicting interpretations concerning the actual commitments of the United States some kind of clarification now seems essential to prevent charges of bad faith and recriminations which would vitiate the fundamental idealism of Kellogg treaty.

PHILIP MARSHALL BROWN.

Mr. President, it seems to me, in view of the high standing of Professor Brown, his views in the matter ought to be given weight. He refers to President Wilson's views respecting interpretative reservations, and it may be of interest in that connection to quote the words used by President Wilson at the time the League of Nations was before the Senate as compiled, with his approval, by Hamilton Foley, in a volume entitled "Woodrow Wilson's Case for the League of Nations." On page 126 President Wilson is quoted as saying:

It has been suggested in public debate and in private conference that interpretations of the sense in which the United States accepts the engagements of the covenant should be embodied in the instrument of ratification. There can be no reasonable objection to such interpretations accompanying the act of ratification, provided they do not form a part of the formal ratification itself. Speaking now of those which some men of high conscience and of high public purpose are seriously pressing in order that there may be no misunderstanding. It is perfectly feasible, if we put interpretations upon that treaty which its language clearly warrants, to notify the other governments of the world that we do understand the treaty in that sense.

A little later he says:

You can avoid a misunderstanding without qualifying the terms of the document, because, as I have said and shall say again and again, America is at liberty as one of the voting members of the partnership to state how she understands the articles of partnership.

In view of the fact that it has been maintained on behalf of certain high officials that a reservation is undesirable and that a report from the committee would be the same thing as a reservation, it seems to me proper at this time, Mr. President, to point out that some of the highest authorities on international law in this country, including a recent President of the United States, do not take that view.

Mr. FESS obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator give me about three minutes to make a statement in connection with this controversy that has come up? I promise him I shall not take over five minutes. I think the statement ought to be made now, if the Senator will grant me that courtesy.

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask it because the Senator evidently is going to make an extended speech.

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President; the address I shall attempt to deliver will be very brief.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the statement has been made that those who are opposed to the treaty desire this report of the committee, and the inference is left that the request for a report is made by those who want to kill the treaty.

I do not want that statement to stand in that way. Speaking for myself, I think it would have been better if we had never undertaken to make this particular treaty in the manner and form in which it is now laid before us. I appreciate the fact, however, that when our prime minister takes it upon himself to enter into negotiations of this character, and goes to the various chancelleries of the earth with this proposition, and finally secures the assent of many of them, or the promise of assent, to repudiate the treaty utterly might have an unfortunate effect.

In the hope that we could escape all controversy, and that certain dangers could be avoided which we believe lurk in the treaty, particularly in view of the constructions placed upon it by other governments, some of us first suggested a reservation clarifying the meaning of the treaty, and specifically asserting that we did not waive the right of self-defense; that we did not waive the Monroe doctrine; that we did not, by signing the treaty, agree either expressly or impliedly, morally or otherwise, to apply sanctions or force against any nation violating the treaty; and that, by accepting the treaty with the reservations that have been made to it, we did not, by implication consent to the binding force of the treaties and agreements which have been mentioned in the notes that have been exchanged.

That was all that was asked; and it was said that that would render it necessary to send the treaties back to these chancelleries, and that there might be some difficulties encountered if that course were followed.

Then it was suggested that a simple resolution of the Senate be passed, not as a reservation but as a declaration of the understanding of the Senate; and when that was objected to, it was then suggested that a simple report of the committee might be made which would declare the interpretation of the committee touching the matters to which I have just referred, and it was hoped that that could be carried through; but apparently we have come to an impasse so far as the self-constituted negotiators are concerned.

Mr. President, it is true that the only way in which we could absolutely place a legal obligation in this treaty in the sense that a contract is modified would be to attach a reservation, and send that reservation to all of the nations that had signed the treaty or that may hereafter sign the treaty; and that is the course that ought to be followed under ordinary circumstances. Under the conditions to which I have just referred, however, it seemed that we ought to go to the extreme limit to avoid doing anything that would place an obstacle in the way of acceptance of our suggestions; so the suggestion now, at least, being pressed is that the committee shall make an interpretative report, and that there the matter shall rest.

There is not much use in talking about the legal obligations of this treaty. There is no court that can construe it as far as we are concerned without our consent hereafter given. The treaty, if it stands so far as we are concerned and so far as all nations are concerned except as they are bound by the Locarno pact or the League of Nations, is nothing but a pledge of honor, a moral obligation. Viewed in that light, if we have authoritatively stated our position before signing the treaty, then, if ever our good faith is challenged, we can point to that construction and say to all the world, "That was our understanding then; it is our understanding now," and we will be relieved from any charge of mala fides. So that is what has been asked. While I am not going to debate it now, I repeat that I can not understand why a request of that kind should not be granted.

In the first place, we violated all precedents when we brought in a treaty of this importance without any report. I think we violated all precedents. At least, it was unusual. In the second place, we have had debate here now for 10 days, and there have been as many different opinions expressed upon this floor as there are Senators who have spoken. In the third place, the publicists of foreign countries have placed constructions upon the treaty very different from that placed upon it by the chairman of the committee. The publicists of this country have placed different constructions upon it. The high authorities that have been cited by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] have placed different constructions upon it.

If, at the close of the speech of the chairman of the committee, we could have passed a resolution saying that "It is the sense of the Senate that the construction placed upon this treaty by the chairman of the committee is correct," I should have been perfectly content; but, unfortunately, all these opinions have been expressed. All that we are asking now is that something shall be brought in here which expresses the same views that were expressed by the Senator who is in charge of this treaty, so that in the future we can point to that action and say, "That was the sense of the Senate at that time."

That is all we are asking—that you shall say formally what is said informally; that a committee shall say what its chairman has said, so that we will stand before the world in the future with a clean bill of health, and in the court of conscience and of honor we can demonstrate that we have not changed our position or shifted our purpose in view of some exigency of the future. That is all that we have asked; and when it is denied there must be a reason for the denial. It ought to be a very serious reason.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. May I remind the Senator from Missouri that we are simply claiming the right to do what everybody else connected with this treaty has claimed the right to do. England, France, even Afghanistan and Persia have chosen to place their interpretations on the treaty, and Mr. Kellogg has placed his on it. Is the Senate of the United States to be the only agency or individual connected with this treaty that is not to be accorded the right to place an interpretation upon it in the form of an interpretative resolution or otherwise?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thank the Senator. I was about to refer to that fact.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I promised not to take the time of the Senator from Ohio, but with the permission of the Senator from Ohio I will yield to the Senator from Idaho; but I want to wind up what I have to say in a very few words.

Mr. BORAH. I do not wish to take the time of the Senator from Ohio either; but at the proper time I desire to say something with reference to this proposed report and the controversy which has arisen over it. I shall not do it now; but there was a time when there could have been no objection to a report and was no objection to it. Other circumstances have arisen, however, which I shall discuss later.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well, I shall be very glad to hear the Senator. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE]—who is a great lawyer and a great student—calls attention to the fact, however, that all the other nations have placed their interpretations upon this treaty; and, sir, those interpretations do not agree. They are in conflict, and some of them are in radical conflict. The representative of Great Britain, Mr. Chamberlain, was not content to take the language of this treaty as it stood. He wanted to have it understood by the world where his nation stood. Mr. Kellogg did not think the treaty was so plain that it did not need any explanation. Accordingly, he wrote many notes and letters, and finally delivered himself of a speech that he sent to all the chancelleries of the earth as his interpretation. Other nations came in and accepted or qualified the interpretations given by both Mr. Kellogg and Great Britain. France came in with an interpretation in which she broadened out the so-called right of self-defense to an extent to which I think very few people who were originally for this treaty ever dreamed it would be extended. All these other nations do this; but when we take up the matter with Mr. Kellogg his attitude is—and I desire to say nothing unkind of him—"I have spoken. I have interpreted it. What I have said is binding"; and he went so far in his testimony before the committee that has been printed as substantially to assert that the interpretations placed on the treaty by other countries were innocuous, and really meant nothing.

If other countries can construe this treaty and explain it, if Mr. Kellogg can construe this treaty and explain it, and if, at the end of all the explanations, there is a world-wide dispute over it, and if upon the floor of the Senate we are not in agreement, why should not the committee bring in a report? We are not asking it to bring in a single word or a single principle the chairman of the committee has not declared it now embraces.

If we remain silent, then the construction will be that we have accepted all of the interpretations placed upon this treaty by Great Britain, by France, and by the other countries which have qualified the meaning of the language, and it will also be said that after a debate upon the floor of the Senate, the Senate declined to say a word about the Monroe doctrine, declined to say a word limiting the liability of the United States to be called upon to place restrictive measures upon other countries, declined to say that it was not in any manner bound, and that it had in any manner recognized in a binding way any of the treaties or pacts that have been mentioned by other governments. That is the situation we are in.

Let me say that that is unavoidable, if there is no vote taken upon the resolution I have had the honor to offer. If there is no report made, there will be a vote in the Senate upon the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, and if the Senate votes it down, it will have condemned it, and by condemning it, will have negatived it.

A little judgment, a little forbearance, a little disposition to have regard for the opinions of others, ought to lead those who are the advocates of world peace, and who assert that all international difficulties can be carried through without rancor, by means of peaceful negotiations, to indulge a little of that Christian spirit here and a little of that modesty of judgment which accords to others who doubt the right to have their doubts resolved, when all they ask is to have them resolved in the language which the Senator in charge of this bill employed upon this floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when the treaty was before the committee there was no suggestion of a report by anybody. The chairman of the committee, in charge of the treaty, pursued the same course he has pursued with reference to every treaty he has brought before the Senate; he reported the treaty with a resolution, and as there were no reservations and no interpretative resolutions to incorporate in the ratification resolution, of course there were none incorporated.

Those opposing the treaty had four interpretative reservations or resolutions. All they asked was that they be reported to the Senate; and they were reported to the Senate. All that was asked of the committee was done. All that was suggested was carried out. No one suggested any different course. The opponents of the treaty then had a different program.

Those in favor of the treaty felt no necessity for interpretations or resolutions or reports.

Those opposed to the treaty had their own program, which they proposed to the committee; and the committee reported, according to their request, a resolution which is here. That is the reason why it is here as it is, and that is the reason no further report was made.

I doubt not there would have been no difficulty whatever in filing a report of the committee had there been the suggestion made that has been made upon the floor, because there was nothing to go into the report which the movers of the treaty and the supporters of the treaty do not admit is in the treaty itself and what they contend is in the treaty itself.

After the matter had proceeded here for some time those friendly to the treaty, as well as some of those who were not, suggested that a report be made embodying, briefly but fundamentally, the views I had expressed in my opening remarks, to wit, the question of defense, the question of the Monroe doctrine, the question of sanctions, and also the question of whether the treaty affected our relationships to the treaties of other governments. I had no objection to that whatever. I so stated.

There was no reason why I should not put into a report, so far as I was concerned, exactly what I conceived to be in the treaty, and I drew a report embodying the views which I had expressed in my opening remarks. I think I am not proceeding outside of the proprieties when I say that I submitted that report to the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of State said, "There is nothing in this report that is not in the treaty already. I have no objection to this report." It was, of course, then understood that it was to be nothing more than a report according to the usual practice and serving the function of an ordinary report.

Had the matter stopped there the report would have been in and there would have been no controversy about it at all, in my judgment. There was no objection upon the part of the administration; there was certainly no objection upon my part, and as the suggestion came to me from friendly sources I had no idea that anyone desired in any way to affect the treaty injuriously.

Then the proposal was made that the report which was to have been made be taken up and adopted by the Senate—acted upon by the Senate. I felt at once that that would result in what would practically be a reservation, and even if it was not technically so, the foreign governments would all regard it as a reservation. I felt, furthermore, that in fact it would be a reservation, and therefore I said I could not agree to it. I so stated at once. That is where the first difference of view came. I may say I then reported that to the Secretary of State, and he said, "I could not agree to anything further than the Senate putting its own interpretation upon the treaty, because I am satisfied that beyond that it would affect very injuriously the treaty in other countries." He would not approve of it if it was proposed to go further than originally proposed.

It was proposed later that the report be filed, that it be read in the open Senate, and that an oral motion be made transmitting it to the foreign governments. To that I was compelled to object, not because at any time I have had the slightest objection to putting into a report of the committee the interpretation which I had myself placed upon the treaty in my opening remarks, but because I felt sure that taking the report and drawing it away from the ordinary functions of a report and transmitting a report of the Senate to foreign powers would have the same effect in their minds precisely as a reservation would have. There was no reason for transmitting it to foreign governments unless it had some business there. There was no reason for throwing it into their hands unless we proposed that they should take it into consideration. So I was compelled to object to that.

I have never been willing at any time to do anything that could be construed into a change of the treaty or constitute a reservation. Neither was I at any time willing to do that which could be represented abroad as a change or reservation. That has been my position from the time the treaty was sent to the Senate, and it is my position now and will continue to be.

I am willing to take my full share of the responsibility with regard to this. Let me say that the Secretary of State never objected in the slightest to a report until it was proposed to transmit the report to foreign governments or to adopt it so that it would be in effect a reservation. He would not have assumed and did not assume—and while I did not talk to the President, I assume he did not—that there was any objection to the Senate itself taking such action as it saw fit with reference to its own business. But when it came to putting it in the form of a reservation or in effect a reservation, either popularly or legally, they, of course, felt that they had to consult the situation abroad, because no government has ratified this treaty save the Government of Russia. None of the original 15 signatories to the treaty have acted upon the treaty.

The only one Government in the world which is now bound by it is the Government of Russia. The treaty has to be considered by all the foreign governments, all the parliaments which may pass upon the question, and it was thought that it was not wise to put into the hands of the foreign governments a report which could not be placed with them except for some logical purpose, and for that reason the Secretary of State felt that he could not do it. I was fully of the same opinion. I am not going to consent to anything which can be misconstrued to the injury of the treaty abroad.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator has made a statement which, so far as he has covered the facts, with one exception which is not material to the discussion at this moment, I think is accurate, as far as I am acquainted with the facts. But there is one fact the Senator has not stated; that is, that when the question was raised of transmitting the report of the committee to foreign governments, or by formal motion in the Senate approving and accepting the report, an objection was raised, and within a very few hours after that we had another conference, and it was agreed at that conference that none of those present would make any motion of that character.

Then the statement was made that some one who was not present in the conference might from the floor of the Senate make a motion of that kind. Thereupon I undertook to canvass the Democratic side, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] the Republican side, to see if we could arrive at an understanding that nobody would make that kind of a motion. I have here the checked list that I made.

Mr. BORAH. I do not challenge that at all.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I saw every Democrat in the Senate, except three, who were absent, and secured the pledge of every one of them that he would not make such a motion. I have, first and last, a checked list of all of them, except the three who were absent. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] was quite as fortunate, I think, on the Republican side of the Chamber.

When we came back to make that statement, my understanding was that the Senator in charge of the treaty felt that he was not then in a position, even with that pledge, to go forward and bring in a report.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho was not free to do so, but not for reasons which I think are in the mind of the Senator from Missouri. I was not free, because I felt it might be used to the injury of the treaty abroad.

Members of the Senate have said to me that, while they were not going to make the objection themselves, they thought it was a very serious mistake to go ahead with it under the circumstances which then obtained, and one of them—yes, two of them—I know are on the other side of the Chamber; some of them are on this side of the Chamber. We all feel that the proposal to adopt the report and to transmit it had wholly changed the situation.

In view of the fact that the question had been up for discussion as to the making of a motion, and that that fact had gone to the public, and had not only gone to the public here, but had gone abroad, a wholly different situation was created. I am perfectly aware that the Senator finally withdrew the suggestion that there should be an adoption of the report. I am perfectly aware that he did what he could to prevent a motion being made to that effect, and it may be possible that no such motion would have been made.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It was practically certain.

Mr. BORAH. But, following the proposition for the adoption of it came a second proposition that it should be read in open session and then a motion made and adopted to transmit to the foreign governments. That thing alone has been used to our detriment abroad.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But it was after all that that I took this poll and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] took the poll on the other side of the Chamber. There may be a misunderstanding between the Senator and me about this, but there is no question in my mind. It was after we had discussed the question of the ratification or approval of the report, and after the Senator had expressed the thought that some one aside from those in the conference might make the motion, that I took the poll on this side of the Chamber and the Senator from New Hampshire upon the other side, so far as we could reach Senators, and we obtained the pledge from all who were seen that they would make no such motion, that if the report came in and was filed that would be the end of it so far as they were concerned.

So that we had then and have now a practical assurance that if a report is brought in embodying in substance the construction placed by the Senator in his speech, which was a very good one, that will be satisfactory to all of us, and he can have the treaty ratified immediately so far as I am concerned, and I see the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] looking at me, so I will say so far as they are concerned.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I merely desire to point out that we went further than that and said we did not insist on having the report transmitted.

Mr. BINGHAM. And, if I may be permitted at that point, in order to protect the Senator from Idaho and ourselves against any possibility of a motion being made in regard to the report or in regard to sending it to foreign governments, it was agreed among us that one of us would make a motion to lay such a motion on the table, and as there would be no question about the adoption of a motion to lay on the table, so there was no chance of a motion to adopt the report being carried.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Completing my sentence, I do not want anything of an offensive nature or any feeling to be aroused in this debate, particularly between myself and the Senator from Idaho. We have been friends too many years——

Mr. BORAH. And will be for many years yet.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; and will be many years yet; and if we can not settle this little matter in the Senate between ourselves as friends, God knows how the world is going to settle its difficulties.

I want to repeat, if the Senator will bring in a report embodying the substance of his speech covering the questions that we have heretofore discussed, then in five minutes time, as far as the three Senators, including myself, that I have just named are concerned, he can have a vote on the treaty, and we will vote for it with those explanatory matters.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think there is any misunderstanding either as to the facts or the legitimate inferences to be drawn from the facts in regard to this matter. As I said a moment ago, when a report was first proposed to be made, it was simply to be filed. Had we stopped there, the matter would have been over by this time and no evil consequences to follow. But it was proposed to go further and adopt the report. It is true that that proposal was afterwards abandoned. It was proposed then to have it read in the Senate and transmitted to the foreign governments. It is true that that proposal was afterwards abandoned. But it is also true that before any of this happened, the matter had gone to the public both here and in Europe and the situation was such that it was being construed as effectuating reservations through a report, and that is what caused the embarrassment. It has produced a serious situation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If they are not really reservations, the fact that that impression has been given out—I presume by the press, for I know of no other way for it to get out—does not change the situation. I am not dealing with this matter, so far as I am concerned, with reference to to-day. I am thinking about a year, 10 years, 20 years from now when some dispute arises and when our Government can turn to the record of our proceedings and say "That was the construction placed upon this treaty at the time by the Foreign Relations Committee. It was our construction then and we are not changing that construction now."

It seems to me, and I say this to the Senator with—I was about to say with as much seriousness as I ever said anything—it seems to me that this treaty, for the purposes the Senator seems to have in mind, will have a much better effect with an expression of that kind as the final views of the Senate than it will have if we continue here in this debate.

The Senator knows that I refrained from making any remarks about the treaty in the hope that the conferences might come to fruition. If the debate is to go on, if the spirit of no compromise and no concession whatever is to obtain, then, so far as I am concerned, I shall be obliged to make some other observations in regard to the treaty that I do not want to make—and I do not say that by way of threat. I say it because it is a fact. I have said just about one-tenth of what I think may be wrapped up in the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. I know that the Senator in all probability will express himself fully in regard to it before the debate is over.

I agreed to the report in the first instance solely for the purpose of saving time and getting it out of the way. I never have conceded the proposition that there was any necessity for a construction of the treaty, but as the Senator who brought the proposition to me knows, I said it was agreeable to me, because it contained nothing that was not already in the treaty, and which the friends of the treaty contended was in the treaty. If it had stopped there the matter would have been ended and there would have been no question about it at all. But now I am in the position, as representing the treaty upon the floor, of considering what the effect will be since the debate has gone on—and debate in connection with this report being treated by many people as a reservation legally affecting the treaty—and what effect that will have on the 15 Governments which have to deal with it abroad and the 43 Governments which have to deal with it also. For this reason I am no longer free to go back to the original proposition.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not think there has been a Senator who has said a resolution of the committee would have the same effect as a reservation. I think there is a general consensus of opinion that it simply makes a record here that we can employ in the future for the purposes I have already indicated. I think it very unwise to indefinitely continue the discussion.

I think that consideration for at least 25 or 30 Senators who have expressed themselves and their view that they are not satisfied with the naked words of the treaty and the reservations made in the notes of foreign governments ought to lead the committee to take the matter up and bring in a report.

If the Senator would bring in the report and say in that report exactly what the distinguished Senator has said is what the treaty means, then it has not been changed one jot or one tittle. We have only said what the Senator has said it means. We have altered nothing. But if, peradventure, he might be mistaken in his construction or if foreign nations are putting a different construction upon the treaty, then the fact ought to be known now and not when the tragedy occurs that makes the employment of the treaty necessary. That seems to me to be the plain logic of the situation.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Missouri and I were debating the matter five days ago we would have ended it in two minutes. It is the situation which has arisen since by reason of the discussion and by reason of the construction which has been placed upon a report which makes it a very serious proposition which I can not take the responsibility of accepting. If the treaty is wrecked in foreign countries I do not feel that I can take a position here that will connive at that wrecking. I know that this report, if made after all this debate, will lead to misunderstanding and confusion, hence I can not agree to it.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator call his committee together to consider the question?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator had an opportunity to present his proposition for 10 days before the committee and never suggested it

Mr. MOSES. It was from the wisdom of the Senator from Idaho that the suggestion arose.

Mr. BORAH. It was not. The Senator from Idaho never suggested it.

Mr. MOSES. Was it the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BORAH. No. The proposition was brought to me by other parties. It was never suggested by me.

Mr. MOSES. In a colloquy with the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BORAH. No. I stated the legal proposition relative to a report but I did not suggest making a report. I never suggested making a report. That suggestion was brought to me.

Mr. MOSES. No; I did not think the Senator suggested making a report, but I felt sure that the Senator had clearly stated what such a report would portend.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the discussion that has just taken place between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] reveals a very peculiar situation. At the point where we find ourselves now, it appears that there is no material discord among Senators so far expressed as to the true intent and meaning of the treaty. Realizing that unless some amicable arrangement was made in the Senate "not to resort to war, but to seek only peaceful means for the settlement of the disputes" that have grown out of this renunciation of the war pact, it was I who first suggested to the Senator from Idaho, having information that such a suggestion would promote prompt action, that if a report should be filed in the Senate embodying a synopsis of the interpretation which he had made in his address on the treaty, the debate would terminate and the Senate could proceed with other business.

That proposal was entirely acceptable to the Senator from Idaho; but I later learned that some Senators wished to qualify it and have a contest in the Senate upon a motion to adopt the report, which, of course, raised an entirely different issue, and which would of itself prolong the discussion indefinitely. Subsequently the matter took the course which has been stated by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Idaho.

No lawyer will assert, after an examination into this subject, that the submission of a report by a committee of the Senate expressing an interpretation or defining or explaining the provisions of the treaty constitutes reservations or in any sense modifies the treaty. When the Senator from Idaho announced his willingness to accept the proposal, he stated that the report would embody what is already in the treaty and would in no sense qualify it from his standpoint. The mere fact that a newspaper—or some garrulous Senator, for that matter, if there be such a Senator [laughter], desiring to save his face and make it appear that he had won a gallant fight with odds against him—should circulate a story or give publicity to the declaration that the submission of a committee report constitutes reservations or qualifications of the treaty does not justify this body in wasting day after day in a debate over a subject matter about which there is no substantial difference. Pride of opinion, wherever found, is not a sufficient basis or justification for the continuance of a controversy the substance of which has disappeared, as it has disappeared here.

No one has contended that this treaty constitutes an abandonment of the right of self-defense. No one has contended here or elsewhere in connection with the proposed advice and consent to this treaty by the Senate that it contemplates the abrogation of the Monroe doctrine. Questions of policy and of strategy always arise in relation to the presentation of measures, and particularly respecting treaties.

For my part, as a member of the committee and as a Member of the Senate, I am willing to give to the Senator who feels that a report from the committee is needed to make clear the meaning of the treaty, that gratification, particularly when every Senator admits that when the report shall be made, if it shall be made, it will embody only such views as the friends of the treaty entertain respecting its correct interpretation.

It is almost a pathetic spectacle to witness 96 Senators prolonging indefinitely a controversy which has no substance. There are many matters that the Senate can devote its attention to that are of the utmost importance about which we do differ. If any one has misconstrued the legal or moral effect of a simple statement by the Committee on Foreign Relations as to the true definition of this treaty or the effect of such report, such a misconstruction can not long continue. This debate has been public from the beginning. Those who advocate the treaty have placed no different construction on it in any particular from that which the committee report would embody. The only practical difference is that the Senator from Idaho, the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Arkansas and other Senators say individually what they would say collectively if they agreed to a report.

So far as I am concerned, I do not believe that the submission of a report from a committee of the Senate can in any fair mind work harm to this treaty in the long run. We can go on until the end of the regular session of Congress, for it is pretty well known now that the last eight years of the administration of national affairs has been so inefficient respecting legislative measures that it is absolutely necessary to have an immediate extra session to deal with the real legislative problems before the country.

We have heard of "farm relief" for eight years and had none, and now as one sun passes to his setting and another approaches the rising, we are told that we must have a spring and summer session of the Congress to do what a Republican Congress has been neglecting to do, to accomplish what it has been unable or incompetent to accomplish during eight years of continued power.

Now, in order to make certain that there shall be an extra session we must go on indefinitely debating questions pertaining to this treaty.

Practically every Senator here will vote for the treaty when the final vote shall be reached. Those who have stood in the way of its immediate ratification now say, "If you will just do what you offered to do two weeks ago, and what we were not prompt enough in accepting; if you will just tell us in a committee report what you say on the floor of the Senate this treaty means, we will vote for it, and all will be amicable and harmonious." For one, I am willing to do that.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations whether he wishes to continue the session this afternoon? It is pretty late.

Mr. BORAH. I should not want to take the Senator off the floor to move a recess.

Mr. FESS. I should prefer to resume my speech to-morrow.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Idaho. He said a moment ago that he would not like to take the responsibility of agreeing to a course here that might injure the treaty in other parts of the world.

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the Senator from Ohio. I thought he had already yielded.

The Senator from Idaho did not seem to want to take that responsibility. I suggest that we might recess until to-morrow and give the Senator from Idaho an opportunity to talk to the President and Secretary of State to see if we can not agree in the morning to dispose of this question at a reasonable hour to-morrow.

I am for the treaty; I want to vote for it; but I want some interpretive statement by this body. I will say individually that I understand this treaty to mean that it does not interfere with our right of self-defense; that it does not interfere with the Monroe doctrine; that it does not bind us to go into foreign countries and take our soldiers there to help carry out the decrees of any nation or set of nations in case of war. That is my idea about it. I am willing that my country should wield her influence with other countries in promoting peace and doing everything in the world to that end. This is the greatest Nation in the world, and it means a great deal for us to be associated with other nations in the cause of peace; but I do think that we ought to make it plain that we who are called upon to ratify this treaty understand that the fundamental rights to which I have referred remain intact and undisturbed.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I wish to observe that if anybody hopes that any statement can be made in language sufficiently clear so that 96 Senators will agree to it, I think it is a vain hope.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILL. The suggestion is made that we take a recess now, and clamoring is heard in the Chamber continuously that we do not get anywhere with the debate. I took a little trouble to look up the hour of adjournment since this treaty came before the Senate, and I want to call the attention of the Senate to how little time we have actually spent on the treaty.

Since we began to consider the treaty on January 4, we adjourned on that day at 4 o'clock p. m.; on January 5 we adjourned at 3 o'clock p. m.; on January 7 we adjourned at 5 o'clock p. m.; on January 8 we adjourned at 3.45 p. m.; on January 9 we adjourned at 5.05 p. m.; on January 10 we adjourned at 4.40 p. m.; on January 11 we adjourned at 4.37 p. m.; and on January 12 we adjourned at 3.55 p. m.

It seems to me that we are not working very hard to get the treaty actually brought to the point of action. If we really mean business and desire to get a vote on it, we ought to stay here and let those who want to talk on the treaty talk on it, and then we should come to a vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I made the suggestion that I did because of what the Senator from Idaho said. The Senator from Idaho, I believe, is willing, so far as he is concerned, to make a statement here from the committee that will satisfy the Senators. I appreciate the position of the Senator from Idaho. He does not feel that he wants to assume the responsibility of saying something that the administration does not indorse or that the people abroad might construe into bad faith, and so on; but if we could take a recess until to-morrow, and the Senator could confer with those in charge of the Government—which is all right and proper—why should he not have an opportunity to do it? We might save time, and I think we would.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can say to the Senator in all sincerity that it is not necessary to adjourn to enable me to confer with the Secretary of State and the President on this matter. My position for the last four days by reason of this changed situation has been very clear, and it is not necessary for me to see them at all. I am prepared to do whatever I shall do without seeing them. Whatever the Senate does will be binding on me, whether I like it or not. But I can not agree to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, so far as I am concerned, unless this language is filed by the committee, I am going to favor a resolution to-morrow that it is the sense of the Senate that the pending peace treaty does not in any way interfere with the right of self-defense or the Monroe doctrine, or in any way bind this Nation to send its Army and its Navy abroad to execute the decrees that may be made by any combination of nations. I think the Senate will vote for a resolution like that, apart from this peace treaty. If we can act on that before we act on the treaty it will not be a reservation to it; it will be the action of the Senate. It will be the same as if each Senator should rise in his place and make that statement.

Senators, the people of this Nation have rights in this matter. When we get through with it and go home, and they begin to discuss with us reservations as to what we said about what it meant and all that, if we said we were afraid we would offend somebody in a foreign country by announcing that we are wedded to the doctrine of self-defense or the Monroe doctrine and that we do not understand this thing to mean that we are going to be bound to send troops and navies abroad to be fighting about the nations of the earth, they will want to know why we did not assert that. England has made it clear, in her interpretation of the treaty, that she reserves the right to protect her interests wherever they are, and perhaps interfere with countries about there if her interests are involved.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator—or, rather, I would if I had the floor. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has the floor.

Mr. DILL. Has the English Parliament had any report filed by any committee or any reservation made?

Mr. HEFLIN. The English Parliament has not. I am not undertaking to suggest what the British Parliament shall do. I am suggesting what the Senate of the United States should do.

The Senate is a part of the treaty-making power of this Nation, and we have a responsibility to ourselves and to those who sent us here. We are here as the guardians for a time of the rights and liberties that are committed to our hands, and we certainly ought to safeguard them to the very best of our ability.

I do not see why we should be ashamed or too timid to tell these nations that we propose to proclaim the Monroe doctrine every time we make a treaty where it is concerned.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. I will. I beg the Senator's pardon for taking up his time; but I have not consumed much time, and I knew the Senator was not very anxious to make his speech this afternoon, anyhow. I was really trying to help him out.

Mr. FESS. The suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama, I think, has some significance that ought to be a little further discussed. When he refers to the strength of the Monroe doctrine as dependent upon the assent of any country, secured by our making a statement as to what it means, he goes further than we are apt to think.

The Monroe doctrine does not get its strength from agreement. It is not the result of any negotiations. It never has been in the form of a contract between this and any other country. The Monroe doctrine is simply the announcement of a national policy. We never have asked the consent of any nation anywhere in order to make it effective.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator and I are in hearty agreement on that.

Mr. FESS. I wanted to say that I fear that if we go to the extent of placing in the form of a reservation a statement that this treaty we are making does not interfere with the Monroe doctrine we shall thereby suggest that the strength of force of the Monroe doctrine must come through the assent of other nations with which we are now attempting to make a treaty. I think it would be rather serious for this Nation to make that statement; and that is really why I would urge against placing in the treaty any form of reservation touching the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana and Mr. REED of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. FESS. I yield first to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We considered it necessary at the First Hague Conference in 1899 to assert the Monroe doctrine as a reservation. We considered it necessary again in 1907, at the Second Hague Conference, to assert it as a reservation. The Senate considered it necessary, as I understand, to insist on its being included in the treaty of Versailles; and so in every international conference until this time we have always asserted the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Well, in practically all of them since it was announced.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Whenever the question was discussed we have always asserted it.

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President; we have 30 or 40 treaties in which it never has been mentioned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We have treaties where it was not appropriate to be mentioned; it was not necessarily part of the subject.

Mr. BORAH. I refer to our old arbitration treaties, Root treaties, and conciliation treaties.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Those were with individual nations. Some of them would not have anything to do with it.

Mr. BORAH. But some of them did—South American countries.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But not a multilateral treaty with all the nations of the earth. This is the first time a treaty of that kind has been up.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We did mention it in all of the cases I have suggested.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I wish to reply to the Senator from Indiana. Please allow me to have just one moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio declines to yield further at this time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield at this time.

Mr. FESS. The mention of the Monroe doctrine in the league covenant came not with the original construction of the league covenant. It was not in the original instrument at all. When the discussion arose in the press of the United States between the first time the President was there and the second time, after he had come back to consult with some of the leaders here, when it was represented to him that one of the objectionable points on the part of certain people in the United States was that the Monroe doctrine might be involved, then it was that the Monroe doctrine was suggested as an amendment, largely in order to appease the fear on the part of a great many people here that the league covenant, without mentioning it, would involve it. That is the basis upon which it was mentioned.

As for the Hague conference of 1899, our representative there was Andrew D. White. The only thing that was done there in reference to the Monroe doctrine was to exempt it as a subject of agreement in the convention; and the same thing happened in 1907. The First Hague Conference went no further than to set up an arbitral court of justice and then make provision for a second conference. The second conference enlarged upon the arbitral court of justice by the recommendation of a really judicial body, the World Court. The only thing omitted in the completion of it was a provision for the manner of selecting the judges. Before that provision had been outlined the Balkan War broke out and prevented the third conference. The second conference made provision for a third conference; but the third conference was not called, and then the World War came. Then, as the result of the World War, a supplemental effort was made on behalf of peace that took the form of a league of nations; and that really is the reason for not having the third conference known as the Hague conference.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. In just a moment.

So I should like to reiterate that the Monroe doctrine must not be considered as the result of agreement. It never has been international law. Nobody ever has insisted that it was international law. When Salisbury, Prime Minister of England, replied to Mr. Olney, under Cleveland's administration, his reply was to the effect that the Monroe doctrine was not international law, that it had never been, and then he used what I think was rather offensive language, in which he said that it mattered not how brilliant the statesman that announced it or how powerful the nation that backed it. That, I think, was the basis of the request of the President for the appointment of a commission to investigate the disputed boundary line.

So whenever we put the Monroe doctrine into a treaty which must be agreed upon I think we are dangerously approaching the place where we are giving it its force by agreement rather than by announcement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think that when we excepted the Monroe doctrine in all of the previous treaties to which he has just referred we thereby endangered the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator, then, think that we would endanger it now if we again asserted it in a resolution of the Senate?

Mr. FESS. I fear we would in this form, I will say to my friend. In all of the preceding cases the United States, standing for the principle of arbitration, insisted persistently that we never would include the Monroe doctrine as a subject of arbitration; and that was because it is not the result of agreement between nations——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Exactly.

Mr. FESS. But it is our policy.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If it is our policy, and not the result of any agreement between nations, and not international law, if it is simply the policy of America, is it not all the more necessary to assert it than if it were already written in international law?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will ask my friend, if we put this in as a condition of ratification, does not that carry the inference that the Monroe doctrine is to be given its strength by other nations agreeing with us on its force?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator will pardon me, but he argues in a circle. A moment ago he said that when we excepted the Monroe doctrine from the terms of these previous treaties we had not weakened the Monroe doctrine. Now he says that if we say it again here on the floor of the Senate we weaken the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I repeat that if in the ratification of this treaty we make it a condition that it does not cover the Monroe doctrine we are stating what is already in the treaty, because we have always regarded the Monroe doctrine as our own policy.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If it is already in the treaty, then saying what is in the treaty will not detract from the treaty.

Mr. FESS. It may not detract from the treaty, but it might involve complications with the other countries as to its meaning.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If we simply except it in a Senate resolution?

Mr. BORAH. It is not proposed to accept it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. "Except" it. That is what we propose to say in the Senate resolution, that the treaty does not affect it. If it is contended that weakens the force of the language of the treaty, which the Senator says does not embrace it, then he has a kind of logic I can not understand.

I want to ask the Senator from Ohio, does he think that if we sign this treaty the Monroe doctrine will be in any sense affected by it?

Mr. FESS. It might be.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It might be, the Senator says. Then the Senator is willing to have the Monroe doctrine changed or altered in some respect by virtue of this treaty.

Mr. FESS. That is exactly what I am contending against.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator did not understand me.

Mr. FESS. Why is it that the Senator insists upon putting into the treaty the reservation of the Monroe doctrine when it is already reserved if we include it as an element of self-defense?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think that saying you do not do a thing amounts to an affirmation that you do do it?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator certainly did not understand my question a moment ago. I asked him then if he thought that by signing this treaty we would in any way modify or affect the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. FESS. Not at all.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If that is true, and we say that we have not modified it or affected it, how can it then impair the doctrine?

Mr. FESS. In this degree only, if we put any qualifying condition in our ratification, that qualifying condition will in a sense make it more difficult to make it effective, because other nations might not accept it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But we do not propose to put it in our acceptance.

Mr. FESS. That is a point of dispute.

Mr. REED of Missouri. All that is being asked here to-day—and the Senator, I think, could not have listened to all that was said, and I do not blame him, there is so much said——

Mr. FESS. I have listened to everything that has been said.

Mr. REED of Missouri. All that is asked is that the committee shall make a report, so that there shall be a formal statement upon the records of this body that at the time of ratifying the treaty we had this authoritative construction for our own benefit. That would not go to the foreign nations. But if there is any doubt about what the treaty means it ought to go to the foreign nations; and if it is already in the treaty, then it does go to the foreign nations, because it is in it. I can not see the point.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator is in just the same position I am in. I can not see the basis of the contention that the committee should make a report in order that this treaty, which seems to be unambiguous, may be understood. I am wondering how much light upon the language of the treaty will be thrown by making a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am wondering what effect such a report would have in interpreting the treaty. I am wondering whether anybody who reads the treaty can have his mind or judgment changed by a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and especially I am concerned on that point when the report is not to do more than give the interpretation of the treaty, widely reported, read the world over, as it was presented to the Senate by the chairman of the committee, when he explained the treaty in detail and spoke in extenso on all of these subjects.

If the chairman of the committee, speaking the language of the treaty, is not clear enough, how can his statement be reinforced by a committee voting that the chairman stated the facts correctly, especially when we, as a Senate, will vote on his interpretation as a body?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The trouble with the Senator is that he is not in agreement with the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that very little, if any, attention is to be given to the individual statements of legislators, because there is no showing that they in any way represent the body of which they are members, and because the opinions expressed are more or less in conflict; but that great consideration will be given to the reports that are filed by committees before a vote is taken. They do not say that a report is absolutely binding, but they give it great probative force. That is the reason we want a committee report.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I wish to avoid anything that might seem offensive, and I shall do so, but there are two sides to this matter represented by different views. I mean two views on foreign relations. One view is supporting this treaty, the other view is opposing it. One way to accomplish the defeat of the treaty is to get votes enough directly against it to outvote those who are in favor of it. Another way to defeat it would be to attach to it some condition that might be adopted here and carried to foreign countries, but which would be rejected in the foreign countries. That would be as legitimate a way to defeat the treaty as to vote it down here.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, does the Senator mean to say that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], and myself, and all of these other Senators who have requested that a report be made, are acting in bad faith when we stand here on the floor and say that with these explanatory statements we are prepared to support the treaty? Does he mean to charge bad faith?

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then what does he mean?

Mr. FESS. What I mean to say is that the people who are arguing for reservations here are the people who have been opposed to the treaty. That I say, and that I repeat.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Who has been opposed to it?

Mr. FESS. If I could take the language of the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. REED of Missouri. What language? When was it employed, and where?

Mr. FESS. The discussion in the committee meetings.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The discussion in the committee meetings happily is printed, and it shows absolutely nothing to warrant the statement of the Senator.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator is in favor of the treaty, I shall humbly beg his pardon, but it is the first suggestion that I have had that Senator REED of Missouri is in favor of this treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I say, and have said from the first, that I would rather we had not entered upon these negotiations, but since they have proceeded to this point I am in favor of ratifying the treaty, provided we can have stated in some authoritative way just what the chairman of the committee has said. I have said that at all times and on all occasions. I have said it to the chairman of the committee numerous times. So that I do not want the Senator to stand here and charge bad faith, or any kind of trickery, on the part of Senators who have taken this position unless he means to make that charge. If he does not mean to make it, he ought to withdraw what he has said. If he does mean to make it, then we will take care of that later.

Mr. FESS. Perhaps I do not know what the words "bad faith" mean in the mind of the Senator from Missouri. I do not contend that the attempt to defeat the treaty by writing in some reservation is acting in bad faith. I concede to anybody the right to do that sort of thing, and I do not think anybody has any right to say that that is bad faith. If they can defeat it directly, well and good. If they can defeat it by having reservations adopted, that is just as honorable as to defeat it directly, and I do not mean to charge anything like bad faith.

Mr. REED of Missouri and Mr. BRUCE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is not the point. The Senator makes that statement, and says that is honorable. What does he say with reference to the repeated assertions which have been made on this floor that we do not desire to defeat the treaty and have no such diabolic notion in our heads? That is the charge of bad faith he made.

Mr. FESS. What people say is one thing and what they do is another. What I am interpreting here is the attitude of certain Senators against this treaty. Their efforts in attempting to defeat it are peculiar, if they are in favor of the treaty.

Mr. SWANSON and Mr. BRUCE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FESS. I yield first to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Let me see if I understand what the issue is. As I understand, the Senator from Missouri and the other Senators will agree to vote for the treaty and withdraw all opposition if the Senator from Idaho will make a report carrying out his interpretation of the treaty as contained in his opening address.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. If that report be made to the Senate and filed before a vote be taken, for what it is worth, then they will all vote for the treaty and will abandon all fight against it. Do I state that correctly?

Mr. REED of Missouri. We have not made any fight. We only wanted that report.

Mr. SWANSON. I think we might as well have an adjournment and consider that.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I wanted to ask the Senator——

Mr. FESS. I yield merely for a question, not a speech

Mr. BRUCE. I just want to ask the Senator to take me out of the scope of his sweeping statement, too, because I have several times announced that I intended to vote for the ratification of this pact, and to vote for it without reservations. Yet I, too, feel most strongly that there ought to be some sort of interpretative report issued from the committee, or some interpretative resolution adopted by the Senate concurrently with the ratification of the pact. I think the Senator will find that a good many other Members of the Senate occupy the same position that I do.

Mr. FESS. I would like to have the Senator from Maryland take heed to this:

> The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

Where is the ambiguity in that statement?

Mr. BRUCE. Will not the Senator read the second article?

Mr. FESS. Is there anything ambiguous in that first article?

Mr. BRUCE. I think the language of that article is quite broad enough, considered independently of these interpretations that have been placed on the pact by foreign countries, to include defensive as well as offensive warfare.

Mr. FESS. Would the Senator offer a reservation interpreting that article?

Mr. BRUCE. No; no reservation. I do not want any reservations annexed to this pact, because then——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have the floor. The difficulty is that, after this debate, where there are those contending for interpretations, there has grown up in the public mind, not only here but elsewhere, the idea that interpretations are the same as reservations; and reservations will require the assent of other nations. This debate has gone on along that line, and any agreement to accept these interpretations to-day would almost certainly be interpreted in Europe as the making of reservations, and I do not think the friends of the treaty would agree to that.

Mr. BRUCE. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. There is no reasonable prospect that the different interpretations which have been placed on the pact by other countries are going to deter us from ratifying the pact. Is it not reasonable to suppose that any interpretations the Senate may place upon it, being practically the same interpretations as those Mr. Kellogg has already placed upon the pact, will not deter those foreign countries from ratifying the pact?

Mr. FESS. If this language is not sufficiently clear, would an interpretation by the Senator from Maryland be sufficiently clear to everybody?

Mr. BRUCE. I will not say an interpretation by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FESS. I say the Senator from Maryland because he is a scholar and he chooses his language with great clarity and speaks with tremendous expressiveness.

Mr. BRUCE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FESS. I use him as an example that I might call the acme of illustration. If the Senator had the privilege of writing the interpretation as to the meaning of that paragraph, could he make it any clearer than it is and would his interpretation be accepted by everybody?

Mr. BRUCE. I would not say the Senator from Maryland, but I would say any Senator who has any gift of clear statement. I am speaking from the point of view of the lawyer, and the Senator from Ohio, notwithstanding all his accomplishments, which we all know are quite conspicuous, is not, as I understand it, a professional lawyer.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Ohio is not a lawyer, but he was admitted to the bar and practiced for 10 years.

Mr. BRUCE. Of course, I know the Senator is as thoroughly familiar with the law as I am or as any other Senator is. Speaking as a lawyer, I think the language of article 1 and article 2 of the pact, independently of any interpretations that have been placed on the pact by foreign countries or by Mr. Kellogg, is broad enough to include both defensive and offensive warfare. The Senator knows there is now pending in this body a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution which in very clear and explicit language comprehends within the scope of its denunciation not only offensive war but defensive warfare. I do not want any reservations to the pact or annexed to the pact.

Mr. FESS. In view of the discussion that has proceeded here since January 3, is there any interpretation that might be made that would not be construed in Europe on a parity with a reservation?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I doubt it.

Mr. BRUCE. I do not contemplate any interpretation except what Mr. Kellogg has placed on the pact. But Mr. Kellogg is not the United States Senate. He has no right to say "I am Sir Oracle. When I open my mouth let no dog bark, whether a senatorial dog or otherwise." We have a function to perform just as well as Mr. Kellogg, and if we do not do anything more, I think we ought to adopt the interpretation which he has placed on the pact so that foreign countries will realize that not simply the State Department of this country, but the Senate itself has ratified the pact and interpreted it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the ratification of the treaty. I had hoped that it might be done without any reservation and without any interpretation that might be construed in Europe to be a reservation. I have never believed that the Kellogg treaty is a guaranty against war. I do not think any of the friends of the treaty have gone that far. I have always felt that the real security against war would be a reduction of armies below the point of aggression, and that would open the way, it would seem to me, for permanent peace. But when France suggested to outlaw war by resolution, while I confess it did not have much effect on me, yet it seemed to me it was a step in the right direction; and not only that, but that it would ultimately promulgate such a public opinion as might lead ultimately to the prevention of war; at least it would reduce or lessen the chances of war.

The one thing that we ought to strive to accomplish is to build into the convictions of men the will against war or the will for peace. Some people call it the "international mind." That term has come more or less into disrepute, although I think wrongly so. When I say an international mind I do not mean internationalism—furthest from it, for I am not a believer in internationalism as against nationalism. I do not believe in a dead level or uniformity where all nations are alike. That is not possible and it is not desirable. But I do mean that sort of harmony among nations whereby, while each nation maintains its own sui generis spirit, they might all be one in harmonizing one another's differences. I think that while we study rights of a nation we must also study duties of a nation, and it is my judgment that we can produce in the world such public opinion backed with the ideas of peace that it will at least go as far as lessening the chances of war and in time we might reach the place where war will be made impossible.

For the last 50 years that promulgation has been going on. We have had many world conferences that were purely matters of voluntary acts on the part of public-spirited citizens where the Government had no part in it at all. Such conferences were inaugurated before the Civil War and led all countries into conferences on behalf of peace. When the Civil War came on they were discontinued, and began again in the eighties and continued until some time in 1900. One of the world conferences was held at Boston and our Government was represented in it. President McKinley asked his Secretary of State, John Hay, to represent the Government in that conference.

Then, aside from those, were The Hague conferences, which were the most ambitious and comprehensive of any effort of that sort in our history. The first one had 26 nations represented. The second one had 45 nations represented. It was hoped that those conferences were but a part of a series of conferences that might be held from time to time.

We have seen the same thing in the American countries. Away back of the time when Garfield was President and James G. Blaine was Secretary of State the first Pan American conference outside of the Panama conference of 1826 was held here in Washington. There were three specific recommendations that came out of that conference. One of them was the establishment of the Pan American Union, with its splendid domicile on the Mall here in Washington. Another of the conferences was called by President Wilson, and it was extended even beyond the Americas. Following that was a new series, the seventh annual conference of which adjourned this month. I think that those conferences, on the one hand representing every American country outside of Canada and on the other hand conferences representing all the nations, are the agencies for producing a public opinion that will translate itself in opposition to war. I feel that they are tremendously important.

Out of the League of Nations and through that organization we have had various conferences, like the sanitary conference, the opium conference, and the health conference. There are a great number of conferences being held now as a result of that organization, and I think every one of them is cultivating a spirit of comity, and as they increase that spirit we are bound to lessen the chances of war.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree entirely with the Senator about those matters, but as I recall, when the subject of the covenant of the League of Nations was before the Senate the Senator was very much in favor of a reservation, commonly known as one of the Lodge reservations, which excluded the Monroe doctrine from that treaty. Is not that so?

Mr. FESS. I was in the other House when that subject was before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but the Senator favored those reservations, as I recall his public utterances.

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President; I opposed our Government going into the League of Nations. Therefore, I had nothing to do with the reservations. I still oppose our Government going into the League of Nations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true though that the Senator made a number of speeches—I am quite sure I have read them—saying that if we did go into the League of Nations, by all means it should be with the Lodge reservations?

Mr. FESS. I never used the expression "Lodge reservations." The Senator from Tennessee was a Member of the House at the time and that is what he is referring to. The League of Nations covenant was published for the first time in the afternoon papers of February 14, 1919. On that afternoon I was making a trip to a university near here, the occasion being founders' day. I read that covenant on the way down as carefully as I ever read any document. I read it through and through. The next morning on my way back to the Capitol I wrote a certain criticism of it and gave it to the press on my return here, in which I stated that the covenant of the League of Nations must not be accepted unless amended. I stated seven specific items that must be amended. I did not speak of any reservations. I was not in this body. I was opposing the covenant as it was written, and made the statement then that anyone who would subscribe to the covenant to the extent of putting our Nation into it without an amendment would in time be regarded unfriendly to the interests of this Nation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was the Monroe doctrine one of the items suggested?

Mr. FESS. No; it was not even mentioned at any time. Now, simply because I would not want this Nation to enter the quarrels of Europe and have always stood against it, does not mean for a moment that I am condemning the League of Nations as an organization of peace in Europe. I think it has done a tremendous amount of work in Europe which is valuable.

Our Government ought not to withhold its cooperation from the many agencies which the League of Nations has established and which are creating better conditions in the world. I cite these aspects of the work of the League of Nations with congratulation and with approval; and I think our country ought to cooperate in that good work. I refer, for example, to efforts to better sanitary conditions, to improve conditions in trade, and to prevent, as far as possible, illicit forms of trade, and to better conditions for the children and the women of the world. I think the work which the league is doing is most creditable, and that the United States is doing well to cooperate in that work. In saying that, however, I do not mean that we ought to become an organic part of the League of Nations. That I should oppose. I mention these things only as being incidental to the creation of a public opinion that ultimately may prevent war.

Much criticism has been offered of the Washington Disarmament Conference. Mr. President, I regard that conference as tremendous in the results that flowed from it. It lessened the chances of war; it ended rivalry on the seas; it reduced the burdens of taxation; it canceled the Anglo-Japanese alliance; it set up the machinery on the Pafiic Ocean for the settlement of disputes between our Nation and other nations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; it resulted in the destruction of a large number of first-class battleships, and now we are proposing to build a considerable number of second-class battleships.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, that situation arises out of the fact that we can not get Great Britain to reduce the number of her second-class battleships to our ratio; and if she will not agree to reduce them, there is nothing for us to do except to increase the number of our battleships; and that is what we shall do. However, there is no inconsistency at all in such action on our part.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And then destroy those battleships later?

Mr. FESS. No; we shall merely maintain the ratio.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I agree that it is the duty of Congress to correct the mistakes made by the Republican Party, such as in destroying battleships, and I am going to vote that way.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think that is true.

Mr. FESS. I was not joking. I was trying to talk sense.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator was having great difficulty. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the greatest result that is to be hoped from the ratification of the treaty is the augmentation of the spirit of peace as against that of war. When we consider the history of the past we witness our participation in the effort to create a sentiment against war and to build up a devotion to peace and to make it possible that the people of all nations may will peace. Why should we not pursue that effort now?

All in the world this treaty does is, first, to renounce war as an instrument of national policy. Why do we hesitate to do that? It is possible that by refusing to renounce war it can be interpreted that we are in favor of war. It seems to me that from every standpoint of common honesty, in the light of our past history, we should let the world know that war is not to be tolerated, if it can be avoided. Therefore we ought not to hesitate to renounce it as an instrument of national policy. That is the purpose of the first article of the treaty.

The second article is merely a solemn pledge that the signatory powers will not resort to warlike methods. That is not the exact language; the language is:

> The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

It is rather in the negative. The first article is a denunciation and renunciation of war, and the second is a pledge not to resort to war. When all the nations of the world will join in a denunciation of war and every nation of the world individually signs a solemn pledge not to resort to war and we are asked to do likewise, why should we withhold our assent? It seems to me in the interest of producing a public sentiment which will command peace that this is the longest step that has yet been taken.

I hope the treaty will be ratified and that any complicated or embarrassing interpretations that might cause its defeat or result in a charge of bad faith on our part in Europe will be avoided. That is my honest judgment, expressed as one who does not believe that the treaty is a guaranty against war, but that it surely is a step in the right direction.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of the remarks made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] some time ago, and in view of the fact that it has been mentioned on the floor that some 25 Senators have signed a statement of their belief and wishes in the matter, it seems to me only fair that the Senate be informed as to exactly what it is that those 25 Senators believe. Therefore I desire to read the statement which has been agreed to and signed by the 25 Senators and adhered to by others who did not care to affix their signatures.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he is going to put in the RECORD the names of those who signed the document?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no authority to put in the RECORD their names. Reference has been made to the fact that those who want a report from the committee are opposed to the treaty, and my desire is to show that that is not correct. The statement is as follows:

> We believe in the purposes and objectives of the Kellogg multilateral treaty. We believe that clarity of understanding regarding its inherent and declared functions is vital to its usefulness at home and abroad. To avoid reservations we believe the Foreign Relations Committee should report its official interpretation.

REFUND OF TAXES

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as in legislative session I desire to give a notice. Pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill H. R. 15848, the first deficiency appropriation bill, an amendment striking out the proviso beginning on page 16, line 9, down to and including line 15, and inserting in lieu thereof a substitute which I now offer and which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The proposed substitute is as follows:

> Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. McKELLAR to the bill (H. R. 15848) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, viz, on page 16, line 9, strike out the proviso contained in lines 9 to 15 and insert the following:
> "Provided, That section 3220 of the Revised Statutes (title 26, sec. 149, p. 737, U. S. C.), as amended by act of Congress on May 29, 1928, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:
> "'SEC. 3220. In case of any claim filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue before the approval of this amendatory act for refund, credit, or abatement of income, war-profits, excess-profits, estate, or gift taxes, or other internal-revenue taxes (whether such claim arises from illegality of assessment, of collection, of penalties, or of unjust or excessive taxation) the commissioner, under rules prescribed by the United States Board of Tax Appeals, shall, upon final action by him upon the claim, certify the claim to the board where the commissioner recommends a refund, credit, or abatement, and where the amount claimed or recommended for allowance is more than $10,000. The commissioner, under rules prescribed by the board, shall also certify with such claim all papers and proof in reference to such claim, with his recommendation and reasons therefor, in such form and manner as to the board may by rule require. Where the amount claimed is more than $10,000, should the commissioner not recommend the refund, credit, or abatement in the amount claimed, the taxpayer shall have the right to institute by petition to the board, within such time as the board shall by rule prescribe, a proceeding for the determination of the claim; and in such cases the commissioner shall, upon order of the board, certify to the board the papers, proof, and recommendation and reasons therefor as above specified. The board shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine on the merits any claim certified to the board by the commissioner or instituted before the board by the taxpayer under this paragraph, in the same manner as is provided for in cases of deficiencies, with the right of either the commissioner or the taxpayer to submit additional proof.
> "'Any such claim made after the approval of this amendatory act shall, where the amount claimed is more than $10,000, be instituted, within the period of limitation provided by law, only by petition for refund and/or credit or abatement filed by the taxpayer with the board. The board shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim on the merits in the same manner as is provided for in cases of deficiencies; and in such cases the commissioner shall, upon order of the board, certify to the board all papers and proof in reference to the claim in such form and manner as the board may by rule require.
> "'The jurisdiction of the board under this section shall be concurrent with the Federal courts, and any judgment of the board determining any claim under this section shall be final unless within six months the taxpayer or the commissioner has filed a petition for a review of such judgment of the board in such manner as is provided for in cases of definciencies.
> "'All judgments or decrees of a court or of the board for the refund of internal-revenue taxes, and all judgments of any court against any collector or deputy collector for any internal-revenue tax collected by him and the costs and expense of the suit, and all judgments for damages and costs recovered against any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, agent, or inspector in any suit against him by reason of anything done in the due performance of his official duty, shall be certified to the Congress for payment.
> "'All claims, whether filed before or after the approval of this amendatory act, for credit and/or refund, or abatement of income, war-profits, excess-profits, estate, or gift taxes, or other internal-revenue taxes, or penalties in connection therewith, illegally assessed or collected, or for refund of such taxes unjustly assessed, or excessive, or wrongfully collected, shall, where the amount claimed is not more than $10,000, be determined by the commissioner, and any refund, credit, or abatement therein shall be made by him, under regulations prescribed by the board.

"'At the beginning of each regular session of Congress the commissioner shall make a report to the Congress, by internal-revenue districts and alphabetically arranged, of all refunds and credits authorized by him in excess of $500, and the board shall make a like report, with its findings and orders, of all refunds and credits or abatements authorized by it.'"

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, while I am on my feet I also ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD a copy of the report submitted on behalf of the Judiciary Committee this morning on Senate bill 5319, and also a letter and accompanying memorandum from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bond, which have been received by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill S. 5319, after consideration reports the same favorably to the Senate and recommends that the bill do pass with the following amendments: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 3220 of the Revised Statutes (title 26, sec. 149, p. 737, U. S. C.), as amended by act of Congress on May 29, 1928, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3220. In case of any claim filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue before the approval of this amendatory act for refund, credit, or abatement of income, war-profits, excess-profits, estate, or gift taxes, or other internal-revenue taxes (whether such claim arises from illegality of assessment, of collection, of penalties, or of unjust or excessive taxation), the commissioner, under rules prescribed by the United States Board of Tax Appeals, shall, upon final action by him upon the claim, certify the claim to the board, where the commissioner recommends a refund, credit, or abatement, and where the amount claimed or recommended for allowance is more than $10,000. The commissioner, under rules prescribed by the board, shall also certify with such claim all papers and proof in reference to such claim, with his recommendation and reasons therefor, in such form and manner as the board may by rule require. Where the amount claimed is more than $10,000, should the commissioner not recommend the refund, credit, or abatement in the amount claimed, the taxpayer shall have the right to institute, by petition to the board, within such time as the board shall by rule prescribe, a proceeding for the determination of the claim; and in such cases the commissioner shall, upon order of the board, certify to the board the papers, proof, and recommendation and reasons therefor as above specified. The board shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine on the merits any claim certified to the board by the commissioner or instituted before the board by the taxpayer under this paragraph in the same manner as is provided for in cases of deficiencies, with the right of either the commissioner or the taxpayer to submit additional proof.

"'Any such claim made after the approval of this amendatory act shall, where the amount claimed is more than $10,000, be instituted, within the period of limitation provided by law, only by petition for refund and/or credit filed by the taxpayer with the board. The board shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim on the merits in the same manner as is provided for in cases of deficiencies; and in such cases the commissioner shall, upon order of the board, certify to the board all papers and proof in reference to the claim in such form and manner as the board may by rule require.

"'The jurisdiction of the board under this section shall be concurrent with the Federal courts, and any judgment of the board determining any claim under this section shall be final unless within six months the taxpayer or the commissioner has filed a petition for a review of such judgment of the board in such manner as is provided for in cases of deficiencies.

"'All judgments or decrees of a court or of the board for the refund of internal-revenue taxes, and all judgments of any court against any collector or deputy collector for any internal-revenue tax collected by him and the costs and expense of the suit, and all judgments for damages and costs recovered against any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, agent, or inspector in any suit against him by reason of anything done in the due performance of his official duty, shall be certified to the Congress for payment.

"'All claims, whether filed before or after the approval of this amendatory act, for credit and/or refund of income, war-profits, excess-profits, estate, or gift taxes, or other internal-revenue taxes, or penalties in connection therewith, illegally assessed or collected, or for refund of such taxes unjustly assessed, or excessive, or wrongfully collected, shall, where the amount claimed is not more than $10,000, be determined by the commissioner, and any refund, credit, or abatement therein shall be made by him, under regulations prescribed by the board.

"'At the beginning of each regular session of Congress the commissioner shall make a report to the Congress, by internal-revenue districts and alphabetically arranged, of all refunds and credits authorized by him in excess of $500, and the board shall make a like report, with its findings and orders, of all refunds and credits authorized by it.'"

[Report to accompany S. 5319]

The reasons actuating your committee in reporting this bill favorably are as follows:

From the hearings on the first deficiency bill in the House and the Senate it appears, first, that the Secretary of the Treasury has submitted a request approved by the Director of the Budget and the President for $75,000,000 to be appropriated as a deficiency to pay tax refunds that will probably be made before June 30. It will be remembered that the Congress has already appropriated $130,000,000 for this year.

The Assistant Secretary, Mr. Bond, states as follows:

"Mr. BOND. One hundred and thirty million dollars has been appropriated and we are asking $75,000,000 more" (p. 10).

And again, Mr. Bond testified:

"Senator McKELLAR. How much have you left?

"Mr. BOND. My recollection is that before the steel payment we had about $52,000,000; $26,000,000 was paid to the Steel Co., and there is still something like $21,000,000 or $22,000,00 available now. Of course, there are payments being made every day in the week" (p. 11).

And, again:

"Senator McKELLAR. In other words, you get the money appropriated by Congress before you pass on the cases?

"Mr. BOND. We have to make our estimates based on what has happened in the last year or the last six months, and then we ask for an appropriation; otherwise you would allow a refund and then the Government would have to pay interest at 6 per cent on many millions of dollars until the appropriation could be made, which would be a very considerable item" (p. 3).

Let us examine these two contentions. In the first place, the claim that the money should be appropriated in advance in order to save interest is not material, because the bureau is now allowing interest from the date of payment and the question of interest would amount to an exceedingly small sum. Again, the allowance of interest is only provided for in the revenue act of 1928, and it is exceedingly doubtful as a legal proposition whether the allowance of refunds on these old claims is permissible under that law. Manifestly, as it seems to us, the allowance of interest provided for in the act of 1928 should not be retroactive.

That so large an amount is not necessary is apparent from the following:

"Senator McKELLAR. How many claims have you passed on during the last eight years?

"Mr. BOND. There were 168,501 refunds allowed in 1928, the fiscal year of 1928.

"Senator McKELLAR. If you allowed 168,000 claims in 1928 and have only 12,740 now, if $130,000,000 is already appropriated for next year and you have $18,000,000 now on hand, how can you conclude that your refunds are going to be so large in another year, with 168,000 allowed this year, and when you only have 12,740 cases on hand?

"Mr. BOND. Senator, during the quarter ending in September we adjusted 11,705 claims, and during the previous quarter we adjusted 11,818 claims, and during the September quarter we received 11,690 claims. You see, claims are coming in at the same time that we are disposing of claims.

"Senator McKELLAR. I understand; but in order to get the facts correct, I notice that on page 97 you say the number of claims now pending on account of earlier years is 12,740. How many claims of earlier years have you already settled?

"Mr. BOND. Previous to that date?

"Senator McKELLAR. Well, you here make a distinction of 12,740 in earlier years. I do not know exactly what you mean by that. I do not know where your division is, unless they were war claims or growing out of the war.

"Mr. BOND. The question that was asked me, which led to that answer was: 'Would you say that the greater portion of it is for claims for 1923 and back of that time?'

"I answered that I did not know, but would put in the best statement I could, and then this statement was inserted in the record. I presume it applies to 1923 and prior" (p. 20).

So that it seems that the number of claims is less and there ought not to be as much money paid out in the future as there has been in the past, and the $130,000,000 already appropriated should be sufficient for all claims yet to be made this year. But in any event there will be $130,000,000 available July 1, and they now have at least $22,000,000.

SECOND

A second reason for the passage of this bill, in the opinion of your committee, is based on the facts concerning the United States Steel Corporation case recently decided by the bureau, in which a $26,000,000 refund to the United States Steel Corporation was made for the year 1917. Apparently, the facts in that case were that in 1919, 1920, 1921 four reassessments of the United States Steel Corporation were made, aggregating about $17,000,000. The first of these was made on December 29, 1919, for $7,190,165.71; the second on December 3, 1920, for $6,369,497.75; the third on February 14, 1921, for $167,073.30; and the fourth on August 29, 1921, for $4,000,000. These aggregate something over $17,000,000. (Testimony of Mr. Bond, p. 28.)

It further appears that cases like the Steel Corporation case are passed on by a committee in the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, now called the general counsel's office. (Testimony of Commissioner Blair, p. 2.)

This particular case was tried by three men of the general counsel's office or the solicitor's office—Mr. Service, Mr. Cardwell, and Mr. King.

"Mr. BOND. Mr. Service has been in the bureau since November 6, 1919, Mr. Cardwell since June 8, 1920, and Mr. King since October 11, 1920 (p. 29).

It will thus be seen that Mr. Service was in the solicitor's office when all the reassessments for 1917, amounting to $17,000,000 were made; that Mr. King and Mr. Cardwell were in the office when all these reassessments were made except the first one. (Record, p. 29.)

Thus it is seen that while it does not actually appear that these three gentlemen took part in assessing the United States Steel Corporation in 1917 they were present in the office and no doubt were familiar with it, or should have been familiar with it, if they did not actually take part in it.

There were also in the department at that time Mr. Wayne Johnson and a Mr. Alverson (p. 26).

On March 1, 1920, before three of these assessments were imposed, Wayne Johnson became the solicitor of the department, and he served as such solicitor until September 15, 1920 (p. 26).

He was admitted to practice in the Treasury Department on February 25, 1921.

I quote from the testimony of Mr. Bond:

"Mr. BOND. Mr. Wayne Johnson was employed as a special attorney in the office of the solicitor for the Bureau of Internal Revenue (now general counsel's office) from April 10, 1919, to March 1, 1920. On this latter date he became solicitor for the bureau and served as such until September 15, 1920. He was admitted to practice before the Treasury Department on February 25, 1921. As far as can be ascertained from the bureau's records, Mr. Johnson had no contact with the tax case of the United States Steel Corporation during the entire period of his employment with the bureau.

"Senator PHIPPS. May I interpose a question, Mr. Secretary?

"Mr. BOND. Surely.

"Senator PHIPPS. At the time of the additional assessment of $17,000,000, was that payment made under protest?

"Mr. BOND. Of course, it is immaterial under the law now.

"Senator PHIPPS. That is true.

"Senator MCKELLAR. But it was material then.

"Mr. BOND. I have no personal knowledge as to that" (p. 26).

Mr. Alverson resigned September 30, 1920. He was an attorney in the general counsel's office (p. 28).

So that year we have this United States Steel Corporation case settled in the solicitor's office. We find that after the reassessments, or some of them, had been made, then the solicitor and one of his assistants resigned and were admitted to the practice of law before the bureau, and that soon after they filed a proceeding before the bureau to obtain a refund of taxes which had been assessed in part while they were connected with the bureau. We find that they tried the case before three employees of the bureau, who were employees of the bureau when these three assessments were made—one of them when all of the assessments were made and the other two when all of them but one were made. We find that this case was tried in secret, passed upon in secret, and virtually paid in secret. We find that while the solicitor's office reassessed the Steel Corporation in 1917 in the sum of $17,000,000, yet some 10 years afterwards a committee from the same office where it was assessed and who were members of the office while it was assessed were paying back $15,000,000 of the sum then assessed against the steel company. In addition to that there were $11,000,000 of interest.

But even that is not all. They allowed a much bigger judgment than the $17,000,000. Mr. Bond was good enough to give the entire picture.

"Senator MCKELLAR. I do want it, but what I want to know first is this: Is not the net result of the litigation that the Government made a reassessment or reassessments against this company in 1917 and collected $17,000,000, and since that time they paid back the principal sum of $15,000,000, together with $11,000,000 interest? Is that right?

"Mr. BOND. That is right as far as you have gone.

"Senator MCKELLAR. All right. Now go ahead and give me the information you spoke of.

"Mr. BOND. Here is the information that I think you want——

"Senator MCKELLAR. I shall be delighted to have it.

"Mr. BOND. In addition there was a credit of about $28,000,000, with interest, making about $31,000,000 altogether, which, having been certified as overpaid on the 1917 tax, was credited against some pending deficiencies for later years.

"I was afraid you did not know that, and I wanted to be frank and give you the full picture.

"Senator MCKELLAR. That is fine. I am much obliged" (p. 27).

So that instead of only the trifling sum of $26,000,000 repaid to the United States Steel Corporation, there was this sum with the additional sum of $31,000,000, making a total of $57,000,000 that was paid back to the Steel Corporation for this one year 1917, 10 years after the assessments were made. In other words, they not only got back substantially all of the special assessments but they got back refunds on the original assessments necessarily.

Your committee is of the opinion that this indicates such a loose method of procedure, not to speak of it more harshly, that their method of refunding taxes erroneously or improperly made should be changed to a system less objectionable.

THIRD

In other words, the Steel Corporation for 1917 made its own returns and then was later on assessed with $17,000,000 additional. It then afterwards in the manner heretofore pointed out secured not only a repayment of $17,000,000 but some $40,000,000, counting the interest, back from its original report of taxes which it had voluntarily made. But that is not all. This appears to be the only case that the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has taken up. There was a hearing before that committee on the matter of this refund on December 17 last.

Mr. Parker, the administrative agent of the committee, testified as follows:

"Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Parker, from your examination of it, what was this dilemma about the computation that you spoke of, and how much money did it involve?

"Mr. PARKER. The amount of money in taxes is a little hard to say. The computation that was required was for invested capital. The invested capital is an amount that is very large. In the steel case it ran up, in the year 1917, to over $1,000,000,000.

"Now, then, the amount that was in dispute was between a determination on the regulations of the bureau and a determination made on the Court of Claims decision, and the difference between those figures was about $69,000,000.

"Senator MCKELLAR. $69,000,000 difference?

"Mr. PARKER. But that does not mean that much in taxes. That probably means about one-tenth of that, you see, in taxes.

"Senator MCKELLAR. In other words, it would be about $6,900,000?

"Mr. PARKER. About 11 per cent; it would be a little bit more than that.

"Senator MCKELLAR. About $7,000,000?

"Mr. PARKER. Yes.

"Senator MCKELLAR. What conclusion did they reach, according to their own regulations, about this $7,000,000——

"Mr. PARKER. No; they made an adjustment in this amount.

"Senator MCKELLAR. And that was in violation——

"The CHAIRMAN. Give the witness a chance to answer.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Yes; I will. Was that in violation of their regulations?

"Mr. PARKER. Well, it was against their regulations.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Against their regulations" (p. 39)?

So that we find the remarkable situation that in determining what amount should be refunded, this bureau, as constituted as above set out, returned $7,000,000 and, of course, this carried interest, which amounted to some $5,000,000 more—in all, perhaps, $12,000,000—in direct violation of the regulations by which this refund was supposed to have been made.

Again, it was said:

"Senator MCKELLAR. We are not passing on that question now. But I simply want to ask you to state certain facts, whether in this decision in this case the bureau disregarded its own regulations to the extent that you mentioned on this $69,000,000 difference; is that correct?

"Mr. PARKER. They disregarded their regulations on certain points, because the Court of Claims had already decided on that particular point that they were wrong" (p. 40).

FOURTH—THE X TOBACCO CASE

The facts in the X Tobacco Case were somewhat different. The X Tobacco Case was thus stated by Mr. Parker as follows:

"Senator MCKELLAR. Suppose that they had followed your suggestions made there, would it have made any difference in the amount paid to the tobacco company?

"Mr. PARKER. Well, this case is one where the refund was almost entirely due to the allowance of what is known as special assessment. That is the relief provision under the revenue act.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Yes.

"Mr. PARKER. The courts have since held that it is a discretionary provision within the power of the commissioner, and the commissioner evidently in this case thought that this was a right determination.

"Senator MCKELLAR. In other words, the tobacco case was settled primarily upon a matter of discretion?

"Mr. PARKER. I do not think the taxpayer would have had any rights in this case in courts.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Would not?

"Mr. PARKER. He would not have now; at that time this other decision had not been rendered. He probably could not have enforced the collection in the courts.

"Senator MCKELLAR. And about $6,000,000 was paid out by the Secretary of the Treasury, or by the Internal Revenue Bureau, to the American Tobacco Co.—or, was it the American Tobacco Co.?

"Mr. PARKER. Let us call it the X Tobacco Co.

"Senator MCKELLAR. To the tobacco company, in order to conform with your idea of secrecy, about $6,000,000 was paid out for which that company had no legal right to recover, according to your judgment?

"Mr. PARKER. They had a legal right. The commissioner had legal authority.

"Senator MCKELLAR. I am talking about this: They could not have recovered under order of the courts, if the commissioner had asked them to go into the courts, they could not have recovered?

"Mr. PARKER. That is my opinion now" (p. 49).

Your committee feels that this method of repaying funds is such a slipshod method that it ought to be corrected, and cases of this importance should be settled in the open by an impartial tribunal.

FIFTH

Your committee feels that the secrecy surrounding these refunds of taxes should be removed. This question of secrecy must not be confused with publicity of tax refunds generally. The secrecy here referred to is that secrecy which surrounds the hearing and granting of refunds in the revenue department. All these gentlemen were questioned about this.

"Senator MCKELLAR. You, yourself, do not actually review these cases?

"Commissioner BLAIR. No; I can not possibly do it" (p. 2).

Again:

"Senator MCKELLAR. At any rate, Mr. Commissioner, these cases are tried in an absolutely secret way in so far as the outside public is concerned?

"Commissioner BLAIR. We are required to do that by law." (P. 5.)

Again:

"Senator MCKELLAR. Will you state, Mr. Commissioner, a single case that any part of this $75,000,000 is urgently necessary to settle?

"Commissioner BLAIR. Well, I do not know. This $75,000,000, as I understand it, is appropriated to take care of such refunds as will be made during the remainder of this fiscal year" (p. 8).

"Mr. BOND. I can not give you the names, Senator.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Why?

"Mr. BOND. For the same reason that I have explained before.

"Senator MCKELLAR. In other words, the law governing the Bureau of Internal Revenue provides for absolutely hermetically sealed information, does it, and you are not permitted to go beyond that?

"Mr. BOND. That statute, Senator, that you enacted——

"Senator MCKELLAR. Do not say 'I,' because I voted against it. You might say the statute that my associates enacted.

"The CHAIRMAN. But you are responsible for it.

"Senator MCKELLAR. I want to get rid of it if I can.

"Senator PHIPPS. Senator, let me ask you a question: Would you not resent any man at this table going to the department and demanding to see your personal income-tax return?

"Senator MCKELLAR. Not at all. I should be perfectly delighted to have anybody see it" (p. 33).

"Senator MCKELLAR. As a matter of fact, you can not disclose the names because of the law that provides for throwing secrecy about the tax returns. Is not that so?

"Mr. BOND. That is correct, Senator.

"Senator MCKELLAR. You are not doing it because of any desire on your part not to be open and frank about it?

"Mr. BOND. Not a bit.

"Senator MCKELLAR. But simply because of your construction of the law which provides for secrecy in all these matters. Is not that right?

"Mr. BOND. That is correct" (p. 34).

Again:

"Senator MCKELLAR. What cases are there now amounting to over $75,000—refunds of over $75,000—that are before the committee or that have been transmitted to your committee by the bureau?

"Mr. PARKER. I am under the same limitations about naming those cases.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Well, can you give me how many there are? Can you give me the number of them? If the name is so sacred, let us have the number.

"Mr. PARKER. After all, they are coming up while I am sitting here. I can give you the number as of a certain date, or how many we have received up to a certain date" (pp. 50 and 51).

"Senator MCKELLAR. Now, how in the name of Heaven has the United States Steel Corporation's name been given—how did it leak out; how did the people get hold of its name with regard to this matter, when the other names are so carefully preserved, except as to the tobacco company? How in the world did you gentlemen ever let those two names of those two concerns get out?

"Mr. BOND. Because Mr. GARNER got up on the floor and described the whole case. I do not say that in criticism, but because you ask the question.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Well, that is awful on Mr. GARNER'S part, I should imagine. I think that he ought to be dealt with. I am speaking ironically, of course. I want the record to show that.

"So it was due to Mr. GARNER that those two names got out. It was over your protest, I suppose?

"Mr. PARKER. No, sir; but Mr. GARNER is a member of this committee. Mr. GARNER has a right to see our records. He has a different standing from all others, except members of our committee, so far as our records are concerned.

"Senator MCKELLAR. He had a right to see any of these records?

"Mr. PARKER. Yes.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Then it was not such a heinous offense to Mr. GARNER to disclose the names of those two concerns?" (pp. 42 and 43).

"Senator MCKELLAR. Are hearings on these tremendous sums held and are they open to the public?

"Commissioner BLAIR. No, sir; they are not open to the public.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Are they open to anyone except those who are interested?

"Commissioner BLAIR. They are open to all the members of the bureau, all the people in the bureau, and the taxpayer.

"Senator MCKELLAR. As a matter of fact, no one else in the bureau would be interested in them except the officers handling a particular case and the taxpayers and their representatives; is not that true?

"Commissioner BLAIR. Yes; that is true" (p. 4).

"Senator MCKELLAR. I would like to know whether these gentlemen are going to refuse to disclose this information?

"Commissioner BLAIR. If I find I am prevented by law, I am going to refuse; but if I find I am not, I will cheerfully give it to you.

"Senator MCKELLAR. I think we are entitled to it before this committee when a request is made here for this enormous sum of money. Now, there is no immediate necessity for this appropriation, is there? There is no urgent claim that is now about to be settled?

"Commissioner BLAIR. There are claims and overassessments being allowed every day.

"Senator MCKELLAR. Will you be good enough to have filed the claims which you are going to pay out of this $75,000,000?

"Commissioner BLAIR. It is to be applied to the payment of claims as they are determined.

"Senator MCKELLAR. I understand that, but I would like to know something about the cases and something about the claims which you are going to pay out of this $75,000,000.

"Commissioner BLAIR. There is no way by which I can tell until a case is passed upon finally" (pp. 9 and 10).

Thus we see that in so far as the allowance of these claims is concerned, if in the one of the United States Steel Co., where $57,000,000 was refunded, no information is given out by the bureau, it is already hermetically sealed. Your committee is of opinion that this is not to the best interest of the Government; it is not to the best interest of the honest administration of the bureau that under such a system the grossest kind of injuries might happen, and the committee thinks it ought to be done away with.

Your committee further reports that there is no question of publicity of tax returns. This bill does not provide for publicity of tax returns in any way, but it does provide that where a taxpayer disputes the validity of his own voluntary tax returns or disputes the validity of any reassessments that have been made upon him, then the case shall be tried openly before the Bureau of Tax Appeals, which has been created for that purpose.

METHODS—EXCUSES

We desire to call particular attention to the evidence of Assistant Secretary Bond in reference to the method used. In speaking of the payment of the taxes by the Steel Co. for 1917 and the additional assessments made against that company for that year and in 1919, 1920, and 1921, Mr. Bond said that it was understood that the payments of these taxes was only provisional.

In this connection is to be found the evidence:

"Senator MCKELLAR. Well, now, you say that both sides understood that that was not to be a final determination. Were you a member of the department at that time and was there any agreement to that effect?

"Mr. BOND. I happened to be in the department, Senator, for the first six months of 1918, but I do not recall that I had anything to do with the Steel case.

"Senator McKELLAR. Then how do you make the statement now, 10 years afterwards, that there was an agreement on the part of the Government and the Steel Co., that this was to be a provisional assessment and an additional collection? Who made the agreement for the Government that this taxation of the Steel Corporation in 1917 was to be merely provisional?

"Mr. BOND. It was not any agreement, Senator, but it was always customary—and I am reasonably certain you will find that the letters so indicate it in this case—that that was merely an office examination of the returns, and that that was to be followed later by an audit in the field, and the final determination reached at a later date.

"Senator McKELLAR. Did you treat all other taxpayers that way?

"Mr. BOND. Yes.

"Senator McKELLAR. Did everybody understand that their assessments and collections during the war were merely provisional and that after the war was over they could come back and adjust their cases and either receive refunds or pay the Government more money?

"Mr. BOND. Every large corporation knew that before its tax matters were finally closed its books would be audited with the greatest care and the work reviewed and their tax finally determined on the basis of those facts" (pp. 23 and 24).

(The italics are ours.)

Your committee, while having the highest respect for Mr. Bond, is of the opinion that making these assessments during the war was provisional, he is wholly mistaken. They are of the opinion that any official who made an agreement that a tax paid voluntarily by a taxpayer and that an assessment paid by a taxpayer afterwards with the understanding that the Government should later make an audit and refund was without authority and void, if any such agreement was made.

Your committee further believes that if such was the practice of the department, it was a wrong practice; if such was the method of the department, it was a wrong method; and, that if only the large corporations took advantage of it, that it was a discrimination in favor of the large corporations that should not have been made.

Again:

"Senator McKELLAR. And upon that audit you felt that this company had not paid enough money and required it to pay $17,000,000 additional?

"Mr. BOND. That was knowing there would be a readjustment later on.

"Senator McKELLAR. Was the 1918 case included in this refund?

"Mr. BOND. No.

"Senator McKELLAR. Is that still pending?

"Mr. BOND. That is being studied in the bureau.

"Senator McKELLAR. I would like to know in that connection, what is the amount of the claim of the Steel Co. in that case?

"Mr. BOND. It is for $50,000,000 and interest.

"Senator McKELLAR. They have that claim now, and that involves the year 1918?

"Mr. BOND. Yes, sir" (pp. 24 and 25).

Now, your committee is of the opinion that these methods of settling were wholly unfair and unjust not only to the Government but to the smaller taxpayers who were not put on the same basis.

THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION

It has been suggested that instead of conferring jurisdiction upon the Board of Tax Appeals to review these cases it would be better to confer that jurisdiction on the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

In the opinion of your committee there are several reasons why this is not advisable.

First, because under the practice of that committee its proceedings are all in secret, and this your committee believes is incorrect.

Second, the joint committee has never functioned on but one tax case and that was the Steel Co. case on December 17, 1928. (Record, p. 44.)

"Senator McKELLAR. On internal-revenue taxation. All that has ever been done in so far as tax refunds were concerned was this sole and only meeting you held on December 17, 1928, when the only result of that meeting was the letter that was written by Mr. HAWLEY to the department?

"Mr. PARKER. That is the only formal meeting we have had on an individual case. As I say, I have reported to members of the committee, and they have advised as to what should be done in those cases" (p. 44).

Third, the joint committee is composed of very busy Congressmen and Senators, and necessarily this matter must be left to their administrative agent, Mr. Parker. He does not have the machinery for examining these cases. If this machinery were turned over to him, he could, no doubt, do it, but we would have the anomalous situation of some tax cases being passed on by the Board of Tax Appeals and others by this joint committee, which, in the opinion of your committee, would not be advisable.

PURPOSE

The purpose of this bill is to confer concurrent jurisdiction upon the Board of Tax Appeals to reexamine the papers and the files of the Internal Revenue Commissioner in all cases where the claim involves more than $10,000. The taxpayer is not deprived of any right to go into court in reference to a claim for taxes, but if he elects to take it up before the Board of Tax Appeals, he may do so. These cases are publicly heard and its reasons are public documents. It only has jurisdiction over claims appealed by taxpayers, and it should be given this additional jurisdiction over all claims involving more than $10,000.

JANUARY 11, 1929.

Hon. H. H. BOND,

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BOND: I will be greatly obliged if you will send me down by special messenger in the morning a list of all those who have been allowed credits or abatements of taxes during the years from 1920 to date. I have been reliably informed that there is such a list already compiled in your department, and I know it will not be much trouble. Of course, I want the amounts. If, under your interpretation of the law, you are unwilling to give me the names of the taxpayers to whom abatements, credits, or depletions have been allowed, I will be glad if you will give me the amounts of these credits, abatements, or depletions by year; in other words, the total amount from 1920 up to date.

I am sure from what I have been informed and from what I know about the necessity of the department for having such information for the Director of the Budget that the figures are available.

Your immediate attention to this will greatly oblige.

Very sincerely yours,

KENNETH McKELLAR.

JANUARY 14, 1929.

MY DEAR SENATOR McKELLAR: I inclose a memorandum from Mr. Mires, assistant to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which gives you most of the information which you requested in your letter of January 11. I regret that in the limited time it has not been possible to furnish more complete information. For the reasons that I explained at the hearing before the Senate Appropriations Committee the law does not permit me to give you the names of these taxpayers, even if it were possible to prepare the list within the time available.

I must point out to you in connection with this information that it is my opinion it is very misleading to submit a total of abatements and credits. The reasons are several.

1. Many taxpayers included questionable items in their returns under the 1917 and 1918 acts and filed claims for abatement at the same time to protect their interests. As soon as these claims had been passed on many were promptly allowed and the tax abated.

2. Many abatements have been made by reason of court decisions and in conformity thereto.

3. In the earlier years of the bureau when the work was congested it was often necessary to make many jeopardy assessments to protect the interests of the Government against the running of the statute of limitations and in these cases an amount sufficiently large to protect the Government was necessarily named, the excess being abated after the correct figure had been later determined.

4. Many abatements are made on the recommendation of collectors because assessments have proven to be uncollectible and this is the only way in which the collector can be relieved of his responsibility under his bond.

5. Many abatements are made because it is found that the tax should be assessed to a different person or corporation after the case has been carefully examined and the abatement is in effect a transfer of the assessment to another name.

6. At certain times it has been necessary to make assessments of the same tax to all of the corporations of a consolidated group or to a large number of transferees under section 280 of the 1926 act, and in these cases when the tax has been paid in full by one of the parties the assessment against the others are abated.

7. With respect to the year 1923 the revenue act of 1924 contained a retroactive provision which reduced the assessments by 25 per cent for the year 1923 and this excess had to be abated on all outstanding assessments.

These are the principal reasons why these figures on abatements and credits seem to me to have no real significance and would be misleading. I trust that if the figures are used this statement of their lack of value may be read at the same time.

If I can furnish you further information, will you please advise me.

Very truly yours,

HENRY HERRICK BOND,
Assistant Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 14, 1929.

Memorandum for Assistant Secretary Bond:

Following is a statement showing the amount of income-tax assessments abated and credited during the fiscal years 1923 to 1929, inclusive:

Fiscal year:
1923	$306, 583, 881. 95
1924	355, 628, 775. 65
1925	226, 155, 508. 74
1926	339, 237, 700. 53
1927	262, 292, 604. 21
1928	199, 194, 252. 14

It will be noted that in the latter years there has been a substantial reduction in the abatements and credits reflected in the above tabulation. In explanation of the large amounts abated and credited during the older years, attention is invited to the procedure then in vogue, which was permitted under the laws then in effect, and which seemed at that time the most practicable way of handling the difficult situation.

The revenue laws of 1917 and 1918 contained many features that were difficult of interpretation. In many instances the bureau advised taxpayers to file their returns, including questionable items, and at the same time to file claims for abatement in order to protect their interests. Thus many original returns were filed showing excessive tax. As the laws were later interpreted by Treasury and court decisions it became necessary to reduce these excessive assessments by means of abatements and credits. Furthermore, the work of the bureau was congested during the early years of the income tax and it was necessary to make numerous jeopardy assessments for the purpose of protecting the interests of the Government against the running of the statute of limitations and for other purposes. Many of these jeopardy assessments were excessive but it was deemed advisable to place on the records a certain amount of tax to thoroughly protect the interests of the Government. At later dates when the true liability was determined, these liabilities were reduced by means of abatements and credits.

Furthermore, when the revenue act of 1924 was enacted, it contained retroactive provisions which necessitated the reduction of assessed liabilities for the taxable year 1923 by 25 per cent. All of the aforementioned reasons have resulted in large amounts of abatements and credits. The revenue act of 1924 practically abolished claims for abatement. A new procedure based upon the later revenue acts is now in effect, which, except in cases of jeopardy, requires a correct determination to be made of a taxpayer's liability before an additional assessment is made. The effect of the new procedure is already evident and is reflected in the statement of abatements and credits shown herein. As the pending cases are disposed of, the number of abatements and credits should be further reduced year by year.

The following is the number of refunds made to income-tax payers during the fiscal years 1923 to 1928, inclusive, based not only on claims filed but overpayments discovered as the result of audits and the retroactive provisions of the revenue act of 1924:

Fiscal year	Number of refunds	Total amounts
1923	175,217	$97,487,781.02
1924	146,617	124,854,302.08
1925	[1] 2,742,062	136,686,092.73
1926	[2] 305,159	157,507,038.45
1927	236,569	90,439,298.27
1928	155,560	121,683,283.52

[1] Includes 2,612,735 refund items under provisions of section 1200 of revenue act of 1924.
[2] Includes 16,523 items refunded under above section and act.

The following statement shows the number of refund claims received by the Income Tax Unit for overpayment of income taxes during the fiscal years 1923 to 1928, inclusive. This does not include the claims received and adjusted or other adjustments made as the result of audits in the offices of the several collectors of internal revenue:

Fiscal year:
1923	66,926
1924	88,514
1925	65,613
1926	72,195
1927	47,808
1928	43,981

It will be impossible to comply with the request of Senator McKELLAR relative to a list of all those who have been allowed credits or abatements. You will note that the items for refund alone amount to in excess of 3,000,000, and no doubt the items abated and credited would exceed that number.

H. F. MUIR.

EXECUTIVE SESSION WITH CLOSED DOORS

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business with closed doors.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After five minutes spent in closed executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in open executive session, took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 15, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 14, 1929

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Grady Reynolds, of Alabama, to be United States attorney, middle district of Alabama. (A reappointment, his term having expired.)

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

Charles H. Rawlinson, of Wisconsin, to be United States marshal, western district of Wisconsin, vice Will Touton, appointed by court.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 14, 1929

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Leo A. Rover to be United States attorney, District of Columbia.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

W. Vosco Call to be United States marshal, district of Utah.

Park C. Shank, jr., Peach Bottom.
Mary M. Kite, Pocono Manor.
Adah E. Pettis, Saegerstown.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, January 14, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou who art and evermore shall be, earnestly may we seek Thee because of Thy loving-kindness and mercy which have followed us all our days. With silent tread Thou dost walk to and fro among men to quiet and soothe the scenes of sin and strife; also to lift the curtains of hope before their waiting eyes. Do Thou clothe our weakness with power, that we may deserve a name from which spring the great and beneficent movements of to-day. How we desire to thank Thee for sweet and unfailing friendship, for the ones we trust and love and from whom we get the sunshine of existence. If in our homes there are those in darkened chambers, with the light shut out and where silence palls, oh, be a voice there, a consoling voice. Tell them the things of the immortal soul and bestow those blessings of priceless worth, namely, peace and rest. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 11, 1929, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1156. An act granting a pension to Lois 1. Marshall.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. JONES and Mr. FLETCHER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On January 5, 1929:

H. R. 10093. An act for the relief of Ferdinand Young, alias James Williams.

On January 9, 1929:

H. R. 14813. An act to authorize an appropriation for completing the new cadet mess hall, United States Military Academy.

On January 10, 1929:

H. R. 12897. An act to provide for the acquisition of a site and the construction thereon of a fireproof office building or buildings for the House of Representatives.

On January 11, 1929:

H. R. 3041. An act for the relief of Alfred St. Dennis;

H. R. 8798. An act for the relief of William Lentz; and

H. R. 13404. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Louisiana State Museum of the city of New Orleans, La., the silver service set in use on the battleship Louisiana.

On January 12, 1929:

H. R. 4935. An act to authorize the appointment of First Lieutenant Clarence E. Burt, retired, to the grade of captain, retired, in the United States Army;

H. R. 11071. An act providing for the purchase of 1,124 acres of land, more or less, in the vicinity of Camp Bullis, Tex., and authorizing an appropriation therefor; and

H. R. 13033. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convey certain portions of the military reservation at Monterey, Calif., to the city of Monterey, Calif., for the extension of Alvarado Street.

On January 14, 1929:

H. R. 53. An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture;

H. R. 13503. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Hastings, Minn.;

H. R. 13540. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ouachita River at a point between the mouth of Saline River and the Louisiana and Arkansas line;

H. R. 13826. An act authorizing the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Union, Nebr.;

H. R. 13848. An act to legalize a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Paw Paw, W. Va.;

H. R. 14473. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River within the city of Aurora, State of Illinois;

H. R. 14474. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River within the city of Aurora, State of Illinois; and

H. R. 15333. An act granting the consent of Congress to the South Park commissioners and the commissioners of Lincoln Park, separately or jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across that portion of Lake Michigan lying opposite the entrance to Chicago River, Ill.; and granting the consent of Congress to the commissioners of Lincoln Park to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Michigan Canal, otherwise known as the Ogden Slip, in the city of Chicago, Ill.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON MEMORIALS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I send a resolution to the Clerk's desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut offers a resolution (H. Res. 287), which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing Committee on Memorials, to wit: BURTON L. FRENCH, of Idaho, chairman; FRANK CROWTHER, of New York.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as the minority representative of the Ways and Means Committee, I have not a resolution prepared at the moment for the election of the minority member of this committee. With the permission of the gentleman from Connecticut I would like to amend his resolution by adding the name of the lady from New Jersey, Mrs. MARY T. NORTON.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, that is acceptable to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I submit a unanimous-consent request. For two or three days of the last week a very important conference was held in the city of Washington, called by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, with reference to the present epidemic of influenza. Among the actions taken by that conference was a report of the committee on the extension of public-health organization memoralizing Congress to take certain action to extend the field of their work. I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions may be incorporated in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following report of the committee on extension of public health organizations to the conference called by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service with reference to the present epidemic of influenza:

Whereas the reports submitted to the conference of State and municipal health officers called by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to consider the present national epidemic of influenzal conditions brings anew to our attention the fact that in many parts of the Nation, especially in the rural section, the organized administrative health machinery, both national, State, and civic, is utterly inadequate to properly conserve and protect the public health not only in ordinary times, but also and more especially in times of health emergency: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this conference that the present epidemic conditions have demonstrated the necessity for additional personnel attached to the Public Health Service to assist in the organization and development of effective health administration in such localities of the country as are not properly cared for, acting in cooperation with the official State health authorities to the end that the public health of the Nation may be properly conserved; and be it

Resolved, by this conference, That Congress be requested to thoroughly consider this important question and provide sufficient appropriation to properly organize a system of national public health defense.

EXTRA SESSION—FARM RELIEF—TARIFF

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the subject of farm relief, revision of the tariff, and the extra session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of farm relief, revision of the tariff, and the extra session of Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the State of Pennsylvania is vitally interested in this proposed revision of the tariff and a solution of the farmer's problems, and as one of Pennsylvania's Representatives in Congress I am decidedly in favor of this extra session of Congress, and I am opposed to the consideration of either one of these measures at the present session of Congress.

Last week the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress went on record in favor of the calling of an extra session of Congress as early as feasible after the inauguration of Herbert Hoover as President of the United States to consider an upward revision of certain schedules of the present tariff law, and to consider what steps, if any, should be taken looking toward the solution of the farmer's problems.

One of many reasons why the enactment of farm-relief legislation may not now take place at this short term of the Congress arises from the multiplicity and scope of the suggestions made by the farmers themselves. A careful consideration of these suggested remedial plans leads to the conclusion that to date each involves the reweighing and attempted adjustment of many related factors, so connected with the well-being of our citizenry that no legislator acknowledging his trusteeship to the people may conscientiously act hurriedly. In order the better to illustrate this position let us briefly partially analyze some of the questions raised and issues involved in just one of the suggested remedial plans—tariff revision. It is to the revision of the present tariff that a large number of American farmers look for prompt relief, and yet how many are there among us who can completely and conclusively answer any one of the many initial and basic queries involved, such as: (a) Does tariff in any form handicap instead of help the American farmer? (b) Is the present tariff helpful to him generally and to all parts of his industry or as to certain products only? What additional products should be protected by tariffs and to what extent? (c) If present tariff is not effective, can it be changed and amplified so as to produce substantial advantages without out-of-proportion disadvantages to others? And so forth.

As to tariff, there are several so-called schools or groups among the farmers; one advocating high tariffs on all agricultural imports; another advocating no tariff or free trade; another between these two schools, advocating a tariff on particular classifications only; another advocating tariff for revenue only—that is, a tariff under which the total of the import duties will be an appreciable item of income to the United States Treasury, but under which import collections will be so sufficiently low as not to interfere with a practically free international interplay or exchange of products of all classes, whether agricultural or industrial. Within the high-tariff group there are a goodly number of farmers now advocating completely prohibitive tariff schedules.

The members of the "no tariff group" scoff at the idea that lack of tariff would eventually reduce the American farmer or American workman to the social or living level of the farmers and workmen of other nations. They point out that our wealth of available natural resources, plus economic leadership, which is to be retained through American efficiency, will continue more than to offset competition from any source. For example, in manufacturing they claim that American manufacturers are prosperous primarily because of the cheapness of basic raw materials, and secondarily because of mass production through proper use of machinery and power under efficient management, and cite as present results such examples as $4,000,000,000 per year in automobile production, and a like sum in iron and steel products, and so forth, and at the same time point out the fact that the cheapest automobile in the world is manufactured by workers paid the highest wages in the world. They state that by improvement in methods, production has been increased more quickly than number of workers; that because of efficient use of power, labor, and ever-improving machinery and equipment, a given processed or manufactured article can now be produced more quickly and with fewer operatives than ever before; that we have just entered upon the field of standardization, and that as we approach the ideal in standardization, there will be still greater reduction in mass-production costs; that the studies of the National Industrial Conference Board as to increase of individual output showed that taking the year 1899 at 100 as the base, production per worker arose to 156 in 1914, to 198 in 1919 and 285 in 1923; that as to number of workmen, taking as index base 100 for 1899, the increase was to 134 in 1914, 161 in 1919, and 190 in 1923, thus clearly establishing that in the race between quantity production and labor employment the former is steadily but rapidly outdistancing the latter. This is one of the conditions, so the group insists, which insures continuance of high wage per American worker; that no similar mass-production condition can be set up in Europe or elsewhere to compete with us for the reason, inter alia, that basic raw materials are not available at low living and low wage scale of European and other producing countries which will permit competitive manufacturing as against our low cost of basic materials and high wage efficient operatives.

As to natural resources available in farming, this group points out that the per capita acreage in the United States is approximately 16 acres as against 3.1 in France, 2 in Germany, 1.9 in India, 1.7 in Italy and in Japan, 1.4 in Great Britain, 0.9 acre in Belgium, and so forth, and that the relative comparative labor output (all activities of labor considered, among which agricultural production is an important one) per inhabitant in the various countries is as follows: 30 for the United States as against 20 for Canada, 18 for Great Britain, 16 for Belgium, 12 for Germany, 8¼ for France, 7 for Holland, 3½ for Japan, 2¾ for Italy, 1¼ for British India, 1 for China.

This group sees that in availability of our great natural resources, plus individual initiative under our free Government and free schools, is vested our safeguard for and insurance of prosperity under free trade; that while we have approximately 6 per cent only of the world's population, yet we possess and enjoy the use of not less than 50 per cent of the world's basic resources of iron, copper, timber, coal, cotton, and oil; and could produce agriculturally, if called upon to do so, the whole world's necessary staple food supply; that so far as can be foreseen, all these conditions will continue to obtain; that we are now producing approximately two-thirds of the world's steel and approximately 50 per cent of the world's pig iron; over 50 per cent of the world's copper; over 70 per cent of the world's petroleum; over 50 per cent of the world's timber output; about 40 per cent of the world's coal; about 50 per cent of the world's lead and zinc; about 80 per cent of the world's sulphur; about 55 per cent of the world's cotton; about 40 per cent of the world's electric power; 75 per cent of the world's corn; about 30 per cent of the world's cereals; about 35 per cent of the world's tobacco, and so forth; that we possess and enjoy 50 per cent of the world's railroad mileage and nearly 70 per cent of the world's telegraph and telephones, and 90 per cent of the world's automobiles; that our manual labor in factory and field is more intelligent than any other in the world, and is better instructed in the use of tools, machinery, and power; that the resulting increased output per worker will continue to justify higher wages per man only so long as and to the extent that a market can be and is found for the surplus thus created and to be created, and that as domestic consumption can not be increased to consume the surpluses accruing and to accrue, the world's markets must be opened to receive it; but this can take place only when volume of trade or interchange of goods shall have been established through free trading.

This group stresses also that in large-volume consumptions there is quick turnover; i. e., rapid use of money. It insists that in any event so long as high tariffs are sustained on manufactured products, little or nothing can be gained for agriculture by sustaining low or no tariffs on its products; that large volume of international trade and quick turnover can be had, not through an endeavor to compel international exchange of products in kind, but by free exchange of products of all kinds—raw, manufactured, and semimanufactured, both agricultural and industrial. This group of farmers have never been able to understand why with all the great available mineral and other resources, including timber, and with up-to-date machinery and mass production, and skilled labor under efficient management, the manufacturers of the United States have continued to insist upon high tariffs for their products. This group of farmers feels it is such insistence for these high tariffs on manufactured articles that causes other nations to produce agricultural products which the American farmers are better fitted more economically to produce; that in fact it is these high tariffs on manufactured articles which cause other nations to begin production of agricultural items which have never been included in any United States import tariff, e. g., cotton; and they cite such organizations as the British Cotton Growers Association, formed in 1902 to stimulate growing of the staple within the Empire, and which is financed and sustained by funds secured under a tax of 6d. per 500-pound bale on all cotton used by British spinners. They argue it thus comes about that the cotton growers of the United States are in trade practice called upon to pay such tax per bale on American cotton used by British spinners; and that thus, in effect, the cotton growers of the United States are compelled to continue to pay for this British propaganda and resultant colonization and the competition which follows. The Empire Cotton Growing Committee in its report to Parliament in 1920 stated that the Empire's cotton output had been so increased that at that date the Empire was furnishing approximately 6,000,000 bales of the world's cotton output of approximately 25,000,000 bales, and that a large increase in production was to be expected in the Sudan, northern Nigeria, and Uganda.

This group of farmers believe that while cotton has remained on our free list, presumably because we have always been large surplus exporters of cotton, nevertheless it is because of the inability of the British and other large consumers of our exports to trade freely with us, on account of our high tariff on manufactured and other imports, that necessary retaliation has taken place through use of capital in creating competition by methods similar to the one above mentioned, resulting in increased output abroad even of the agricultural products we have always kept on our free list because of our always raising exportable surpluses thereof. This group of farmers maintain that at last the whole false economic idea of low wages being necessary for low per unit production costs in the United States has been thoroughly exploded in domestic industry, i. e., that such false economic theory has been destroyed by mass production under high wage per worker, establishing low cost per unit in United States production; that unwontedly capital has now firmly created this economic basis of procedure in industry in this country and thus undesignedly capital has itself removed a club which it so long wielded over labor to influence its judgment in all tariff discussions; that now the farmer and the laborer may and should logically and bravely stand together to compel the removal of tariffs so as to insure volume of trade and consumption of the surpluses which the American farmer and the American laborer can and will produce if given the opportunity at per unit costs so low as to make successful foreign competition impossible, even while sustaining the present high wage rate for labor, and thus, they argue, will be brought about a similar wage rate to the farmer for his labor. Moreover, this group of farmers points out that under the present high tariff there were imported into this country last year less than $1,000,000,000 worth of agricultural commodities which from any viewpoint could be deemed competitive in character in relation to our agricultural production. They hold it is unfair economics, having in mind the general welfare of all our people, to include in the list of imported agriculture commodities of competitive character, such items as the $83,000,000 worth of wool imported in 1927, needed here for manufacturers' wants, since value on the manufactured article is so much greater than the value on the raw material used. They maintain that as farmers they should be willing to consider such items to the extent they are now imported as "noncompetitive," having in mind

"the greatest good for the greatest number." This school of farm economists insist that the unbalancing of trade and so-called "spotted favoritism" in tariffs have been the result of political action induced through favored industrial lobbies.

They maintain that in any event it must be conceded approximately one-third of the importation of agricultural products, which may be classified as competitive, consists of wool and sugar, and that these products are grown by about 8 per cent only of our farmers, and that although we have had high tariffs on both these products for many years, there has not resulted increased supply sufficient for domestic consumption; that to raise the sugar tariffs high enough to shut out importation would mean at least 10-cent sugar to American users and that such a raise would cost the American consumers not less than a half billion dollars per year additional to their present sugar bill; that a tariff which would shut out all wool importations would likewise be extremely costly to the American public; that the average rate of protection on manufactured goods under the present tariffs, ranges around 40 per cent, and that the present tariff of 31 per cent on scoured wool is an extremely high tariff, under which in any event not more than 8 per cent of the farmers are benefited; that a tariff of around 40 per cent on sugar would mean an additional $15 per year, approximately. per farmer's family, in living cost, and that in any event not more than 4 per cent of the American farmers could be benefited, because not more than 4 per cent would in any event be engaged in sugar farming; that at least 96 per cent of the farmers who would buy high-priced sugar would not be producers of sugar. This group of farmers see no value whatever in cereal tariffs. They state we have always raised a surplus and are always exporters, and that import tariffs on cereals never can be other than a hindrance or handicap to the grower in the United States of cereal products; that we export from 25 to 30 per cent of our wheat, 20 per cent of our rye, a large part of our barley and oats, and some corn in the form of pork. This group points out that our agricultural exports play a large part in our foreign trade, and emphasize that even if import tariffs on agricultural products were to increase domestic prices, as argued by their opponents, it would only result in such stimulus increasing domestic output, and thus again place before us all the problems involved in surplus production, including all the problems of selling such surplus by export; and that there is no gainsaying exportation can only be sustained in exchange for commodities.

In brief, this group maintains that the farmers of the United States have long suffered because of the lack of free trade, not because of too much of it; that a great foreign trade may be had only under freer conditions of exchange; that under such freer conditions of exchange the countries of Europe, Asia, Africa, and South America would take more of our farm products and at a higher price because of the freedom of exchange of commodities; that what we lack is a greater demand for farm goods; and that under the present tariff system we are endeavoring to trade with foreign peoples who can not advantageously offer their goods to us in payment because of our tariffs.

The other great group, which probably contains less economists but undoubtedly more dirt farmers, if we concede that the issue of tariff has at all been dominant in recent American elections, holds that increase in tariff duties on agricultural imports has of itself never reduced our foreign sales, either of farm products or manufactured commodities. Senator REED SMOOT is the political leader of this group. He points out that while there was a slight gain in agricultural exports in 1892–1896 under a so-called low tariff, yet between 1897 and 1901, a period usually designated as one of adequate protection, there was an increase of more than $200,000,000 over the 4-year low-tariff period of 1892–1896; that between 1902 and 1911, with protective import duties on foreign products, our agricultural exports averaged nearly $900,000,000 per year, as against an average of approximately $639,000,000 per year in the low-tariff period of 1892–1896; that between 1911 and 1913, also a protective period for agriculture, exports for domestic agricultural products averaged around a billion dollars per year; that under an increased import duty on agricultural products after 1922 agricultural exports increased rapidly, reaching over $2,500,000,000 in 1925; that an increased scale of import duties on foreign agricultural products was followed not by a decrease but by an increase in exports of domestic agricultural production; that, judging by the past, it is reasonable to assume an increase now in duties on foreign products would not retard exports of domestic products; that there is nothing in obtainable data to indicate that in the past protection of domestic farm products has ever retarded the export of such products; that a high tariff would decrease imports and thus increase the domestic market for the American farmer, while, judging by all past data available, at the same time increase his export trade; that, in any event, the American farmer will profit far more by obtaining full control of the domestic market than in putting his goods in the foreign market in competition with the producers of the world; that it is conceded on all sides the tariff has sustained domestic manufacturing and the export trade we enjoy in manufactured articles, and that this makes for a state of prosperity in the cities and centers of population, where the greatest quantity of the farmers' production is consumed; and lastly, that the customs revenues obtained under high protective tariffs is an important item in the Government's income, which is reflected to the advantage of the farmers as well as to every class of our citizens.

There is within this group of high protectionists a smaller group which frankly demands "prohibitive tariffs," and this small group has lately flooded the country with printed data intended to show that we must have prohibitive tariffs. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which not a few farm leaders insist is an organization representing manufacturing industry and so-called capitalism, but not farming, has printed and distributed a tract wherein it is set forth approximately 75,000,000 acres of United States land acreage is displaced by these agricultural imports. Included in the total were such items as these: 17,000,000 acres for hides, 20,000,000 acres for wool, 16,200,000 acres for sugar, and so forth.

Whether free trader or protectionist, the American farmer has long been insisting that American manufacturing has been disproportionately favored in the tariff schedules in comparison with protection given farming. It was thought this objection had been overcome by the 1922 tariff, but it is now increasingly evident such tariff has not proven satisfactory in practice in many particulars. It would seem, therefore, that in this crisis of farm depression the issue of readjustment of tariff may not properly be avoided, although releasing anew problems involving complexities upon which there can be obtained no unanimous opinion. The immediate object of any legislative action now taken should be prompt relief. Hence, even if it could be shown that in theory (or in actual practice were it to be tried out), the free trader has substance in his position, nevertheless, because it is so evident this free-trade group is at present made up of a minority, any adoption of their position and consequent reversal of Government policy could not possibly be quickly had.

What, then, shall be done? There are only two replies—either nothing or that which can be done. As to the solution of the farm problem our citizens are divided into two camps—the "do nothings" and the "try somethings." The big majority, including nearly all farmers, belong to the "try somethings." The "try somethings" would now do that which can be done. They approve a trial over a reasonable period for higher importation protection on all agricultural products produced in the United States by a reasonably large number of farmers and which can be produced domestically at prices which will not seriously affect the living costs of the United States consuming public. Experience under such a tariff should and can begin within the year. If the export results of the past under high tariffs, as pointed out by Senator SMOOT, obtain over a period of years under such new tariff, and, moreover, at same time a greater part of the domestic market (even to the extent of a half billion dollars or more per year) is likewise vouchsafed to the American farmer, then, indeed, will this remedy have proven its value.

It is under such reasoning, and having particularly in mind the urgency and necessity for prompt relief, that many legislators, willing to concede there is food for thought in the arguments for the free-trade group, are now standing ready to vote for increase in import duties on such agricultural items as we can produce in the United States at reasonable prices for domestic consumption.

But if we agree on this tariff plan for relief of farm depression there remains to study and classify the items of production which will meet the economic limitations mentioned, and which limitations must in any event obtain if relief is to be confined within the boundaries of "the greatest good for the greatest number." Simple as such problem of classification might be, those experienced in "tariffs under operation" know that the whole field of economics must be measured and weighed not only as to each item involved but also as to the relation of that item in its group of direct competitors, including substitutes; and then the relation of such group to the whole must be properly weighed and adjusted. And, again, it is to be considered whether or not there would result much labor lost if all this weighing and adjusting were done wholly within the agricultural classifications.

If there is to be taken any favorable congressional action in response to the farmers' demands for complete adjustment of what they have long called "the inequalities in protection between farmers' and manufacturers' products," not a few contend that so interwoven are the factors comprising the whole that any general horizontal or other advance of protection on all items comprised within the field of farming activity or production would only result in again unbalancing the whole in an unfair economic way, unless the whole field of all enterprises are simultaneously considered. However, this may be, is it not evident from this necessarily limited discussion that if the Congress is to provide any prompt effectual relief for the American farmer at this crisis of a farm-depression period, justice to all, and especially the farmer, demands we now see to it that again haste does not make waste; that so broad and involved is this subject that there can be no due consideration given it at this session. Whether right or wrong, the farmers are demanding there shall be general debate on the floor of these issues affecting their future welfare. During the last decade demands upon the time of Congressmen have been so great the tendency has been more and more to divide work by committee assignments. This has tended to limit debate on the floor. Whether or not this has resulted in more laws but less fully thought out and really less effective reformatory and remedial legislation is an issue probably not germane to my present discussion, except that attention is now called to it because the farmers' publications are asserting the agricultural crisis demands our giving the best there is in each of us to its consideration, whether or not we are serving on any committee having directly to do with it. So, if this is to be done, and if general debate is to be had on even only the more important of the remedial plans, there can be no hope for action at this session of the Congress. Nor is the farmers' demand for general debate without promise of developing some milk in the coconut. Who can say that with all participating in the debate new light might not shine on the true weight of many tariff comparisons and relations. For example, what valuable advantages, if any, will result to cotton producers if cotton is left on the free list, but a high tariff is placed on some of its substitutes—say, flax, hemp, and jute? How about wool? Do these cotton-plantation owners want high tariff on wool—a great substitute for their product? Again, if import duty were to be placed on all classes of cotton our manufacturers import, and irrespective of other items or schedules the maximum of such tariff were agreed upon, how much off-set from such maximum should in fairness be made for increase in tariff on substitutes?

If the "try somethings" are to agree (and as we have seen, it is probably necessary that in considering this problem of quick farm relief, the "try somethings" must at least agree on an amplification and further extension and trial of so-called high protective tariff), then nevertheless it is evident there will arise in the consideration of these amplifications and extensions not only competition for favor as between manufacturers and industrialists on the one hand and agriculturalists on the other, but also as between the various classes composing these separate groups; and that necessarily time is involved and must be consumed in the due weighing and adjustment of all these economic factors, until the resulting law is a reflection of the greatest good for the greatest number. The problem is so great as to call for the intense thought of every legislator who conceives of his position as being a trusteeship for the promotion of the welfare of the people.

I hope I have demonstrated that, if the farmers of the group demanding tariff revision are correct in their analysis of the importance of their demand, then they have reason underlying their request that there be no hurried and briefly considered legislation enacted for farm relief at this session, but that a special session of the Congress be had in the immediate future, devoting itself solely to consideration of farm relief.

In conclusion I assert that my study of the demands of the farmers and of the many remedial plans suggested gives me knowledge that not a few are at least as complicated and demand as much time for proper consideration as the proposed tariff revision which, for purposes of illustration, I have hurriedly partially analyzed. Mr. Speaker, it can not be that the Congress would be so insincere as to undertake enactment of farm-relief legislation in the brief remaining period of this session.

EXPENSES OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts presents a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 267

Resolved, That the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia now engaged, pursuant to a committee resolution, in an investigation of the government of the District of Columbia be allowed expenses of the same not to exceed $1,500, which shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the House Committee on the District of Columbia.

The resolution was agreed to.

SONS OF UNION VETERANS OF THE CIVIL WAR

Mr. BEERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution from the Committee on Printing, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 240

Resolved, That there shall be printed as a House document the proceedings of the forty-seventh annual encampment of the Commandery in Chief, Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War, for the year 1928, with accompanying illustrations.

The resolution was agreed to.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BEERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers another resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 263

Resolved, That there shall be printed as a House document the proceedings of the thirtieth national encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States for the year 1929, with accompanying illustrations.

The resolution was agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the War Department appropriation bill, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15712, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of help for care of materials, animals, and equipment, $2,328,553.

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURLOW: On page 50, line 20, strike out the sign and figures "$2,328,553" and insert in lieu thereof the sign and figures "$2,453,375."

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the committee for this very important amendment. This is one of two amendments which I am offering for the purpose of raising the appropriation for the National Guard. These amendments would have been offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS] if he were present, but illness makes it impossible for him to be here.

The purpose of the first amendment, which is an amendment in line 20, page 50, is to increase the compensation of caretakers. These are the animal caretakers, motor mechanics, and Air Corps caretakers. At the present time these caretakers receive pay for 11½ months each year, and they work 12 months during the year.

Most of our Federal employees, as you know, receive 30 days' vacation, 30 days' sick leave, and if they are in a military establishment they receive 15 days with camp pay.

These caretakers do not get even 15 days' leave with pay. During the 15 days they are in camp, it is true, they get $1, or whatever they receive as enlisted men at the camp.

I do not think the attitude of the Congress should be a niggardly one with regard to these employees. I have gone through the hearings, and I see no argument against giving these men pay for the 12 months' work that they do. I see no argument for not treating them substantially as we do other employees of the Government. The National Guard Association is simply asking that these caretakers be given pay for the work they do, and that is pay for 12 months' employment, which they are not receiving to-day.

I might say that last year the National Guard cut the pay of these caretakers 6 per cent to come within the appropriation.

This item raises the appropriation approximately $124,000.

There are three other items that will be submitted at the proper time which will deal with the construction program of the National Guard—maintenance and rations for the National Guard. The four items in reality go together.

These are the items that your National Guard officials have been writing to you about. These are the items that the American Legion has been wiring you about, and I hope they are made a part of this appropriation bill.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURLOW. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Why does the gentleman from Minnesota suggest that these two amendments really ought to be considered as having one bearing. Your last amendment, if I understand correctly, has to do with construction, has it not?

Mr. FURLOW. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Have they not funds enough to make the construction during the period of years as planned?

Mr. FURLOW. I want to explain the construction program and the maintenance and rations amendments at the time I introduce the amendments.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this appropriation provides for caretakers enough to take care of the horses, and mechanics enough to take care of the automobiles and trucks that are used in connection with the National Guard.

The only question about the appropriation is this. There is a request on the part of some of the National Guard officers that we provide money enough to give them, in addition to the regular leave which they get, 15 days additional leave pay so they can be paid the leave pay in addition to their National Guard service pay while they are attending the National Guard camps.

This expenditure for caretakers is very liberal. There is a provision so liberal in the bill that they are permitted the way they operate to have one caretaker for each eight horses, and in some cases they are paid by the number of horses they take care of, and my information on the subject is that some of these hostlers draw as much as a couple of hundred dollars a month.

Having all these things in mind and having in mind the fact that we have dealt so liberally with the Guard, it seems to me it is absolutely improper that this appropriation be increased for the caretakers.

Mr. FURLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. FURLOW. The gentleman will admit that these caretakers now work 12 months during the year and receive pay for 11½ months, will he not?

Mr. TABER. That is not the case.

Mr. FURLOW. What is the case?

Mr. TABER. Every one of these caretakers is allowed now 15 days' leave.

Mr. FURLOW. Fifteen days' leave at the time he goes to camp, for which he receives the pay of an enlisted man.

Mr. TABER. He is allowed 15 days' leave for which he receives pay.

Mr. FURLOW. My information from the National Guard Association is this——

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is misinformed, because the committee has been into this particular question very carefully, and that is not the situation.

Mr. FURLOW. I want to say to the gentleman that I have taken this matter up very carefully with officers in the Militia Bureau, with the president of the National Guard Association, and the statement made to me by these gentlemen is that these caretakers work 12 months during the year and receive pay for 11½ months, and for the 15 days that they go to camp they receive the pay of an enlisted man, which is probably $1 or $1.15 a day, and that they have no leave with pay.

Mr. TABER. That is not the situation.

Mr. FURLOW. I think the record will show that.

Mr. TABER. The committee has been into the situation and found out that while some of the National Guard officers stated that that was their understanding of the situation, the committee has found it is not the fact.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. As I understand the situation it is this: A certain number of these caretakers are enlisted men in the National Guard and a certain number are civilians.

Mr. TABER. That is true.

Mr. BARBOUR. There is a period of two weeks during which all the National Guard animals and matériel go to the summer camp.

Mr. TABER. That is true.

Mr. BARBOUR. During that period of two weeks the enlisted caretakers go on a basis of pay graded according to their rank in the enlisted personnel of the National Guard. A sergeant will draw a sergeant's pay at the camp, and a private a private's pay; but the civilians do not draw any pay for that two weeks' period, because they are not employed. The matériel and the animals and all the supplies which they are charged with the care of are at the camps. The civilian caretakers are not there and are not working during this period of time and therefore draw no pay for it; but the enlisted men get their pay according to their grade while they are at the camp.

Mr. FURLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. FURLOW. I think the gentleman will agree with me in this statement. There are Federal employees to-day outside of the caretakers who receive 30 days' leave, 30 days' sick leave, and if they are part of the Military Establishment, if they are members of the National Guard, they receive 15 days' military leave; is not that true?

Mr. TABER. I think the gentleman is correct as to the employees in Washington departments.

Mr. FURLOW. Why would the gentleman distinguish between these employees and the caretakers——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Because the caretakers have been dealt with exceedingly liberally already. I think it is a bad practice for us to go on and extend it beyond reason and beyond what in private life the employees are receiving.

Mr. NEWTON. I am not clear in my own mind about it. Federal employees do not generally get 30 days' leave. That is the situation in Washington, but not throughout the field. So there is a misunderstanding right there. Now, the point I am trying to get at is this: Here are the caretakers, and those who are civilian employees go to camp and do not work and do not get paid for work. They get 15 days' leave in the 11½-months' period.

Mr. TABER. They do.

Mr. NEWTON. Do they get 15 days' sick leave during the same period?

Mr. TABER. They do.

Mr. NEWTON. So the only employees that are out during the 15 days are the civilians who do not act in a military capacity.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. NEWTON. Can they take the leave during the 15-day period?

Mr. TABER. They can.

Mr. FURLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. FURLOW. I want to read from the hearings.

Mr. TABER. I will say that the statement of some of the National Guard officers would bear out the gentleman's position, but the committee has found out the facts as I have stated.

Mr. FURLOW. Does the gentleman claim that the statements of the Chief of the Militia Bureau and the president of the National Guard Association and statement made by the executive officers who appeared before the committee are all wrong?

Mr. TABER. We have found that these gentlemen are mistaken, that they did not understand the situation.

Mr. FURLOW. Where did the gentleman and his committee receive the information?

Mr. TABER. It is all stated on page 1047 of the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. I ask for three minutes more. This is a statement by Colonel McAdams of the Militia Bureau:

The effect of the lack of sufficient funds to pay caretakers on the basis of 12 months' pay, including 15 days' leave with pay, is as follows:

Enlisted caretakers: They may take 15 days' leave with pay at any time during the year except while their organization is undergoing field training, during which period they do not receive any pay as caretakers but receive their military pay as enlisted men, approximately $1 per day. They receive pay as caretakers for only 11½ months.

Mr. FURLOW. That is in line with the statement I have made.

Mr. TABER (reading):

Civilian caretakers: They may take their 15 days' leave with pay at any time during the year except during the 15 days their organization is undergoing field training, during which period they are laid off without pay regardless of whether they have taken their 15 days' leave with pay as funds are provided for payment of only 11½ months. They do not receive any pay during the 15 days their organization is in camp.

The crux of the whole matter is the amount of funds provided for the pay of caretakers—if on the basis of 12 months' pay, caretakers will be permitted to draw 12 months' pay, including 15 days' leave with pay; if on the basis of 11½ months, caretakers must lose one-half a month's pay contrary to the intent and purpose of the regulations granting 15 days' leave with pay.

My understanding of the situation is that in spite of their statements these enlisted caretakers can and do largely take their 15 days' leave while the organization is in camp.

Mr. FURLOW. The gentleman is supporting my argument. If the gentleman has any other information the committee ought to have the benefit of it. I have quoted from the highest source in the National Guard—the Militia Bureau and the president of the National Guard Association. If there is anything which the committee has which will show that I have said anything that is wrong we ought to have the benefit of it.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. I notice, beginning on page 1047, a question by the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] as follows:

Then the civilian caretakers would probably all take their vacations while their units are in camp?

And Colonel McAdams says:

Yes, sir; they are doing that now; but they draw no pay while on their vacation as all other Federal employees do.

There seems to be some contradiction in the hearings.

Mr. TABER. The enlisted men and the civilians each receive pay for 11½ months. They are given out of that 15 days' leave with pay and can take it whenever they choose—at camp time or otherwise.

The other 15 days in the year the animals are in camp, and there is no work for them as caretakers and therefore they receive no pay.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, it seems that the chief purpose of Government at the present time is the raising of the salaries of Government employees. There seems to be very little else that the Congress these days is concerned with.

There are scattered throughout the United States, 1,719 of these caretakers, practically all of them enlisted men in the Regular Army. There are perhaps a dozen farmers among them. They receive an annual average salary as caretakers of $1,275. In addition to this they receive their drill allowances, 48 in number, and they also receive their pay at camp for the 15 days that they are there. For the work done they receive more for it than is paid by any private concern for similar work. They have three sources of income, their salary as caretakers, their pay for 48 drills a year, and their pay while at camp. There is one purpose and only one purpose in this amendment and that is to permit these men while at camp to receive double pay. That is all there is to it.

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. FURLOW. That is nothing unusual in the Military Establishment, is it? Is not that the procedure at the present time with the Federal employee who is detailed with the National Guard?

Mr. COLLINS. I do not care anything about that; that is beside the question. I hope it is not the disposition of the Congress to put every person who performs a day's work for the Government on leave, sick leave, and all other leaves. These men have a vacation of 15 days at camp, and they are paid for it, and while these animals or tanks or guns are at camp these men are not in charge of them but others are in charge of them there.

We are going to extreme lengths already in providing the National Guard with almost everything given to the Regular Army. Mr. Weeks, when he was Secretary of War, was asked about the expensive program of the National Guard. He stated then that its growth was going to be exceedingly expensive. It is now costing us around $55,000,000 a year. Is not that enough? Many of the activities that he thought unnecessary are provided for the guard. He thought it should be an infantry organization only.

Mr. ADKINS. How does the total expense this year compare with that of last year?

Mr. COLLINS. It is growing all of the time.

Mr. ADKINS. Increasing materially?

Mr. COLLINS. Increasing all of the time. It will not be very long before the guard will be asking an expensive dress uniform. I asked General Hammond if the new dress uniform was a part of their program. He said that it was not a part of their program at that time, but intimated that it would be a part of their program at a later date.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. This is not all of the amendment. The amendment likewise provides for additional camp facilities.

Mr. FURLOW. Not this amendment. That will be introduced later.

Mr. COLLINS. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I shall not discuss it then.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. In addition to the items of pay to which the gentleman made reference, that these men receive, in any instance do they receive quarters in connection with their camp duties? They are there in charge of material, and naturally there are, of course, houses I suppose.

Mr. COLLINS. I dare say that is true.

Mr. KETCHAM. Does the gentleman happen to know whether any of them receive any such allowance?

Mr. COLLINS. No; but knowing the way such things are usually run, I will venture to assert that they do receive housing facilities furnished either by the Government or the States.

Mr. KETCHAM. The record shows nothing of the sort.

Mr. COLLINS. No; the record does not.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. TABER. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that I have just called General Gulick, of the Militia Bureau, up, and he advises me that these caretakers are entitled to take their leave under the regulations at any time in the year that they please, 15 days' leave with pay. They can take those 15 days' leave during the National Guard camp, if they so desire.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the gentleman's amendment. I am opposed to the amendment offered by my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. FURLOW]. I want to point out that the National Guard, the great American institution is rapidly getting away from its original purpose and the principle of its organization. It is being rapidly absorbed by the Regular Army. If we continue to increase these appropriations, there will be nothing left of the National Guard but the name, and it will be part of the Regular Army.

To get to this question of caretakers, I do not know how it is in other States, but we in New York City provide in addition to these caretakers what we call armorers. They were getting $8 a day nine years ago when I was president of the board of aldermen. The city provides sufficient of these caretakers to take care of all the armories and all of the matériel in every armory building. They are the politicians of the organization. You come along now and you have created more jobs. The gentleman from Minnesota, who is a very good soldier, is surprised that the caretaker is required to go to camp.

It was always my understanding that anyone connected with a military organization had to go to camp once in a while to drill and get some instructions; but, gentlemen, instead of the typical volunteer citizen soldier of the National Guard, we are now creating a body of men, semiprofessional soldiers, who refuse to drill unless you pay them a dollar every time they drill. When the Army bill was under consideration two or three years ago I charged on the floor of the House that the pay rolls were being padded. I believe my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] took exception to such a charge, but four months later a whole batch of them were indicted for padding the pay rolls.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. No one was indicted in the State of New York, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say this to the gentleman from New York, that they suddenly changed their methods in New York.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. My suggestion at that time referred only to the guard that I was familiar with.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman surely would not approve of the methods that were followed and the abuses that were going on.

Mrs. ROGERS. I do not think anyone in Massachusetts was indicted at that time.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Very lucky.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Naturally the gentleman from New York knows that any gentleman would take exception to such practices if they came under his observation. At that time, so far as I am aware, those practices did not prevail in the National Guard in New York and do not prevail now.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I now make the statement, assuming full responsibility for what I say, that these methods did exist in the National Guard of New York at the time I made the charge. The practice and methods, I am informed, have changed.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. If the gentleman had knowledge of that at that time it was his duty to make it known to the officials and authorities of the National Guard in order that the guard might be purged of any such thing.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman took means to cause a change. The methods have been changed since them.

Mr. SCHAFER. No member of the Wisconsin National Guard was indicted.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. They were lucky. On page 1012 of the hearings you will find a table showing that the various States appropriated over $16,000,000 for the National Guard. I do not believe that the RECORD should show that this appropriation bill in any way is neglecting the National Guard. The appropriations are most generous to the guard. It is my understanding that all that should be required of the Federal Government in connection with the maintenance of the National Guard should be the assignment of proper officers and instructors to each regiment and the turning over to the National Guard of such surplus material as is no longer necessary for the Regular Army. Of course, the building up of a large organization creates these military jobs within the organization, and it is not fair for one State to come in and obtain increased appropriations because other States do not do as is done by the State of New York, where $2,000,000 annually is appropriated for our National Guard. I do not know what the State of Minnesota is doing, but I do not believe these caretakers are overworked. I do not think any of them would quit the job to-morrow if the amendment were not approved. As soon as we get the National Guard of this country back to its original idea of being a purely volunteer citizen army the young men in the community will be willing to obtain a little military training in their own time instead of making it a professional military organization.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman, I want to clear up a few statements that have been made in reference to these caretakers. In the first place, we are not receiving more money in this bill for the National Guard than we had for 1929. In fact, when we take into consideration the deficiency appropriations which will be coming through, we are receiving over $150,000 less for the National Guard for 1930 than the National Guard received for 1929; and then there is the question of unexpended balances. If the National Guard could have received this unexpended balance for 1927–28, amounting to $274,000, there probably would not have been any request for this increase.

Mr. BARBOUR. Under this 10 per cent interchangeability clause why could not the National Guard take care of this? They are getting more money every year.

Mr. FURLOW. They are receiving less this year than they received last year.

Mr. TABER. But more than they expended last year.

Mr. FURLOW. There is to be a deficiency appropriation this year of $734,200. The National Guard is receiving $578,000 more than the current bill for 1929 contained. But obviously the difference between $734,200 and $578,000 is the amount that the National Guard does not receive this year which it did receive last year. And so your appropriation this year, the recommendation of your committee, is actually less than it was last year.

Mr. BARBOUR. There is over $500,000 more in this bill than in that of the last year.

Mr. FURLOW. I admit that there is $578,197 more in this bill than carried in the last bill, but the gentleman will admit that there is a deficiency in the National Guard of $734,200, which represents money spent.

Mr. BARBOUR. There may be another deficiency appropriation, so far as we can tell now. That would come along later.

Mr. FURLOW. But if you deduct $578,197 from $734,200 you will find a difference of over $150,000, and it follows that this is the difference between this bill and last year's bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURLOW. I will.

Mr. TABER. The $200,000 deficiency practically is confined to one item of forage for animals, where it has been found that they can get along with less money and take care of the same number of animals.

Mr. FURLOW. Now, to clear up the question that the caretakers are politicians. These caretakers are animal caretakers and they are not politicians or semipoliticians. There are 157 animal caretakers; there are 359 motor mechanics and 125 Air Corps men. Now, then, I insist we must depend on the hearings.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman concedes that it requires a higher grade of intelligence to be an animal caretaker than it requires to be an ordinary politician.

Mr. FURLOW. I can not follow the gentleman in that line of thought. I still stand on the statement that these caretakers are working 12 months during the year, are receiving pay for 11½ months, and receive 15 days' camp pay when they are in camp. I still maintain that the average Federal employee, as shown by the hearings, receives 30 days' leave, 30 days' sick leave, and if he is assigned to military duty, such as the National Guard, he receives 15 days' pay as a National Guard men while on that duty, besides his other pay going on at the same time. Why should there be this distinction between employees of the Federal Government? We are not asking for the 30 days' sick leave or the 30 days' regular leave, but we are simply asking that they be paid for 12 months in the year and not for 11½ months, as they are paid to-day.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the committee went into this item quite fully at the hearings and did not feel justified in including this money in the bill for the 15-day leave for caretakers. There are 1,719 of these caretakers looking after the property in the hands of the National Guard. Now, 1,641 of those men are enlisted in the National Guard and only 78 are civilians. When these enlisted caretakers go to camp in the summer time for two weeks they cease to be caretakers during that time and draw the pay of their grade in the enlisted personnel of the National Guard during the period of time they are in camp.

Mr. FURLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Permit me to make my statement. They draw the pay of their grade during the time they are in camp. If they are sergeants they get the pay of sergeants; if they are corporals they get the pay of corporals, and if they are privates they get the pay of privates. During that time the 78 civilians are not employed. In other words, their employment only contemplates that they shall work for 11½ months, because all of the horses, animals, and material go to the National Guard camps for two weeks, during which time there is nothing for the civilians to do.

Now, it was stated at the hearings that those men can take their leave, with pay, during the 11½ months that they are employed. The period of employment is for only 11½ months, but the proposal of the gentleman from Minnesota would give the civilians regular pay for those two weeks, during which time they are not working. It would give the enlisted men not only their service pay at the camps but it would give them their caretaker pay besides. The committee felt that these men were not in the same category with employees in the departments.

These animal caretakers, on an average, care for about eight horses. The average pay of caretakers is $1,285 a year. Of course, an animal caretaker draws less pay than an airplane caretaker or a motor caretaker. But they are not poorly paid, and the committee, in considering this matter, felt that in view of the pay they are getting and in view of the numerous requirements of the National Guard and other branches of the service it would not be justified in including this item in the bill.

Mr. FURLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. FURLOW. The gentleman will admit——

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know whether I will admit or not. Let me make my own admissions.

Mr. FURLOW. Then will the gentleman admit that they care for $115,000,000 worth of property?

Mr. BARBOUR. One hundred and fifteen million dollars' worth of property is in the hands of the National Guard. I am not advised as to whether these caretakers take care of all of it or not.

Mr. TABER. They care for only a small proportion of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. To talk a little about this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has been fixed and has expired.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I have been looking at the clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think there is some time remaining? The timekeeper informs the Chair that there is one minute remaining. Does the gentleman wish to use that one minute?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I think I can use it. I am greatly distressed, Mr. Chairman, lest in our haste this morning we may establish here a record which is an entire change from that which I have observed during all the years I have been here.

This is the first instance where I have ever heard seriously considered the denial of increased pay to anybody connected with the United States Army, and I fear if we vote this amendment down we will be establishing a record of a very wicked change in that direction. I think this consumes about my minute. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FURLOW].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FURLOW) there were—ayes 29, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses, camps of instruction, field and supplemental training, including medical and hospital treatment authorized by law, and the hire (at a rate not to exceed $1 per diem), repair, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $9,501,800.

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FURLOW: On page 50, line 25, strike out "$9,501,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,871,780."

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman, this is another amendment that would increase the appropriation for the National Guard. It includes three items. One item is the permanent construction item, another item is maintenance of existing structures, and the third item deals with rations. I want to briefly go into the necessity for these increases.

I trust the committee will be in favor of giving the National Guard an adequate sum for rations. At the present time the enlisted men in the Regular Army are receiving a ration that costs approximately 50 cents. In the National Guard they are receiving the same amount. We are asking for 5 cents more for the National Guard than is given to the enlisted men in the Regular Army. Our ground for asking this increase is because the National Guard camps are simply in being for 15 days during the year. They can not purchase supplies as cheaply at distant points for 15 days as the Army can purchase these supplies over the period of an entire year.

The condition is such in the National Guard that we find the boys taking out of their own funds money to make their rations equal to what they should have at these camps. The Congress has recognized the fact that in these temporary camps, which are really temporary, the men are entitled to more than the men receive in the Regular Army. At the present time we pay the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the citizens military training camps an allowance of 70 cents a day for each man, 60 cents of which amount is available for food. There we recognize the fact that at these temporary camps of 15 days the men are entitled to more for their rations than the men in the Regular Army.

I know that in various States they appropriate funds to supplement the National Guard subsistence allowance. The State of New York is a good example, and I believe in the State of Maryland they are appropriating State money for the National Guard subsistence allowance.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURLOW. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARBOUR. I did not understand the gentleman's amendment clearly. How much does the gentleman ask for on account of rations?

Mr. FURLOW. One hundred and nineteen thousand nine hundred and eighty dollars.

Mr. BARBOUR. And how much for other things?

Mr. FURLOW. I am asking for an additional $50,000 for camp maintenance and $200,000 more for camp construction, a total of $369,980.

Mr. BARBOUR. And on what does the gentleman base this division of the total amount?

Mr. FURLOW. I base the division for the 15-day camp ration on an increase of 5 cents per man in the National Guard.

Mr. BARBOUR. Would the gentleman mind my asking him another question in his time? The gentleman can get more time if necessary.

Mr. FURLOW. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARBOUR. Who recommended this increase?

Mr. FURLOW. This increase is recommended by the National Guard Association, and the figures which I have before me now were given to me by the president of the National Guard Association. The National Guard Association, as you know, is made up of the adjutants general of all the States in the Union.

Mr. BARBOUR. But a representative of the National Guard Association appeared before the committee, and my recollection is that while he mentioned the ration, he did not in his statement give that first priority.

Mr. FURLOW. I may say to the gentleman that the four items which I am dealing with to-day are of equal priority in the opinion of the National Guard Association and given to me as such.

Mr. BARBOUR. The difficulty seems to be that the gentleman gets his information from the National Guard Association, while we look to the Militia Bureau and the War Department for our information, and it does not always coincide.

Mr. FURLOW. I want to say to the gentleman, I believe the National Guard Association is nearer to the enlisted man back home than the War Department or the Militia Bureau can hope to be, and knows the needs of the enlisted man better.

Mr. BARBOUR. The difficulty with the National Guard Association is that it is not in any way controlled by the Budget act. The Budget act applies in certain ways to public officials but the National Guard Association is not affected in that way at all.

Mr. FURLOW. That is true.

Mr. BARBOUR. There are no restrictions whatever and no limits as to what the association can urge the Members of Congress to vote for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURLOW. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Do I understand that the National Guard issue on rations is much less than the citizens' military training camps and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps?

Mr. FURLOW. Oh, yes; the National Guard ration is 50 cents a man, while the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the citizens' military training camps are allotted 70 cents a man while they are in camp, 60 cents of which is used for rations.

Mr. CONNERY. What is the idea in making that distinction when they are in camp the same length of time exactly?

Mr. FURLOW. That is exactly what I can not understand and is one of the reasons I am offering the amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. That is what the gentleman is trying to accomplish?

Mr. FURLOW. I am trying to get 5 cents more for the men of the National Guard to bring the allowance up somewhere near the allotment to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the citizens' military training camps and bring it to a point where we can give these men adequate rations during the 15-day camp.

Last year we increased the rations of the enlisted men of the Army to compare with that of the Navy by raising it to 50 cents. The rations in the Army are furnished for a period of one year, and there they need 50 cents for each man, and in the National Guard they have a 15-day period where food must be purchased in smaller quantities with the resultant higher cost.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURLOW. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is there not a fund of about $300,000 which, if reappropriated, would cover this?

Mr. FURLOW. Absolutely—there was an unexpended balance of $274,000 for 1927 and 1928. The National Guard has turned this back into the Treasury. If reappropriated, this sum would nearly take care of the three items in my amendment.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURLOW. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. The National Guard has a right to use 10 per cent of these funds, transferring from one to the other. If they have the money and need the extra rations, which was not strongly urged before our committee, they have a right to transfer 10 per cent from other funds for that purpose. There was more than $200,000 last year which they saved from various items. They have the power to make this transfer. The money is there, and we have been appropriating more than they have been spending. They have the right to transfer from one fund to another 10 per cent, and that ought to take care of a matter like this.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman from California think it makes any difference whether the military authorities recommend this, or the National Guard? If the men are entitled to the extra five cents that ought to solve the question.

Mr. BARBOUR. It does not make any difference who recommends it if they are entitled to it. But this matter was not urged before the committee; it was mentioned, as I recall it, and that is all. Now the gentleman is offering an amendment to appropriate for a matter that was not urged before the committee.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say to the gentleman that it has been urged very much——

Mr. BARBOUR. By the gentleman from Maryland——

Mr. LINTHICUM. And by the people all over the country.

Mr. FURLOW. If the National Guard is forced to take 10 per cent from other funds and use it for rations, that is not fair to the National Guard, and it is not fair to the gentleman's committee. If this committee recognizes the fact that the National Guard, the enlisted personnel, is entitled to 55 cents rations, it is the duty of this committee to give the additional appropriation. If the ration question was not called to the attention of the gentleman's committee, perhaps it was due to the fact that such an increase would exceed the Budget; but the National Guard Association now comes in, having no fear of the Budget, and recommends that each enlisted man in the guard be given 5 cents more a day for subsistence.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURLOW. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. These rations are for 15 days only?

Mr. FURLOW. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The part of the military training would seem to be to give the boys a taste of what field food really is. The gentleman does not want to give them pâté de foie gras.

Mr. FURLOW. Now, the next item that is included in this amendment is an increase of $200,000 for camp construction. The hearings and the records show that approximately $1,000,000 is required to complete the camp-construction program and that during the fiscal year 1929, $333,532 will be expended for this purpose. At this rate the camp-construction program could be completed within three years. In addition, new camps, not included in the program, are urgently needed. Camps under construction are approximately 83 per cent complete. The rate of completion of the program, taking the amount appropriated in the present bill, will be not less than five years for exclusive National Guard camps. The list of exclusive National Guard camps, the percentage of completion on June 30, 1928, of estimated expenditures in 1929 and 1930 under available and prospective appropriations, and the estimated amounts to complete each camp, will be found on pages 1007, 1008, and 1009, hearings, War Department appropriation bill, 1930. The increase in this item is essential in view of the fact that it will probably be necessary to use a portion of the camp-construction appropriation for 1929, together with the increased cost of field training during the calendar year 1929. This camp construction is a very important part of our National Guard activities. The third and last item included in this amendment is an increase of $50,000 for the maintenance of these National Guard camps. Obviously, as camp construction goes on, and as the present buildings grow older, they need a greater amount for maintenance, and the National Guard Association recommends an additional $50,000 for this purpose.

These three items then make up a total of $369,980.

As the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] has said, if the committee had but reappropriated the unexpended balances for 1927 and 1928 the situation would have been relieved. In reality we are not asking for money that belongs to anybody except the National Guard. You have defeated the amendment that would aid the caretakers, so the total we originally asked for has been reduced $124,000; so I hope the committee will follow the National Guard Association now and give them this additional amount.

There can be no argument against carrying on the program of construction that will complete this construction within a period of three years, and I can see no legitimate argument against keeping these buildings in repair. If the committee is going to cut down at all, I would say, give the men the ration, increase and take care of your construction work. You know better than I do what is going on back in your own respective States.

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FURLOW. I am very pleased to yield.

Mrs. ROGERS. At Ayer, a city in my own district, there is a concurrent camp called Camp Devens. Camp Devens is about the only place in the New England or Northeastern Atlantic States capable of taking care of, comfortably, as large a body of troops as a peace-time Infantry division. Ohio can not do it at Camp Perry, as they have no permanent installations such as there are at Niantic and Quonset Point, and Ohio has never had her division together. Pennsylvania has a place at Mount Gretna, where she has land enough, but there are no permanent utilities to take care of more than a brigade. New York has never put her division together and Peekskill will only hold a brigade, so that Camp Devens to-day presents the only available place for assembling a peace-time Infantry division.

There are probably in this corps area not more than 2,000 Regulars who go to Camp Devens; the citizens' military training camp this year was 800, that makes 2,800, the Officers Reserve Corps was about 300, making 3,100, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps does not go beyond 125, we will call it 200, that makes 3,300; and odds and ends 200, gives 3,500 as a total, exclusive of the National Guard, who use Camp Devens. In order that 2,000 or less Regulars may be trained at Fort Ethan Allen, our 7,000 National Guard troops are restricted in their summer training.

I understand that in order to carry out the militia building program of the Militia Bureau of the War Department, they wish to expend about $300,000 during three years. They want very much, at least $75,000 next year and approximately $75,000 the year after, $75,000 to spend this year on the rehabilitation of the buildings. That does not come from the National Guard, that comes from the War Department. That information has been given to me by the Militia Bureau of the War Department, and they feel that they need this money in order to carry out their program. The buildings at Camp Devens are a disgrace to any country. I am very much mortified when I take visitors there, to have them see what our country does or rather does not do, in the way of buildings. The permanent construction is going on for the military permanent part of the camp and the rehabilitation of the buildings for the National Guard is necessary and a vital part of the War Department's building program for concurrent camps.

I received the following information from the War Department:

As is shown in Table No. 3, page 1009, hearings before the subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations in charge of the War Department appropriation bill for 1930, the estimated amount to complete the rehabilitation project for Camp Devens, Mass., is $300,000, and the estimated expenditure for 1930 is given as $28,853. This is the estimated amount it is proposed to expend under allotments made for concurrent camps in conjunction with other components of the Army, such as the Regular Army, the Organized Reserves, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, citizens' military training camps, etc. However, as indicated in the footnote at the bottom of Table No. 2, page 1008 of the same hearings, the Militia Bureau expects to expend in the fiscal year 1930, $75,000 in the National Guard area at Camp Devens, provided that sufficient funds are made available in the appropriation bill now under consideration by the Congress. It is hoped to duplicate this expenditure in 1931. It is highly desirable that this project be completed not later than 1931.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, we are asking by this amendment for the National Guard $119,000 plus for additional subsistence of 5 cents a day; $200,000 plus toward completing the building program, and $50,000 for repairs, a total of $369,000 plus, which is not any vast sum of money. There is $274,000 standing to the credit of the National Guard in the Treasury for 1927 and 1928, and we are only asking for around $400,000 altogether, and since the first amendment has been defeated, we are asking for $369,000 plus. It is not a question as to whether the military authorities recommend 50 cents a day for rations or whether the National Guard Association asks 55 cents a day. The question that confronts us is whether or not the men should have 55 cents a day on which to live. I do not think there is anybody here who will contend that 55 cents a day is too much for a man to live upon. I remember when the war started, or just before we entered the war, we had a military dinner up at the old Ebbitt House. I think prices at that time were about 50 per cent less than they are now. They made a special effort to show how low it could be provided and that was 37½ cents a meal for rations, and it was not very much that we received in food. Now, after this long time of nearly 12 years we are asking you for 55 cents. It seems to me that that is not too much.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] contends that as the Army receives only 50 cents per day that is sufficient for the National Guard. I think it is a very different question. The Army purchases in large amounts for both the Army and canteen. It has experts for this purpose as well as experts for the preparation of meals and for economy. For instance, the Army has its own cooks, makes its own bread, and it can make this bread at less than 2 cents per loaf, and many other things are in about the same proportion, whereas the National Guard is compelled to buy at retail, paying 8 cents for bread, and a proportionate price for other things.

The Army is an institution, set up for the whole year, and permanently, whereas the National Guard is set up for two weeks only. It does seem to me very clear why it should cost the National Guard more as subsistence than the Army. Then again, why should the citizens' military training camp and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps each receive more for subsistence than the National Guard. They should all receive an adequate sum.

On the question of buildings, the chairman of this committee knows that he is appropriating hundreds of thousands of dollars to construct and to rehabilitate the barracks of the soldiers of this country. At Fort Leonard Wood you are spending somewhere around $800,000 and making a fine encampment. Had you appropriated sufficient for repair of the old buildings, many of them would have lasted longer and been of great benefit, but you allowed them to run down. I went through the buildings at Honolulu; I went through the hospital, and the condition of those buildings was a disgrace to the country, especially the hospital, which was a tinder box. You are spending thousands of dollars to construct new buildings, largely because the others were not repaired. Now, why let the guard buildings run down and then build new buildings?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman has referred to certain buildings that he says are a disgrace to the country. Ought he not to go further and say that those buildings are being replaced by fine, modern structures?

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is what I meant to say. I meant to say that you have let those buildings go to pieces and now you are reconstructing old and building new and magnificent ones, at tremendous expense to the country, and you could have saved many of those buildings. New ones must be constructed, of course, but the old buildings would have served many purposes.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman mean that the wooden rookery that was used as a hospital in Hawaii could have been saved by repairs?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It could have been kept in better shape than it was, adding greatly to the comfort and safety of patients. We are asking you for a certain sum to keep our buildings in repair and to complete the program, and the sooner you complete the program the sooner you will give these men living quarters in which they may stay. I do not wish to criticize the committee. It is doing splendid work. Add to your prestige by helping the National Guard in these matters.

Mr. BARBOUR. Go ahead.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Because I know they do the best that they can, but I think they are on the wrong track this time. I would like to see you give these boys 55 cents a day on which to live. I would like to see you give them enough to complete their buildings and keep those other buildings in repair, and to do that you should pass these amendments. I am deeply interested in this matter, and I say to the chairman that I congratulate him on the splendid work that he is doing at Fort Leonard Wood and the fine buildings being constructed there. I hope that sooner or later you will provide officers' quarters likewise at that splendid fort.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, the first item in this amendment, the one with respect to subsistence allowance, provides 50 cents a day, the same as that appropriated for the Regular Army for subsistence of Regular Army troops. I take it that this amount will buy more food and a larger variety for the National Guard than the same amount would buy for the Regular Army, because the National Guard camps are held in the summer time, when fruits and vegetables and all sorts of produce are cheaper than at any other time of the year. These men go to camp usually during the month of July.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman would not contend that for the short period the camp is held you could get fruits and vegetables any cheaper than the Army with an all-year-round contract?

Mr. COLLINS. As a matter of fact, I believe 50 cents a day will buy more for the National Guard than it does for the Regular Army.

Let me bring also this thought to the minds of Members: There is a 10 per cent interchangeability in this bill. In other words, any item can be increased 10 per cent without further congressional action by the War Department. The National Guard can add 5 cents a day to its ration allowance out of this 10 per cent interchangeability. They have the authority now to add the 5 cents additional ration allowance that the gentleman says ought to be added. So there is no use in adopting this amendment, because the guard can do this now out of funds provided in this bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But that would lessen the fund for other purposes, would it not, to that extent?

Mr. COLLINS. Well, let me call the gentleman's attention to horses alone. In last year's bill we provided for 500 horses for the National Guard. They bought 875 horses with money appropriated, and, in addition to that, out of the 10 per cent interchangeability they bought a sufficient number of horses to raise the total number purchased to 1,200, showing the freedom that these National Guard officers have in expending these appropriations.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Showing also their good business ability.

Mr. COLLINS. Well, I have not heard of many officers who are famed for their business ability.

In regard to completing the camps: National Guard camps number 57, and in addition to these, there are 25 concurrent camps, the concurrent camps being those where other organizations are likewise trained. Those camps will be 90 per cent completed in 1930. The Regular Army camps are not 90 per cent complete, not by one-half. In two more years, however, National Guard camps will be entirely completed. This amendment, as I understand it, proposes to complete them immediately.

With reference to the third item in the amendment: It pertains to upkeep. One of the National Guard officers testified that a certain percentage was necessary for maintenance, and it was a high figure. Mind you, there are 25 of these camps that are concurrent camps, and appropriations are made elsewhere for the upkeep also of those 25 concurrent camps.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Just one minute more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. So the total of percentage for the upkeep of camps that is appropriated will amount to more than the percentage that this National Guard officer testified was the proper amount to be appropriated. In other words, the committee has provided more money for the upkeep of camps than was asked for by National Guard's representative, who testified on this particular subject.

Taking it as a whole, the committee has already done those things which have been asked for in this amendment, and certainly the Congress does not want to do more for the National Guard than their representative has asked for. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The discussions of the National Guard ration and the necessity for improving the housing camps are based, it would seem, on a misunderstanding of the real purpose of the two weeks' training for the National Guard. Now, in the first place, it costs more proportionately to feed troops if you have to feed them the whole year around than if you simply have to feed them for two weeks, for the reason that you require a greater variety of food when the troops draw their rations regularly throughout a year. The purpose of the two weeks' training of the guard is to give the guard summer training, to give them a faint idea of military service and life in time of war. It is very easy to arrange a two weeks' diet program, a two weeks' menu, comparable to field rations, and it does not require any degree of variety. When you are talking about permanent buildings, gentlemen, you will remember that we are dealing with camps, and not fashionable summer resorts. During the two weeks' training in the camps the men should live under canvas. The officers, too, ought to be living under tents. All you require are certain sanitary conditions and proper drainage. If you want to have an ideal camp for the National Guard for getting training, you do not require a permanent building on the camp site. You should simply have proper drainage in order to make your sanitary conditions wholesome and safe.

The distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FURLOW] talks about rations. When he was in the service I fed him on 50 cents a day, and he got good food, did he not?

Mr. FURLOW. He got principally spaghetti. But we thrived on it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; we thrived on it. The preparation of rations and field food is part of the military training. You are not going to train these boys to be good soldiers in any other way. If you are going to coddle them and pamper them, you should send them to Newport. In that case why not change our whole system, and instead of having our training in the summer, let it be in the winter, and then send the boys down to Miami and Palm Beach, where they will enjoy the mild climate, the exclusive society, and the delights of southern bathing?

Mr. THURSTON. Speaking of the supply of rations for the Regular Army by the year and the supply of rations for these training camps, does the gentleman contend that they could not buy the rations more cheaply for the Regular Army by the year than for the camp for only a few weeks? Would it not involve a greater cost?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; because you have a number of regiments coming in for two weeks at a time. You repeat your two weeks' menu every two weeks.

Mr. THURSTON. But you can not get a small quantity of any commodity at as a low a rate as when you contract for a greater quantity. The Regular Establishment uses a more substantial and nonperishable character of food, which can be purchased more cheaply in large quantities.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, the allowance will. It will not provide some of the relishes and delicacies that you think they ought to have pâté de foie gras and chocolate eclairs and cream puffs and such things, but it will provide good, wholesome, nutritious food, better than many working men are able to provide for their families. It would not give them some of the relishes we like to have, but this is a military camp.

Mr. THURSTON. Manifestly, however, it would be apparent to the Member from New York that you can not purchase supplies for a 2-week period as cheaply in price as you could for 52 weeks.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But conditions are entirely different.

Mrs. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS. I am sorry to interrupt this housekeeping discussion, but I understand you can take care of men, in the long run, in permanent buildings more cheaply than you can in tents.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But then they are not getting the proper training—living under canvas is good training of itself.

Mrs. ROGERS. Why can they not get the proper training? They do not train inside the tents, do they?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They do not need permanent buildings for their training because in war time they do not always have permanent buildings or quarters de luxe.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I make this pro forma motion largely for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee what it costs the Government to support the Regular Army per capita and how much it costs the Government to support the National Guard per capita?

Mr. BARBOUR. It is something in the neighborhood of $1,000 a year—I think more than $1,000 a year—for the Regular Army per capita. For the National Guard——

Mr. COLLINS. About $500, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BARBOUR. For the National Guard?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. It does not run that high.

Mr. COLLINS. That is the way I figure it.

Mr. BARBOUR. For the National Guard it costs $309.86.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes; but I will want a little more time.

Mr. COLLINS. In addition there are other items that are not taken into consideration?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; I was including cash and free issues, and then there are other items that can be counted in.

Mr. LINTHICUM. You asked the question in the hearings as to how much it costs.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I am not yielding to these gentlemen who are trying to make speeches in my time. They ought to make them in their own time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I wanted to have the correct information according to the testimony.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I suggest that the gentleman get that in his own time. The answer to the interrogatory I have propounded, members of the committee, in my judgment, makes for the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BARBOUR. Why?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. The Regular Army is composed of 118,000 men, 100,000 of whom, in this great, magnificent, rich, and opulent country, receive the splendid pay of $24 per month.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is the minimum.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. That is the minimum, and that is for about 100,000 out of your 118,000. The others are fellows in the upper ten.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. One of the most distinguished Members of this House, formerly occupying the position of Assistant Secretary of War, estimated that for me, and it is upon his statement I am predicating the expression I just made that 100,000 men in the Regular Army get $24 per month. Does that, in the judgment of anyone in this House, mean that the Regular Army is going to furnish any invitation for the young men of this country, who are anxious to serve it, to join the Regular Army, with no great hope for promotion? Does anyone believe that the Army under those circumstances will be composed of the same splendid, fine, upstanding material that is found in the State National Guard? Far be it from me to reflect upon the young men and the old men, if you please, who are in the Regular Army, but it does look to me as though under the unfavorable circumstances and conditions that is the last refuge for the hopeless. I do not believe that under those circumstances $24 a month furnishes the suggestion to anyone's mind that the Army is composed of that upstanding material which has represented that splendid symbol of our power in the past and means a proper military force in the event that force is ever needed. On the other hand, the State National Guard is composed of the finest young men in every State in the Union. They require assistance; they deserve our succor and they should have our support, because they are after all in accordance with the story written in your own appropriation bill, the reliance of this country. From the standpoint of the Army, it is upon those splendid fellows that we would have to depend, in the event we ever declared war, to as large an extent at least as upon the hapless and hopeless men who form the Regular Army under this absurd pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is the objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I do not think the Regular Army men in the late war, at Chateau Thierry and other important battles, proved their worthlessness, as the gentleman would indicate.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Oh, the gentleman is entirely mistaken as to what I was saying. I made no such indication as he suggests. That was the war-time army called in by the draft and the gentleman knows that. What is the use of trying to misstate what I am saying. I am talking about the Regular Army in peace time, the 100,000 men who compose this establishment, not about the men that went out upon probably the same basis that furnishes the suggestion for men to join the State National Guard in peace time.

In my judgment, gentlemen, you ought to vote approvingly on this amendment. These are the fellows, the men who compose the National Guard, who will have to go out with the Regular Army, heel to heel, shoulder to shoulder, and arm in arm, in the event war is declared, at one and the same time; and after all, look at your appropriation bill from the standpoint of the fellows that get the $24 a month, apparently friendless, apparently hopeless, plodding along—no Welch bill for them, no Bacharach bill for that crowd. They are the hapless, the unknown, the friendless, the obscure, with few men in or out of Congress to plead their cause or fight their battles.

It is time this House rose and showed it meant something by making an appropriation for the Army, and to do that effectively you have got to provide better pay for the enlisted men in the Regular Army and provide better encouragement for the National Guard.

Mr. BARBOUR and Mr. WAINWRIGHT rose.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I yield first to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BARBOUR. I want to say that the pay of the enlisted man is fixed by law. Has the gentleman from Louisiana introduced any bill in this Congress or in any other Congress in which he has served, to increase the pay of the enlisted men.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. That is not even an adroit reply. It is not even a camouflage worthy of a reply. You are charged with the responsibility, not I. I am upon the Rivers and Harbors Committee, charged with the responsibility that lies with that committee, and not upon the important subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, which is all powerful, and which could, if it wished, fix the policy of the House, because, after all, this is a recognitory body and responds to the Appropriations Committee in most matters. The power to appropriate is the power to make or destroy.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Oh, I know the gentleman is coming to the rescue. You are all brothers in arms on the Appropriations Committee and keep your full strength here on the floor at all times, but I will yield to the gentleman after I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am simply asking the gentleman to yield for the purpose of saying that in view of some of the reflections that have been made on the National Guard on the floor here to-day, in the scheme of national defense, it should be borne in mind that within four months after the declaration of war the National Guard furnished over one-half million trained men to the Armies of the United States, before the draft went into operation, and there were more men actually in combat in the front areas and on the battle lines in Europe in the National Guard element than there were in the other components of the Army.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And that was before we began pampering them under the provisions of the national defense act. That is just my point.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. And the gentleman believes the National Guard is as important a factor in the national defense as the Regular Army, constituted as it is?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Absolutely; and if the gentleman will yield for a very brief statement, I will say that if the Regular Army soldier at an investment of $1,000 a year or an expense of $1,000 a year is a good investment, that the National Guard soldier at an investment, as the gentleman from California has told us, of about $309, is probably a better investment.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I thank the gentleman, because he has emphasized and accentuated admirably what I have been endeavoring and struggling to say.

I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman has stated it is the duty of this committee to do this. I suppose the gentleman knows that this is an appropriating committee and has no power to enact legislation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Oh, if you would exercise the power that belongs to you and would not surrender pusillanimously to the Bureau of the Budget, you would be able to do a great many things here that you have not, apparently, the courage to do. The gentleman knows that and I know it. You are permitting a creature of Congress to play the part of the monster, created by Frankenstein, and destroy the usefulness of this body. Assert your privileges and your prerogatives and do for the Army what should be done.

Mind you, I am not reflecting upon the poor fellow that serves in the Regular Army. I am for him and I would like to see you do more for him, but I also want you to do something for the National Guard. [Applause.] The young man who enlists in the Regular Army under present circumstances in peace time is either a paragon of courage and patriotism whose song should be sung by some divine bard lest his memory and self-abnegation be forgotten, or he is some young fellow who has not been able to make good in any other avenue of life. That is cold common sense. I have heard the lamented McKinley say that a cheap coat made a cheap man, and as a corollary to that thought I say cheap pay makes for cheap service. Pay our soldiers on land and sea in peace time and in war, for if the servant is worthy of his hire so is the soldier who, however, hapless and hopeless he may be is still blood of our blood and bone of our bone.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BARBOUR. Then I move, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that by making it 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. KETCHAM). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] as amended by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 25, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California as amended.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR], I desire to call the attention of the committee and the House to the fact that the average pay of the enlisted man in our Army will reach somewhere around $50 or $60 per month. It is not $24 a month; that is the pay given to the first recruit before he has had any training or experience; and in addition all enlisted men get their keep and a place to live, medical care, and all that sort of thing?

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. If this Congress should increase the pay, does the gentleman anticipate that we would get a different class of men in the Regular Army?

Mr. TABER. No; the class of the men in the Regular Army is not the riffraff of the country. [Applause.]

They are mostly young men of high character who go into the Army because of patriotic ideas and impulses, because they want to get the training which the Regular Army gives them, and get an education which they can not get because of their limited means at home. Our rate of pay is high enough, so that it is drawing to the Regular Army first-class men, the very best of any regular army in any country, notwithstanding other countries have compulsory service.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I agree that we have a fine class of young men in the Army, but does not the gentleman think for that reason we ought to pay them better than we do?

Mr. TABER. I think that we are paying them fairly. I think if the gentleman would go into the analysis of the cost he would find that we are paying them fairly, and the fact that we are able to get first-class enlisted men indicates that we are paying them fairly. Sixty per cent of those whose terms expire reenlist at the expiration of their term. They would not do that if we were not paying them fairly. Then, again, after they have served a number of years they are entitled to retire on part pay for life, and that is a substantial asset to men in the Regular Army.

Now this committee, as much as any Member of the House, desires to keep up the National Guard, to maintain it, to build it up, to its true efficiency. It has not in any bill that has been brought before the House attempted to cut it down, but has treated them liberally always.

The surest way to find out just what the situation is is between sessions, to go out in the National Guard camps and see what the situation is. I went to my own camp last summer and spent a day looking around and inquiring of the members in the camp in which there were several thousand at that time. I asked them what they had to complain about, and they told me some things, many of which have been corrected in this bill. I asked them how the food was, and they told me it was fine; that they had nothing to complain about. I asked them about the bill of fare, and I saw that it contained good, substantial food—good meat, good vegetables, bread, pies, and all that sort of thing. They said they had nothing to complain about in the rations.

Much to my surprise when the bill was under consideration I was told that the New York State National Guard had passed a resolution asking for an increase in rations. We do not try to keep them down, we try to treat them fairly and give them what they need.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I ask this not in any controversial sense, but does not the company funds of the National Guard contribute toward the food?

Mr. TABER. Nothing of that kind was said to me.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. One other brief question: Does the gentleman say that he found the National Guard in his State subsisting on any great luxury?

Mr. TABER. No; but good, substantial, wholesome food, the kind of food I would like myself if I were there.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am speaking of the conditions under which they were living—they were living in tents; were they not?

Mr. TABER. A good many of them were, as they should be under the circumstances.

The total amount required to build all of the camps is $923,000. That includes $300,000 to fix up the Devens Camp in Massachusetts. They want to complete it in three years. It is not going to be hard to complete it in three years the way the thing stands now, and it seems to me, taking all these things into consideration and treating the bill fairly, we should not increase this item.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman tell the House what the total amount carried in the bill is?

Mr. TABER. Four hundred and thirty-five million dollars.

Mr. DALLINGER. How much does the bill carry for the National Guard?

Mr. TABER. Thirty-two million three hundred and nineteen thousand dollars.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] inferred, when I was asking him to yield, that I was questioning him for the purpose of propaganda. What I wanted to ask the gentleman at that time was whether he wanted seriously to tell the House that you could buy supplies more cheaply for the 15-day period that the National Guard serves in the summer time than you could under an all-year-round contract under which the Regular Army buys its supplies.

I am in favor of these amendments. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I do not have to use any propaganda in reference to the National Guard. I was in the National Guard during the war, and I know all about it. I know what they did, how they fought, and I say that the National Guard is the best national defense for the United States. [Applause.] If we are going to hold our National Guard down on appropriations and tell them that we are only going to give them just a picayune appropriation, just enough to pull them along, and just food enough to keep them alive during a camp period, we are not going to help their morale or their patriotic resolves. The gentleman from New York said that they feed well on their rations. If the same thing exists in the State of New York that does in the State of Massachusetts, the gentleman knows that when he goes to visit those camps, the food that he gets on visitors' days is made up out of the company fund money, and is not coming to him out of the largess of the United States Government.

In respect to the buildings at Camp Devens, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] ably described them when she said that she is ashamed to have anybody see the buildings at that camp. They are old ramshackle things, with the rain coming through the roof, officers' quarters and men's quarters just the same, the very worst conditions that men could live under. No soldier expects to have steam heat and all of the luxuries of his own home life, but the United States Government running a camp for the purpose of instructing the youth of America in national defense should at least see to it that the men are properly housed while there, and do not live in old barns.

During the war the men who replaced the Regular Army divisions were not Regular Army men, but were taken from the National Army, and as fast as the Regular Army divisions were depleted they were filled up from the National Army and from the National Guard, so that those divisions popularly known as Pershing's pets were replenished from the National Army all over the United States. It was from the National Guard and from the National Army of the United States that your real fighters came, and I am giving due credit to those wonderful divisions, the First and Second, and other Regular Army divisions when I speak that way, but I bow to no man in proclaiming the fighting qualities and all-around efficiency of my own Twenty-sixth Division, the Yankee Division, and the other National Guard divisions, for I repeat the National Guard is the backbone of national defense. [Applause.]

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] talking about the menu card he saw somewhere at a National Guard encampment. I have never seen one of those menu cards, but I have taken dinner there, and I say to the gentleman that I had a very fine plate of soup and some pork and beans and a frankfurter, and that constituted the dinner for visitors' day. That is all right for one meal and I enjoyed it, I believe, more than I would a Waldorf-Astoria meal with pâté de foie gras, which the gentleman from New York speaks of, but I would not like that as a steady meal for 15 days.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. If the gentleman will get me more time.

Mr. TABER. What about roast beef and green corn?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I never eat roast beef and seldom green corn, though I have had two summers in 1928 in which to do it. One in North America and one in South America. I do wish to impress upon the gentlemen of the House that this is an important matter, that we are asking only 5 cents a day additional for each man and funds to construct buildings and put others in repair. The gentleman from Mississippi says that it will be done in two years. Why wait two years, unless the United States Treasury has not the funds; and when you think that we have $274,000 to the credit of the National Guard in the Treasury of the United States and that we are asking for only $369,000 for the rations and for the completion and repair of the buildings, making a difference of less than a hundred thousand dollars, it does not seem to me very much. I feel very much interested in this matter. We have a splendid National Guard in Maryland, and we make adequate appropriations in our State to help them.

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FURLOW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there are Members here now who were not in the Chamber when this debate started, and for their information I want to roughly outline what this amendment would do. It takes in three features of the National Guard appropriation; $200,000 additional for camp construction, $50,000 for camp maintenance, and $119,980 for rations.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has made the statement that the ration fund is sufficient to take care of the men.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has made the statement to the effect that he attended a camp last year in his district and found no complaint made by the men in reference to the ration. Probably the reason for that is this: These men are contributing in a great many camps throughout the United States from their own pockets and from their camp fund for their rations. Many States supplement the fund by appropriations. That statement was made to me by officials of the National Guard, who have been investigating this ration question for about three years. They have found that the Reserve Officers' Training Corps receives 70 cents a day for rations, and that the citizens' military training camps receive 70 cents, 60 per cent of the 70 cents being for ration purposes. The statement is made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] that they can provide their rations for a 15-day period more cheaply than for the entire year. Obviously that argument is faulty. They can buy large quantities in the Regular Army at a cheaper rate than the guard can purchase smaller quantities for the training camp. There is not the same waste in the Regular Army that there is in the National Guard. We are asking simply 5 cents more to be added to the ration.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In the Regular Army they buy in larger units.

Mr. FURLOW. Now as to the question of camp construction, the hearings showed that $1,000,000 is required to complete the camp construction. The percentage of completion on June 30, 1928, and estimated expenditures in 1929 and 1930, under available and prospective appropriations is such that it is shown in the record that they can not be completed within three years unless the appropriations carried in this bill shall equal last year's appropriations.

The amount set out for maintenance is an increase of $50,000. I urge the Congress to increase this National Guard appropriation. I am sure Congress wants the enlisted men in the National Guard to have the proper rations, and I am equally certain that the Congress wants this building program carried out as originally intended; and I am confident that Congress wants these buildings maintained and kept in a proper state of repair. That is all these amendments do. [Applause.]

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have the remainder of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Under the rules the gentleman may be recognized for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is divided into three parts. The first part is to increase the ration at National Guard camps by 5 cents a day. That matter was not brought formally to the attention of the committee. However, it was mentioned, as I remember, and it was suggested that 50 cents was probably not quite enough. The fact is that the National Guard ration is prescribed by law. The gentleman who proposes this amendment is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and in order to increase the ration of the National Guard we would have to have legislation. The Committee on Appropriations, preparing the War Department appropriation bill, has no power whatever to put it into this bill.

Mr. FURLOW. It is not established by law.

Mr. BARBOUR. Let me read it to the gentleman. He can draw his own conclusions, as can other Members of the House. I read from the national defense act, section 111:

> Officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States under the terms of this section shall have the same pay and allowances as officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army of the same grades and the same prior service.

The National Guard ration is fixed at the same as that of the Regular Army and unless the Regular Army ration is changed, I do not see how you can change the National Guard ration without amending the law. So far as I have heard, there has been no serious complaint about the National Guard ration. It was not urged before our committee that the men were not being properly fed. I have never heard a National Guard man of my State complain about the ration the Guard was receiving at camp.

It is proposed to do all these things simply because somebody wants to do something more for the National Guard, and the thing that I do not like about an amendment of this kind is that it puts this committee and it puts other friends of the National Guard, who are not willing to vote for this amendment, in the position of being opposed to the National Guard when they are not. We have heard speeches here to-day by men who have praised the National Guard, and I subscribe to every word that has been said. I believe that in time of emergency our greatest reliance is going to be on the National Guard. [Applause.]

I believe there will be no better soldiers in the Army in case of emergency than those who come from the National Guard, and there have been none better in the past. I want to go on record here as not being opposed to the National Guard, but I can not indorse these amendments to this bill. I think the ration item is disposed of by the provision in the national defense act, and if you put this additional 5 cents on the National Guard ration the Militia Bureau officers under that act would hold that they did not have the power to spend it. So if you are going to increase the ration of the National Guard, do it in the right way and bring in legislation from the committee of which the gentleman from Minnesota is a member and do not try to ride this appropriation bill with legislation.

Now, as to the maintenance, the amount urged in the amendment was not allowed in the bill for this reason: The Militia Bureau officers base their maintenance on from 2 to 5 per cent of the original cost of the buildings. The Regular Army maintenance of its buildings, including those old war-time buildings that they are compelled to keep up until we can get the new construction program completed, is on a basis of 2 per cent. If the Regular Army can maintain its buildings for 2 per cent, I do not see why the Militia Bureau can not maintain its buildings for less than 5 per cent. That is all I have to say about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to object, but the gentleman asked that he might be the last speaker; and he takes the opportunity as the last speaker to inject into this argument what he states is a law—section 111, national defense act—which would prevent the increase for subsistence, a question which has not been mentioned on the floor of the House and which he had an abundance of time to state and which to my mind he should have done. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed the time he has asked, and that the gentleman from Minnesota be allowed five minutes to answer the new question.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has fixed the time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman asked unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. I am perfectly willing that he should proceed if the gentleman from Minnesota is given time to answer the question which the gentleman from California has just mentioned on the floor of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am perfectly willing to have the gentleman proceed provided the gentleman from Minnesota has additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM) there were—ayes 34, noes 40

So the amendment was rejected

Mr LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN The gentleman from Maryland demands tellers Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fourteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, so tellers are refused. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For expenses, selected officers and enlisted men, military service schools, including medical and hospital treatment authorized by law, $317,500.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the sole purpose of correcting the attempt—unintentionally, I am sure—of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] to construe my attitude as a reflection on the National Guard. I can only reiterate what I said before, which the gentleman from New York did not grasp, or perhaps I failed to convey my thoughts properly, and that is that the National Guard is the backbone of our national defense; that they did render distinguished service in the late war; that they did respond immediately and did more than their share of fighting. However, I say they did all of this of their own volition, without the pampering, without the frills, without the trimmings, and without the enormous appropriations you are now giving them under the national defense act of 1920. On my right sits the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD], who was an old member of the National Guard. When he was a member of the National Guard they went to camp voluntarily, marched miles to get to camp, and carried their own food with them. They were not demanding chefs and maitre de hotel in those days. It is only recently that we are appropriating millions for the National Guard. As the gentleman from New York points out, they were right there when they were called; they were organized and they were efficient, but they were ready without all of these appropriations.

That was the time when the National Guard, a real American institution, was made up of men who were citizen soldiers in the finest sense of the value of the National Guard in the scheme of national defense. I would like to say to the members of the committee that I have been familiar with the conditions under which the National Guard trained and subsisted for a period extending over 40 years. I am familiar with the conditions in their camps to-day. I entered the National Guard in the year 1889, over 40 years ago, and I simply want to make this very positive statement: That the National Guard to-day is not living in conditions of greater luxury and is not subsisted any more luxuriously than they were 40 years ago.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Except at the expense of the National Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Enlisted Reserve Corps: For pay, transportation, subsistence, clothing, and medical and hospital treatment, $100.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER: At page 54, line 11, strike out "$100" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, although the committee a few moments ago, by a substantial majority, rejected an amendment proposing to increase the rations for the National Guard, I feel compelled to offer this amendment, although the prior votes would seem to indicate that it will be rejected.

The district which I have the honor to represent contains a small city of about 25,000 inhabitants—South Milwaukee, Wis. In this city is located the Bucyrus-Erie plant, the greatest steam shovel and excavating machinery manufacturers in the world.

The Five hundred and thirty-second Ordnance Company, Enlisted Reserve, organized at the Bucyrus-Erie plant, has a peacetime strength of 9 officers and 25 enlisted men, and a wartime strength of 11 officers and 250 enlisted men. Last summer orders were received by the officers of this ordnance outfit which were interpreted as directing the enlisted personnel to go to camp for training.

Every member of the Five hundred and thirty-second Ordnance Company is an expert engineer or machinist, a war veteran, and employee of the Bucyrus-Erie Co. Colonel Coleman, the president of the company, is to be commended for the encouragement he has always given to this army activity. The men were overjoyed to learn that their outfit had been called to camp for active duty from July 8 to 22, 1928, at Rock Island Arsenal, and Colonel Coleman and the management of the Bucyrus-Erie Co. agreed to make up the difference between Army pay and Bucyrus pay for any who preferred to attend camp on Bucyrus time rather than to take their vacation for this purpose. Upon consulting the War Department it was found that the order merely provided for the sending of the officer personnel to camp for training purposes.

I wrote Major General Summerall, Chief of Staff, at that time, and received a reply from him dated April 2, 1928, which reads in part as follows:

> I am in receipt of your letter of March 31, relative to sending enlisted men of the Five hundred and thirty-second Ordnance Company to camp, as originally planned.
> I am sorry that I shall be unable to comply with your request, but due to the fact that no funds were appropriated by Congress for the training of enlisted reservists, I fear that it will not be possible.
> I need not tell you how I appreciate the splendid showing and high morale of the enlisted reservists of this organization, which compares so favorably to other reserve organizations. I feel sure that the high technical training and knowledge which these men possess will be of the greatest benefit to the Nation in case of any future emergency.

Upon carefully reading the hearings on the appropriation bill now before the House I find that the War Department only asked for $100 for the enlisted reserves.

I believe in case of a future war it is just as essential to our national defense to have properly trained noncommissioned officers as it is to have trained commissioned officers. We must have trained corporals, sergeants, master engineers, and other noncommissioned officers in order to have an effective military organization in time of war. I am rising at this time to ask the Appropriations Committee if they have at any time taken up with the War Department the question of providing some appropriation so that the enlisted reserve, particularly the noncommissioned officers, can receive a little training. Does not the committee think there may be some merit in appropriating more than $100 for the enlisted reserve?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the officer of the War Department who appeared before the committee said that this $100 was merely a nominal amount in order to retain the language in the bill; that it never has been contemplated that the enlisted reserve be trained.

Our Organized Reserves are composed of regiments of officers who take certain courses of study during the year and then a considerable number of them go to camps for 15 days in the summer time. Some of them are taken into the Army schools and trained for various periods and some go in training with the Army Air Corps as reserve fliers. When they go to the camp for two weeks in the summer time, Regular Army troops are there for them to train with, and part of the training, I understand, is that these reserve officers will take command of these Regular Army regiments that are there, and really there is no other enlisted personnel needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the subcommittee apparently misunderstood me, or perhaps I was not clear in my statement. I did not propose to send these enlisted reserve noncommissioned officers to the camps so that the commissioned reserve officers would have some one to practice on.

My question is: Why is it not necessary to send these noncommissioned officers to the camps to receive training so that in case of a future emergency we will have these men in the line with some training? It is just as necessary to have trained noncommissioned officers as it is to have trained first and second lieutenants.

I think our whole plan of national defense falls if we are only going to provide training for commissioned reserve officers. Let us train the noncommissioned officers. In time of war the noncommissioned officers do good and effective work and it is essential that they be properly trained.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Does not the gentleman know that we have hostesses now to help train these men?

Mr. SCHAFER. I am not taking part in that "hostess" argument. I have not had time to look into the merits of that question.

I am taking the floor at this time to call attention to my views on this important matter. I think the War Department should see to it that some of their attention is diverted to the training of the enlisted reserve noncommissioned officers, even if we have to somewhat curtail our expenditures for training the reserve commissioned officer personnel. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CITIZENS' MILITARY TRAINING

RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

For the procurement, maintenance, and issue, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to institutions at which one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained, of such public animals, means of transportation, supplies, tentage, equipment, and uniforms as he may deem necessary, including cleaning and laundering of uniforms and clothing at camps; and to forage, at the expense of the United States, public animals so issued, and to pay commutation in lieu of uniforms at a rate to be fixed annually by the Secretary of War; for transporting said animals and other authorized supplies and equipment from place of issue to the several institutions and training camps and return of same to place of issue when necessary; for purchase of training manuals, including Government publications and blank forms; for the establishment and maintenance of camps for the further practical instruction of the members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and for transporting members of such corps to and from such camps, and to subsist them while traveling to and from such camps and while remaining therein so far as appropriations will permit, or in lieu of transporting them to and from such camps and subsisting them while en route to pay them travel allowance at the rate of 5 cents per mile for the distance by the shortest usually traveled route from the places from which they are authorized to proceed to the camp and for the return travel thereto, and to pay the return travel pay in advance of the actual performance of the travel; for reimbursement for the use, including upkeep and depreciation costs of supplies, equipment, and matériel furnished in accordance with law from stocks under the control of the War Department; for pay for students attending advanced camps at the rate prescribed for soldiers of the seventh grade of the Regular Army; for the payment of commutation of subsistence to members of the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, at a rate not exceeding the cost of the garrison ration prescribed for the Army, as authorized in the act approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act approved June 4, 1920 (U. S. C., p. 184, sec. 387); for medical and hospital treatment, subsistence until furnished transportation, and transportation when fit for travel to their homes of members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps injured in line of duty while at camps of instruction under the provisions of section 47a of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., p. 185, sec. 441); and for the cost of preparation and transportation to their homes and burial expenses of the remains of members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps who die while attending camps of instruction as provided in section 4 of the act approved June 3, 1924 (U. S. C., p. 186, sec. 455); and for the cost of maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, $2,667,917: Provided, That uniforms and other equipment or material issued to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps in accordance with law shall be furnished from surplus or reserve stocks of the War Department without payment from this appropriation, except for actual expense incurred in the manufacture or issue: Provided further, That in no case shall the amount paid from this appropriation for uniforms, equipment, or material furnished to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps from stocks under the control of the War Department be in excess of the price current at the time the issue is made: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the organization or maintenance of an additional number of mounted, motor transport, or tank units in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated elsewhere in this act, except for printing and binding and pay and allowances of officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, shall be used for expenses in connection with the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 9, after the colon, strike out the figures "2,667,917" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "2,145,900."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen, the purpose of this amendment is twofold: First it is to keep the number of young men of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps at the same figure it was last year, or at the same figure carried in the 1929 bill. Second, it eliminates the dress uniform that is to be provided to those in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps known as basic students.

Let me direct your attention in discussing this amendment to the number of young men in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. There are at the present time 127,453 of these boys now in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. In addition to these there are 14,807 young men in 55–C schools. There are 30 other schools which are known as below 55–C schools. These are schools where the average number of students range from 40 to 100. This makes in all these schools scattered throughout the United States where training is given, over 145,000 students who take toll out of this bill and that part of them that want to will ultimately be officers in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

Now I call the attention of the House to the fact that the committee has added 2,000 additional—all to high-school units—making the total number to be trained around 147,000 in 1930.

We have over 40,000 more officers in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps now than is estimated as needed to command three and a half million men. So what is the sense in training so many additional officers?

This training is not voluntary in many of the schools. We claim we do not have compulsory military training in this country, but in many of our schools and colleges and high schools compulsory military training is practiced now.

The purpose of this amendment is to eliminate 2,000 of these trainees in the high schools and to keep this activity from growing this year.

The cost to the Government of keeping these young men in this work amounts to $88.50 per year, and the cost at camp is $132 per year per student. And this is just a part of the expense. The young man at school is given his subsistence allowance or his ration allowance. If he is in a high grade, like a junior or senior year in college, he is given a uniform costing $30, and the second year an additional allowance of $6.

I call the attention of the House to this fact, that in some colleges the uniforms cost as much as $377.25 a year. Do you not know that the time is going to approach soon when this uniform allowance for the senior units will be increased and the uniform allowance of the Federal Government will greatly exceed $36? This bill carries an item of $507,759 to take care of the uniform allowance to the basic students and this is just the beginning of the program. This will pay just a part of the cost of uniforming the freshmen and sophomores. They are the basic students. The juniors and seniors are taken care of elsewhere in the bill. They are called the advanced trainees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman frim Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. The uniform allowance for the basic students up to now has been small. This is the beginning of a more dressy garb. The uniform allowance for the 55–C schools will probably come on next year and those schools below 55–C will follow. Ultimately will come more extensive and more expensive programs. The universities and colleges of the country are not satisfied now. They will want larger appropriations and will get them as they will this. We are giving the young men at these colleges this uniform allowance and we are denying the soldier in the Army a new uniform. If anyone is entitled to a better uniform, it is the real soldier.

They will wear the same old uniform. Of course, these young men in the colleges want a nice uniform, and they want a subsistence allowance, and the college professors want these allowances; so do the professors in the high schools, and those young men attending them. We can not blame them for asking. If it were worth-while training, there could be no objection. Certainly that in the high schools can not be defended. It is wholly without value.

Is it the idea of this Congress to provide compulsory military training in all of the schools and colleges? Many here had no idea it was practiced. Is it the idea of the Congress to train as soldiers young men 14 years of age? This is what we are doing. Germany never did it in her palmiest days. We pretend we want to keep the Federal Government out of the schools of the country, but we do not. If a proposal made to establish a department of education and have the Federal Government go into the schools for the purpose of assisting the schools of the country in general educational work, I dare say that there would not be 25 men on this floor who would be in favor of it; and right now we are in the schools and colleges and the high schools and the schools below the high schools and are appropriating great sums of money out of the Treasury, all because Army officers tell us that it is in aid of national defense.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Is not all that is being done in regard to training of the youth in the colleges and schools, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, simply carrying out the provisions of the national defense act in that respect?

Mr. COLLINS. I answered the same question for the gentleman the other day. Of course it is provided for in the national defense act, but there are many things in the national defense act that would not be put into it now if it was being considered by the Congress at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Does the gentleman's amendment reduce the money that is necessary or available for training in the high schools?

Mr. COLLINS. It only touches the high schools. My amendment seeks to keep the high-school trainees at the number now being trained.

Mr. HUDSON. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment. I am willing to see training in colleges, and I believe in citizens' military training camps, and in the National Guard. I am an honorary member and pay annual dues, but I do not believe in military training in the high schools of the country.

Mr. COLLINS. In many high schools in this country military training is made compulsory.

Mr. JAMES. There is no compulsory training in the high schools.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Where? They are training them in my district, but it is not compulsory. The boys can take it or leave it alone.

Mr. COLLINS. The testimony states that in high schools military training is compulsory. Not all of them but in many. If the gentleman will look at the tables in the hearings he will see the letter "A" after the name of many colleges or universities. Wherever the "A" appears, military training is not compulsory, and where military training is compulsory, there is no "A."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman ought to make it clear that it is not the national law that makes it compulsory but the regulations of the particular school.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman is partly correct. It is really compulsory in all of them, because the War Department makes them enlist for a given period and makes them agree in writing to take this training for a given time.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. There is a very large element in this Congress, a very great element in the country—perhaps a preponderating element—who really believes in all these things the gentleman is speaking about.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not know about the number. I do know there are a great many people in this country who believe in compulsory military training; but I do not believe a majority of the membership of this House believes in compulsory military training. If they do, they are successfully hiding their convictions from their people back home. My amendment proposes to keep down the number of these high-school boys to be trained and to eliminate the increased appropriation for uniforms and allowances to the basic students.

Let me enumerate the methods employed in going after these young men: First, the compulsory feature; second, the horses, the boys like to ride; third, the uniform, the dressy uniform; and fourth, the young ladies who act as chaperons, who inspect them, who shoot at rifle practice with them, who play soldiers with them. I thought I had some newspaper pictures of many of these young ladies, dressed in snappy uniforms, which I wanted the House to see. I am sorry I failed to bring them.

Anyway, these are the four main ways of getting these young men into the game. They are to be officers—all of them. They like it; and their tribe is on the increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is considerable misunderstanding among the Members of the House on the progress of the building program at West Point, and there have been some unmerited criticisms directed at the executive officers and those who have the building program in charge. I am sure these statements would not have been made if the Members understood the conditions under which the program has had to be carried out. There is no set of officers anywhere in the Army to my knowledge who make a more conscientious or sincere effort to do their work efficiently and economically, and, at the same time, to carry out the wishes of Congress than the officers stationed at West Point.

Two hundred and ninety-seven thousand dollars is needed to complete the construction of what is referred to as the new mess hall at West Point. As a matter of fact, this building, when completed, will contain not only a mess hall to accommodate the entire corps of cadets of more than 1,300 members in one dining room, with all the necessary kitchens, bakeries, refrigeration, and storehouses incident to the operation of such a mess, but it also will contain the dormitories where the cooks, waiters, and other personnel employed in the mess will be housed; the cadet store which furnishes all supplies that cadets use, where all the uniforms which the cadets wear are made and all repairs done; a drawing department which accommodates two classes at one time; dormitories, bath rooms, and so forth, to accommodate visiting athletic teams at West Point; and also the offices of the treasurer of the United States Military Academy. This building, when completed, will be unquestionably one of the finest and best built structures in America.

In view of the fact that $297,000 is needed now, in addition to the estimates which have heretofore been submitted, it is important and essential that the Members of the House should understand just how the original estimates were made and how the money which has already been appropriated has been expended in the construction of this building. When the building was first contemplated, the superintendent of the academy called in the constructing quartermaster and gave to him a rough sketch showing the approximate and tentative floor plan of a building which was to contain the cadet mess, the cadet store, and the drawing department. With the heights of the buildings in the immediate vicinity as a guide and the tentative floor plan of the building as shown on the sketch, a total of 2,961,290 cubic feet was estimated as the capacity of the building.

With an estimated cost of 62 cents per cubic foot, the total cost of the building was arrived at by multiplying the number of cubic feet in the building by 62 cents. This gave a total cost of $1,836,000. This figure, it must be remembered, was arrived at before any plans whatsoever had been drawn, no money having yet been appropriated for the preparation of plans and specifications. This estimate was based on what the then superintendent thought the floor arrangement and the height of the building should be and upon what the constructing quartermaster estimated the cost per cubic foot would be. This $1,836,000 did not include the cost of any equipment for the building.

With this rough estimate as a basis, the Congress for the fiscal year 1925, without previously enacting authorizing legislation, appropriated $83,000 to be expended in drawing the plans of the mess hall, cadet store, drawing department, and dormitories. This was the first legislation of any kind that was passed by Congress for this building. No limit was placed on the cost of the building in this or any other legislation.

When these funds became available Arnold W. Brunner, of New York City, was appointed architect to draw the plans and specifications of the building.

When the architect arrived on the ground to study the situation, needs, and so forth, the Superintendent of the Military Academy appointed a board of officers to study the requirements of the various units that were to be housed in the building and to assign space to each of these units. As the result of this study, the superintendent decided to increase the size of the building in order to incorporate in the building the cadet armory. This armory was, and is now, housed in cadet barracks and occupies space which should be used by cadets for living quarters. The superintendent also decided to enlarge the space originally allotted for the lecture room of the drawing academy. He also decided to put in the building the cadet photographic studio and to provide dormitory accommodations for visiting athletic teams. These modifications which were made after the first $83,000 had been appropriated, increased the cubic contents of the building, which in turn, of course, increased the total cost of the building on the basis of the original estimates. In addition to these modifications, it was also decided to enlarge the space for the kitchen and to include in this new mess hall a bakery shop which would serve all of the needs of the garrison at West Point; that is, the enlisted men as well as the cadets.

After this report of the board was approved by the superintendent, there was still an effort made to reduce the total cost of the building and especially to avoid excessive rock excavation, and therefore, the sketch plans of the architects were cut down about 10 feet on one end. However, when the plans were drawn up, the changes that had to be made in order to incorporate within the limits of the building all the activities which these studies showed should be housed therein increased the cubic contents of the building by 438,710 cubic feet. Applying the original estimate of 62 cents per cubic foot to this increased cubic contents, the estimated cost was increased by $272,000.

About this same time a letter was received by the officials at West Point from the budget officer for the War Department, dated April 22, 1924, which directed that labor rates of pay should be equal to those of civilian labor in the vicinity, which made it necessary to increase the wages of the personnel working on this building.

The original estimate was based on $3 a day for common labor and $6 a day for skilled mechanics. In order to comply with the aforementioned instructions from the War Department, it was necessary to increase these figures to $4 and $8 per day, respectively. This additional expenditure above the original estimate up to September 1, 1928, has amounted to $362,948.14, to which must be added about $40,000 to cover the time up to the completion of the building.

Due to these increases in the size of the building and to these increases in the cost of labor over which the officers at West Point who were making the estimates had, of course, no control, the increased cost of the building will be $674,950 more than the original estimates. Of course, had these facts been known at the time the original estimate was submitted on the basis of the rough sketch, the original estimate would have included these factors and would have called for $2,510,948 exclusive of equipment, instead of $1,836,000. Now, when the $297,000 now needed to complete the building is appropriated, the total appropriations for this building, exclusive of equipment, will be $2,359,334; that is, the total cost of the building, including this $297,000 will be $151,614 less than the initial estimates would have been had the two conditions—that is, the increased size and the increased wages—been foreseen in the beginning and taken into the original estimates.

There is also another important factor in this matter. When the initial estimate was made it was thought that the work of construction would require not more than two years. This was believed at that time to be the most economical method of building. On this basis, the first year's estimate which came from West Point was for an appropriation of $800,000; that is, in order to complete the building in two years, it was necessary to have $800,000 the first year. This estimate was cut, and the appropriation actually made was for $350,000 only. It appears that the attention of the Appropriations Committee of Congress was called to the fact that by making appropriations in such amounts as was indicated by the $350,000, thereby requiring a period of five years in which to complete the building, it would require about a quarter of a million dollars more than it would require if the building were completed in two years. This statement was made by Colonel Timberlake, the constructing quartermaster. I am informed that Colonel Timberlake, after having made this statement to the committee, consulted a contracting firm on this point and was told by them that in their opinion it would add 25 per cent to the cost of the building if it were continued over a period of five years instead of being completed in two years.

This building has been constructed by the system of purchase and hire; that is, it was not let out to a contractor, but the quartermaster himself has done the work. This method of construction, which is unquestionably much more economical than the method of contracting, made it necessary, however, to spend about $25,000 of the appropriation for the procurement of the necessary construction machinery.

Another point that should be noted in regard to this matter is this: The stone for building this building is quarried from the hills at West Point. From these quarries a great deal of stone has been obtained, and up to within the last year this stone has been of an excellent quality. However, about a year ago it developed that the good stone was running short, and due to many seams and flaws in the stone it became necessary to put on a double force—that is, two gangs, one night and one day—in order to get out sufficient stone to keep the stonecutters busy, and at least 70 per cent of the stone gotten out had to be discarded, as it was unsuitable for cutting. This made a considerable increase in the cost of the procurement of the stone itself.

It may be interesting to call attention to how the 62 cents per cubic foot was arrived at as the basis for making the initial estimate. I am informed that contractors generally estimate the cost of a building by fixing some figure as the cost per cubic foot. This is the most general system used by contractors and builders. The cost per cubic foot, I am informed, is determined by considering the type of building, whether it is to be stone, brick, or frame; how it is divided up into rooms; the plumbing, heating, sewerage, and so forth. These things are all taken into consideration in fixing the price per cubic foot. At West Point the price of 62 cents per cubic foot was adopted because the last contractor working at West Point on similar construction used 62 cents per cubic foot as the basis. Also, the constructing quartermaster there had done work of a similar nature at approximately this same cost.

So much for the building itself, the original estimates, and its total cost. It is now necessary to direct attention to the specific item of $297,000 which is under consideration.

In October, 1927, the constructing quartermaster at West Point who was putting up the building came to the conclusion that there was not sufficient funds appropriated to complete the building. He called into consultation the superintendent of construction on the building and also the general superintendent of construction at West Point, who has been there for 30 years and has supervised all of the modern construction at West Point. These two men estimated that it would require a total of $680,031 to complete the building. The balance of the appropriation on hand at that time was $553,697. It was therefore necessary to ask for an additional appropriation of $126,334. This matter was called to the attention of the House Committee on Military Affairs, and a bill authorizing the appropriation of this additional $126,334 was passed. Under the authority of this authorization act Congress later appropriated $126,334.

It was later discovered by the constructing quartermaster at West Point that this amount was not correct because of two mistakes which had been made. First, the $553,697, which was the balance on hand at the time the estimate was made, included the $161,000 that had been appropriated, not for the construction of the building but for the equipment that was to be purchased and placed in the building. It was also discovered that the estimate of the superintendent of construction on the post and the general superintendent of construction of $680,031, which had been approved by the constructing quartermaster, was too low. I think there can be no doubt that the two superintendents of construction estimated on the basis of their best judgment, and that judgment was based on a long experience in this kind of work. At the time the estimate was made there were about 300 men employed on the post, and the constructing quartermaster frankly states that the estimate which was made at that time, and which he approved, was too low.

I might say here, for the information of the Members of this House, that in my experience of many years as a member of the Military Affairs Committee and as one who has followed closely every detail of the building program at West Point, that it has been the policy of the officials at West Point to underestimate rather than to overestimate. I think this mistake was an honest error, and, so far as I know, no one has endeavored to excuse it on any grounds other than that it was an error of judgment. In fact, I might call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that contractors who have worked at West Point on any basis other than a percentage basis have lost large amounts of money. It is a fact that the last contractor who built the addition to the cadet barracks is now suing the Government for over $300,000 which he claims to have lost on his contract, which amounts to $404,000. Another example of incorrect estimates at West Point is found in the construction of the Thayer Hotel. I am informed that the contractor who built that hotel started in with an estimate for the building of $850,000, but only recently he testified before the Court of Claims that the building actually cost $1,219,000. This is an error in judgment of about 40 per cent.

A Board of Visitors recently visited West Point. The question of this $297,000 was brought to their attention, and the fact that the matter had been investigated by two disinterested officers, one appointed by the superintendent of the academy and the other by the Secretary of War, and that both had come to the conclusion that all money for the construction of this building had been economically spent and the Government had gotten full value for every dollar expended. The Board of Visitors were impressed with the character of construction and came away with the opinion that there is probably not a better constructed building in this country. The board was especially impressed with the fact that the construction has been done in such a manner as to make necessary a minimum of expenditure in future years in maintaining the building. I am informed that architects who have seen this building state that the cost per cubic foot should be not 65 cents but 75 cents or 80 cents, yet when the $297,000 now under consideration is appropriated, this building will have cost less than 70 cents per cubic foot.

Just a word about Colonel Timberlake, the constructing quartermaster. In the presence of the Board of Visitors, the superintendent at West Point remarked:

> Timberlake gets more for a dollar than any man I ever knew. He makes a dollar do the work of two.

This is the judgment of the officer who, after all, is responsible for the development of the Military Academy and who is constantly in touch with the work. Colonel Timberlake was sent to West Point to complete the building program there because he was considered to be preeminently qualified for this work. He had been at West Point before the World War. Immediately upon the conclusion of the World War he was brought back there to complete the work. The act of Congress which authorizes him to remain there until this program is completed was based on a desire by Congress to see that the construction program there was carried out in accordance with the original plans by one who thoroughly understood what those plans were and in a manner that would be most economical to the Government. That he was not sent there because of any sentimental reason is indicated by the character of the personnel of the Committee on Military Affairs which recommended to the Congress the passage of that act. I have but to refer to some of them to demonstrate the truth of this statement. It was passed when the late Hon. Julius Kahn, Hon. D. R. Anthony, John C. McKenzie, Frank L. Greene, Thomas S. Crago, S. Hubert Dent, William J. Fields, and Percy E. Quin were members of the committee. I think any Member of this House who knows the character of those men will realize that Colonel Timberlake's retention at West Point was intended for no other purpose than that the interests of the United States Government might be best conserved.

The committee report on this bill, filed by Mr. Dent, contains the following statement:

> The committee incorporated in this bill a provision authorizing the Secretary of War to detail Col. E. J. Timberlake as quartermaster, disbursing, and construction officer at the academy. It is the opinion of the committee that Colonel Timberlake has rendered valuable and efficient services at the academy in this capacity, and his familiarity with the duties and responsibilities, combined with his business methods, make it desirable that he be detailed there.

I will add, however, that at the time the building program was resumed after the war, it was the belief of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs that the construction program there would be completed within a period of five or six years. That it has been drawn out over a much longer period is no fault of the constructing quartermaster or any of the officials at West Point. They have urged in every proper way the early completion of this building program. The reason it could not be completed within the time originally expected is because the Congress itself has been reluctant from time to time to make the necessary appropriations. In other words, the Military Academy at West Point, along with many other activities of the Government, has been a factor in carrying out the program of economy to which the administration and the Congress has been, and still is, committed.

In conclusion I wish to call the attention of the House to the urgent necessity of appropriating at this time the $297,000 which is required to complete this building. When completed it will meet the needs of 1,374 cadets, the number now authorized by law. The storage and refrigerator rooms are large enough so that all supplies can be purchased in carload lots, which means a decided saving in the operation of the cadet mess. I am adding here a letter received from Mr. Gehron, of the firm of Gehron, Ross & Alley, architects, who are the successors to Arnold Brunner, who made the original plans, as well as other letters in further explanation of this matter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman intend to put in his remarks the statement received from Colonel Timberlake?

Mr. MORIN. What statement?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The statement as to Colonel Timberlake's view on the prevailing rate of wages.

Mr. MORIN. I shall not touch on the wage question at all, because I do not think that is necessary.

The letters referred to follow:

NEW YORK, December 24, 1928.

Hon. J. M. MORIN,
Chairman of Military Affairs Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have found out recently that inspectors have been sent to West Point to investigate the expenditure of moneys on the mess hall, which is being built under the direction of Col. E. J. Timberlake from our drawings.

We were sorry to learn that the Government has taken this attitude, as we know from experience in working with Colonel Timberlake that he has made the utmost effort in every direction to procure the best results in subletting the work for this building, and further that he takes great pride and care in keeping the cost of the buildings which are built under his direction down to the very minimum.

In designing the mess hall he requested that it be a simple, dignified building with as little ornamentation as possible and still harmonize with the style and character of the buildings at West Point, but he did insist on having the best materials and quality where maintenance was concerned.

We have been the architects for a number of large buildings of a similar type of construction, among them the new State Capitol group at Harrisburg, Pa., the Mount Sinai Hospital in New York City, and the Theological Seminary in New York City, and we have never seen a building that was as well built and had as much thought put to it for low maintenance as the cadet mess hall.

The exterior stonework is backed up with solid concrete, and the large Gothic windows in the mess hall are all cut from Indiana limestone, and the design of Gothic tracery is of necessity an expensive operation. Supporting the second and third floors above the large mess hall was expensive due to the need of large trusses in order to eliminate all columns in this room. The building throughout is of modern fireproof construction.

The interior has such a varied use and required unusual and necessarily costly materials in some of this work, such as a number of large refrigerating rooms, kitchen, and pantries, etc., that required mechanical equipment, including refrigerating machines and kitchen equipment, which adds considerable to the cost of the building. There is also, as you know, a large lecture room on the top floor, which required mechanical ventilation.

We understand that the actual cost of this building is about 69 cents per cubic foot, which is unusually low; the reason being the elimination of the usual contractor's commission, which would not be less than 10 per cent, and allowance for contingencies; also the fact that Colonel Timberlake can operate with nonunion labor; and we have found that his overhead in his organization must be smaller than the usual contractor's office overhead, as he carries on his work with a small number of men. We assume that the cost of a building of a similar type would be at least 85 cents per cubic foot if built by outside contractors.

We will be glad to give you any further information that may be required or useful to you in correcting any impression that may have arisen as to the excessive cost of this work, as we are particularly anxious to be of any service, as we feel it is an injustice to Colonel Timberlake after all of the strenuous efforts he has made to keep the cost of this building down to the minimum.

Very truly yours,

GEHRON, ROSS & ALLEY.
By WILLIAM GEHRON.

OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER,
West Point, N. Y., December 18, 1928.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MORIN: Replying to yours of December 17, in going about the erection of the new hospital, advertisements were let twice. The first time the low bid was $666,600 and the high bid $741,226. Conditions as to labor and material became easier shortly after this and this building was readvertised. On the readvertisement, the low bid was $539,539 and the high bid was $672,000.

After these second bids were received, I thought maybe I could do better by getting away from the New York contractors, and I got a big firm, Cuthbert Bros., of Pittsburgh, to make me an estimate on the building. This estimate was $539,000.

I then decided it was impossible to get this building erected anywhere near the appropriation, which was $390,000, so I undertook the erection of the building by the method of purchase and hire. The appropriations for the new hospital were as follows: Fiscal year 1920, $390,000; 1924, $52,000; 1925, $13,500; a total of $455,500.

The building as built is larger and better than was specified or bid upon. For instance, the specifications called for only two-thirds of the basement to be excavated, whereas I excavated the entire basement and gave them that much more storage room. The result of the few years' use has shown that this was a wise move. Again, the specifications called for galvanized iron pipe throughout the building, and in the construction of the building I put in brass pipe. If the firm who bid low—$539,000—had bid on this increase in the basement and brass pipe their bid would probably have been $30,000 to $40,000 larger.

Now, as to the second part of your letter. I was detailed in the Quartermaster Department and arrived at West Point June 20, 1914. I remained on duty at this post until October 29, 1918, when I was relieved and expected to go to France. During the time I was away, I was stationed at Camp Eustis and Fort Monroe, Va.

When the visiting committee came to West Point on December 13, 1918, I was ordered up to West Point to go over the estimates with the committee. While here on that temporary duty, the committee asked me to come back here and take up the duties again, which I reluctantly did. However, as the committee expressed such confidence in me, and so stated, I cast aside my own desires and came back, arriving here March 31, 1919, as a result of the proviso in the Military Academy bill, and have been on this duty ever since, giving the best I have to the work.

With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

E. J. TIMBERLAKE.

SEPTEMBER 17, 1928.

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

1. It is requested that the estimate for public works (construction funds) for the United States Military Academy be increased $297,540 to complete the cadet mess hall building, drawing academy, and cadet store. In order to understand fully the reasons prompting this demand it is desirable to review briefly the conditions which attended the original estimates together with the subsequent events that have had an important influence on the latter. It is proposed, therefore, first to state the case; second, and to show the reasons for the present demand.

2. The original estimates for this building were initiated in 1916 by the then superintendent, but when these estimates were made there were no funds available for the preparation of plans. Contrary, therefore, to the normal procedure of making estimates after the plans had been drawn, it was necessary to make the estimates without such essential directives. By direction of the superintendent, acting within his proper powers, the approximate area of the floor plan was laid out and an appropriate but tentative height determined upon. From this data the quartermaster arrived at the approximate cubical contents of 2,961,290 cubic feet. A request was then made on Congress for money based on the above cubical content, and the project was approved for $1,836,000, exclusive of equipment.

3. In the appropriations for fiscal year 1924 there was an additional item of $83,000 granted for the drawing of plans, and while they were in progress the superintendent appointed a board of officers to study the requirements of the units that were to occupy the building and to assign space for their various activities. The result of this study decided the superintendent to increase the designs in order to incorporate in the building the cadet armory (thereby releasing much-needed space in cadet barracks for living quarters) and to enlarge the lecture-room space of the drawing academy. Furthermore, it was decided to concentrate in the building the cadet photographic studio and to provide accommodations for visiting athletic teams. These modifications, made after the building had been authorized by Congress at an ultimate cost of $1,836,000, increased the cubical contents, which in turn logically increased the total cost, although that figure was allowed to remain as set by Congress. Hence, right from the beginning there was forecast a deficiency before the building could be finally completed. It could only have been avoided in the case that the original estimate of the quartermaster of 62 cents per cubic foot for construction had been too high, but as will be shown that estimate was quite accurate.

4. Excavation for the building began July 1, 1924. It was the original intention to complete the building in two years, provided, of course, that the funds were made available. For the excavation work, Congress authorized the amount of $93,000, a sum in addition to the original amount authorized for the entire building. For the fiscal year 1926, the quartermaster requested that $800,000 be made available, but he was allowed by the Budget only $350,000. The following year he requested the sum of $700,000, which he received, and the third year of construction he asked for $700,000 plus the $161,000, or a total of $861,000, which sum was granted. It is important to note this total, for it was on account of carrying these two items as a lump sum that a clerical error occurred, which is one of the causes for the increase now requested. This will be referred to later. Hence we see that to date there has been appropriated for the construction of this building the following sums:

For drawing of plans	$83,000
For excavation	93,000
First year	350,000
Second year	700,000
Third year	700,000
Third year (equipment)	161,000
Increase fiscal year 1928	126,334
Total	2,213,334

Of this amount there remains a balance of approximately $50,000. In other words, the building is incomplete and the money intended for equipment has been for the greater part spent upon construction.

5. So much for a statement of the case. It is now essential to set forth the circumstances that have influenced the construction over a period of years and that have been responsible, in part, for the need of additional funds.

6. The lack of funds is apparently due to a number of cumulative costs necessary in overcoming unforeseen difficulties ever since the beginning of the excavation on July 1, 1924.

Specifically they are:

(a) The increase in the cubical contents of the building as calculated from the final working drawings of the architects in comparison with the cubical contents of the original and necessarily general sketches of the mess hall, cadet store, and drawing academy upon which the appropriation for the construction ($1,836,000) was based. The original 2,961,200 cubic feet contents were increased to 3,400,000 cubic feet, or an increase of 438,710 cubic feet contents, which calculated at the original figure of 62 cents per cubic foot gives an increase in cost of $272,000.

(b) The total cost of construction was increased by the increase in wages of 33⅓ per cent by direction of the War Department on January 1, 1925. The latter directed that this increase apply to civilian employees employed for maintenance purposes, and when the quartermaster very justly requested that the appropriations for construction be increased to meet this unforeseen additional labor cost, he was told that he must meet the increase from general construction funds. This was easier said than done, for the original estimate had been made on the basis of paying $3 per day for pick and shovel men, and $6 per day for skilled mechanics. The compulsory raise of wages increased these figures to $4 and $8 per day, respectively. The additional labor expenditure above the original estimate to this second unforeseen cause up to September 1, 1928, has been $362,948.14.

(c) The cost of production for exterior wall facings was increased by unfavorable quarry developments during the later stages of stone cutting. Much stone was quarried that was useless, as it was found to have seams in it that caused it to fall apart. Much more stone than was originally estimated had therefore to be quarried, necessitating night operations and extra cost in the splitting of stone of proper quality. All of this in turn brought about increased cost in the disposal of waste and the incidentals, such as extra cost of gasoline and the repair of transportation equipment, to mention only a few.

(d) The extension of the construction over a longer period of time than contemplated has resulted in additional overhead executive costs.

(e) Increase in the underlying labor costs for certain classes of mechanics. As civil-service mechanics were not always available, it was often necessary to fill out their quota by the employment of men less skillful, who had to be instructed in the proper way to build exterior walls, fireproof partitions, and other interior construction, thereby causing additional costs. Exact figures for the increased cost under (c), (d), and (e), supra, are not at hand, but the increases mentioned under (a) and (b) are sufficient in themselves to show that the deficiency could not have been avoided by the quartermaster, as he was the victim of circumstances over which he had no control.

7. But the increase requested now would have been smaller had it not been for two other causes, to wit: A clerical error that occurred in the estimates made in October, 1927, as well as an error in the estimates themselves.

This was unfortunate but understandable. Last year the quartermaster realized that the amount of $1,836,000 granted originally for the cost of the building would be insufficient, and hence he caused to be prepared a careful estimate of the amount that would be necessary to complete the building. The engineers in charge made a detailed estimate of the needs and reported that a total of $680,031 was necessary. A reference to the books showed a total to the credit of the quartermaster of $553,697, but it was not noticed that this sum included the item of $161,000, which had been appropriated for equipment and which, had it been noticed, should have been deducted from the total before arriving at the conclusions that the whole amount was available for construction, and that it would be necessary to ask for only the difference between that sum and the estimate of the engineers. In other words, only $126,334 was requested, whereas $126,334, plus $161,000, should have been asked for, or $287,334.

8. Assuming that no error had been made, the quartermaster would have probably received $287,334, yet to-day he would still be short of funds. He has spent the $161,000, or most of it, as if it had been appropriated and now has a balance of $50,000. His shortage in any case would have been the difference between $297,540, the increase now requested, and $211,000 ($161,000 and $50,000), or $86,540. In other words, detailed estimate of October, 1927, was too little by $86,540. These two factors—namely, the clerical error of not deducting the amount already appropriated for equipment and the error shortage made in October, 1927, in calculating the estimates of funds to complete the building—are responsible for the present demand for an increase of appropriation.

9. But if we offset against the increase appropriation requested the inroads made into the original estimate by circumstances over which the quartermaster had no control and which worked to his disadvantage in a financial showing, we find the following should be credited to his account:

(a) Increase cost through increased cubical contents		$272,000.00
(b) Increase cost due to increase of 33⅓ per cent wages (discussed above)		362,948.14
		534,948.14
If we now subtract the increase asked for	$297,540
The increase given, fiscal year 1928	126,334
		423,874.00
Balance		110,074.14

This amount, $110,074.14, really should be interpreted as the economy that would have been effected in the building of this mess hall, cadet store, and drawing academy had no circumstances beyond his control intervened to increase the original estimates. The request for the increase seems, therefore, just and reasonable.

10. It is consequently requested that the sum of $297,540 urgently needed to complete the cadet mess hall, drawing academy, and cadet store be added to the estimate for public works (construction funds), United States Military Academy, now under consideration by the War Department; and it is furthermore requested that representation be made to Congress to incorporate a proviso of law making the appropriation immediately available.

WM. R. SMITH,
Major General, Superintendent.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take very long to reply to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS]. At the present time I do not feel that I can go along with my colleague on the committee on his amendment. He proposes to reduce the appropriation for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps by something more than $500,000.

It would, I understand, cut out a certain amount which would otherwise go toward providing uniforms for those in the higher branches of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and it would prevent the adding of 2,000 additional students in the junior grades in the high schools. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] pointed out, there are certain units provided for in the national defense act which are not Reserve Officers' Training Corps units, but which receive certain allowances from the Government. I understand the high-school cadets in Washington are in this group. They do not draw uniforms from the Government. For a long time there have been requests from schools all over the country for Reserve Officers' Training Corps units, and there has been no provision for establishing additional units in these high schools.

This bill contemplates that there shall be 2,000 additional Reserve Officers' Training Corps students in certain high schools and preparatory schools. So far as I am concerned, I believe that this is one of the best activities in the way of training that the Government engages in.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I do not think I can turn to the page now in the hearings, but somewhere in the hearings the question was asked if the uniforms would be made up now, and the answer was "No," but they would buy the cloth. Now that the inequalities in the uniform are done away with, are they going to buy the moth balls, too?

Mr. BARBOUR. Well, the Army has a way of storing cloths and things of that kind that is very effective. They have on hand now a large amount of material that has been left over since the war. Part of that is not in good condition and some of it needs renovation. I understand the rest of it is good.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is not the fact, is it, in regard to the uniform?

Mr. BARBOUR. In the rush of war-time activities some of the material was not as good as it should have been. We got all kinds of cloth.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I see by the hearing that it is intended to give a new uniform every two years to the boys. Is that a fact?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes. That is part of the allowance. We are allowing the advanced students $36 over a period of two years if they do not take the issue uniforms. Two years ago this committee brought in a provision cutting that down to $7 and a fraction, which was the value of the free-issue uniform. The committee was criticized by Members of this House for reducing that uniform allowance. It has been restored for the benefit of the advanced students. This proposes to go further and provide for all students, advance and basic, in the colleges and universities. It is proposed now to allow them a uniform once every two years.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I find the reference to the hearings I tried to locate is on page 877. I compliment the gentleman and his committee on the work they have been doing. I read:

Mr. BARBOUR. When will you begin the issue of these new uniforms? Will it be in 1930?

General BRIDGES. No, sir; we will buy the cloth and put it on the shelf, and then we will begin to cut it up when we get the money in future years to carry out entire project. We can not cut up the cloth that we will get with the funds appropriated this year, because then we would give a portion of the students in the institutions good uniforms, while others would not get them. That would cause dissatisfaction and would kill morale at once. We want to make a fair showing and give everybody a fair whack at it. The only way we can do that, according to the method we are following, is to buy the cloth, put it on the shelf, and when we get sufficient funds in future years, make it into clothing. We do that after we have done what we are required to do by the law.

On the next page the general says:

Finally, we will have enough money, or $1,000,000 or more, with which to uniform these students properly. By September, 1932, with the same appropriations, we expect that the Reserve Officers' Training Corps units will be properly uniformed.

So to-day we are starting on a million-dollar expenditure to put this cloth on the shelves?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; we are starting a million-dollar expenditure, and will put this cloth on the shelves, but instead of doing it all at once we are proposing to do it over a period of three years.

Mr. HUDSON. I do not see the wisdom of buying the cloth and laying it on the shelf.

Mr. BARBOUR. Of course they will not buy it and put it up on the shelves where the moths will get it. If they do buy it, they will keep it and store it in such a way that it will not be damaged.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to disagree with my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] on this proposition. His views are entitled to great weight. But, everybody is opposed to anything like compulsory military training in time of peace and this country is fully committed to the draft system in time of war. I think it is only fair to extend to the young men whom we are likely to call into the service in time of emergency every possible opportunity to be prepared for that service. We will call our young men into the service if there is ever an emergency; we ought not to find ourselves in the same position we were in when the great war broke out, when our young men were utterly unprepared to enter the service. We do not intend to compel them to render any military service in time of peace but we ought to extend to them every invitation to take military training if they think it advisable, and that is due to them. We ought not to do anything that will in any wise abridge the opportunity for the young men to obtain the military training they ought to have.

Our Constitution declares against great standing armies as inimical to liberty, and it suggests as a substitute therefor a well-trained militia. It is to secure a well-trained militia that such an appropriation as this is made.

As interfering with these views, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi. [Applause.]

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I heartily concur with what the gentleman from Virginia has said. I had some experience during the late war. Our regiment received on the 12th day of September, 1918, 2,500 men from the valleys and hills of Tennessee. Some of those men had never been away from home before. On the 23d day of September, 12 days after they came into the regiment, we were on our way to France. We had a regiment of young men who knew absolutely nothing about the art of war or taking care of themselves. I sincerely hope we may never have a condition like that—in respect to the use of young men wholly unprepared for service—arise in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLLINS) there were—ayes 19, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CITIZENS' MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS

For furnishing, at the expense of the United States, to warrant officers, enlisted men, and civilians attending training camps maintained under the provisions of section 47d of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920 (U. S. C. 185, sec. 442), uniforms, including altering, fitting, washing, and cleaning when necessary, subsistence, and transportation, or in lieu of such transportation and of subsistence for travel to and from camps travel allowances at 5 cents per mile, as prescribed in said section 47d; for such expenditures as are authorized by said section 47d as may be necessary for the establishment and maintenance of said camps, including recruiting and advertising therefor, and the cost of maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles; for reimbursement for the use, including upkeep and depreciation costs, of supplies, equipment, and matériel furnished in accordance with law from stocks under the control of the War Department; for gymnasium and athletic supplies (not exceeding $15,000); for mileage, reimbursement of traveling expenses, or allowance in lieu thereof as authorized by law, for officers of the Regular Army and Organized Reserves, traveling on duty in connection with citizens' military training camps; for purchase of training manuals, including Government publications and blank forms; for medical and hospital treatment, subsistence until furnished transportation, and when fit for travel, travel allowances at 5 cents per mile to their homes of members of the citizens' military training camps injured in line of duty while attending camps of instruction under the provisions of section 47a and section 47d of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916 (U. S. C. 185, secs. 441, 442), as amended, and for the cost of preparation and transportation to their homes and burial expenses of the remains of civilians who die while attending camps of instruction, as provided in section 4 of the act approved June 3, 1924 (43 Stat. 365); in all, $2,742,158: Provided, That the funds herein appropriated shall not be used for the training of any person in the first year, or lowest course, who shall have reached his twenty-fourth birthday before the date of enrollment: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated elsewhere in this act except for printing and binding and for pay and allowances of officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army shall be used for expenses in connection with citizens' military training camps: Provided further, That uniforms and other equipment or matériel furnished in accordance with law for use at citizens' military training camps shall be furnished from surplus or reserve stocks of the War Department without payment from this appropriation, except for actual expense incurred in the manufacture or issue: Provided further, That in no case shall the amount paid from this appropriation for uniforms, equipment, or matériel furnished in accordance with law for use at citizens' military training camps from stocks under control of the War Department be in excess of the price current at the time the issue is made.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 62, line 20, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Providing further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the purpose of employment of hostesses for the citizens' military training camps."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the committee will accept my amendment, I will not take any time in explaining it. This is a bill to provide appropriations for the Military Establishment of the United States. A great deal has been said by the sponsors of the military training camps and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps about the good work they are doing in giving these young men military training. A great deal has been said about the rations, the accommodations, travel, and mileage, but I have yet to hear any justification for the employment of hostesses. I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from New York is not here now, because in the old days we did not have hostesses at military training camps. My distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. TABER], who spent one day in camp, perhaps is in a position to tell us something about the services rendered by these charming hostesses.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. I suggested before the committee that instead of employing hostesses we use military intelligence officers, these military attachés, as hostesses.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, perhaps they could not stand the rigor and severity of a military camp. This provision for hostesses, I believe, has been somewhat overdone. I suppose when we go through the streets of our large cities we will see recruiting posters featuring hostesses as one of the advantages and attractions of military service.

Why, the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] who now occupies the chair is an old National Guard man, and I am sure he did not have hostesses in his camp when he was in the service. I do not believe this bill ought to be burdened with such a provision and have the whole purpose of military training put in a position of ridicule by the establishment of the so-called social atmosphere at camps. Gentlemen, there is nothing like social atmosphere in war time. It is a grim, nasty piece of business.

We have organizations of women—the Red Cross, the Salvation Army, and the Young Women's Christian Association—who do good and necessary work in war time, and you do not find any of these women seeking to encourage this system of hostesses, 5 o'clock teas, cotillions, and the establishment of social atmosphere at military training camps. The whole proposition is preposterous and simply ridiculous, and it should not be continued.

Last year we had a discussion of this subject, and the committee said they would look into it, and yet we find there is something like $3,750 carried here for the purpose of giving these boys a proper social atmosphere. Social atmosphere and bayonet drills do not intermingle at all.

I am sure that the distinguished gentleman from New York, who is one of the greatest authorities on military affairs in this House, will not approve of hostesses at military camps.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I think that hostesses have had a very salutary effect both in the Regular Army camps and in the other camps. There have been some very noble and devoted women in that work and they have contributed very much to improve the morale and to keep up the spirits of these young men serving in the uttermost parts of the world, in China and in the Philippines.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We are not talking about that. We are talking about the military training camps.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. But the gentleman was making a reflection generally upon the hostess service of the Army.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I was talking about the social atmosphere.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. That I know nothing about.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I knew the gentleman would not agree with that.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I took the gentleman's remarks as a reflection upon the hostess service of the Regular Army generally.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I was talking about the hostesses at the two weeks' vacation training camps.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York gives a rather exaggerated picture of the duties of hostesses at the citizens' military training camps. They are not there for the purpose of lending social atmosphere to the camps or anything of that kind. There are only 30 of them all together at these citizens' military training camps. They are employed for one month, and they receive, I believe, an average of $125 a month, so that the total carried in this bill for hostesses is only $3,750.

These hostesses serve a very useful purpose at the citizens' military training camps. The boys who go to the camps range in age from about 17 up to 22 or 23, and in the advanced courses higher. Many of them are very young men, and while they are at camp their mothers and families like to go there and visit them. If you have ever attended one of these camps you have seen many parents visiting their boys. If a mother should come to a camp for the purpose of visiting her boy, it would be the duty of a hostess to get in contact with the mother, help find the boy, bring them together, and in other ways serve a useful purpose. There are many duties that the hostesses perform.

Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment ought to be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under the authorizations contained in this act no issues of reserve supplies or equipment shall be made where such issues would impair the reserves held by the War Department for two field armies or 1,000,000 men.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying something that is not apropos of the particular matter under discussion here, but for the purpose of calling the attention of the Congress and the War Department and particularly the country, to the fact that the desertion condition in the Regular Army is something appalling.

I asked The Adjutant General to compile the statistics. Commencing with July 1, 1919, which was the conclusion of the war period, up to date, covering nine years, the aggregate was 111,756. Of this number 43,975 were returned to military service; that is, they were apprehended, returned, and were tried, either by summary or general court-martial, and were returned to military authority. This leaves about 67,781 men in the United States who now have placed opposite their names the stigma of desertion, and it will remain there forever unless removed by a special act of Congress.

Gentlemen, the situation is fundamentally wrong, when an average of 12,000 men a year out of a total enlisted personnel of a little over 100,000 on the average, leaves the service under conditions that constitute desertion.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield there?

M. McSWAIN. Certainly.

Mr. TABER. Last year the desertions were 5.87 per cent, and on an army of 118,500 that would figure approximately 6,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Which is only about two regiments.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; for the year ending June 30, 1928, the last figures available, the desertions were 10,467 in number, according to the letter of The Adjutant General dated January 9, 1929, which I have before me. This is the total number. There were returned to the service out of that number, 5,282, so that the net desertions of men still at large, who will perhaps remain forever at large, is something like 5,000 men.

Now, here is the point I make. I call this to the attention of the authorities of the War Department in the hope they might devise some system whereby such a condition may be discontinued.

The causes are manifold. I have no time or disposition now to go into a discussion of these causes. The ordinary military mind assumes that the prevention of this condition is more extreme rigor in apprehending and punishing. I submit this is not true, from the point of view of the American citizen.

In general, I submit that the regular Army establishment with regard to its personnel ought to be so worked out that men would seek the service as an honor, and being in the service would regard leaving it under any circumstances, other than honorable circumstances as worse than death itself, because in time of war the right-minded man would much rather be a corpse than a deserter.

This is a psychological condition; it is a condition of mind and of heart; of motive in entering the service or lack of motive to continue in the service which explains this condition, and I think those in authority are due the manhood of America to come in here with some program of solution.

It can largely be regulated, in my judgment, by orders without legislation, but unless something is done it is going to be up to this Congress to legislate, if possible, such a system and ideal into the service that this condition will not continue.

I get an average of one letter a week from some young man wanting a commission in the Army as a second lieutenant, and you could hardly kick out of the service any of the officers now in the service; but here is an average of 12,000 men a year from the enlisted personnel leaving under disgraceful conditions, with about one-half of them caught and tried under conditions that of themselves constitute a stigma upon their names, and the other one-half at large to-day, practically 68,000 men, who for the rest of their lives if they go upon the witness stand can have the finger of scorn pointed at them as being deserters from the United States Army.

This is a condition which I think discloses a situation that ought to be corrected. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 65, after line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the purchase of materials or supplies manufactured or assembled without the territorial limits of the United States, its Territories or possessions, except (1) supplies or materials purchased in foreign countries for use locally; (2) patented articles or models and devices purchased in foreign countries for experimental and research purposes; (3) foreign aircraft, parts, and accessories as authorized by the act of July 2, 1926 (U. S. C. 1904–1905, sec. 310–k); and (4) supplies and materials not produced or manufactured within the United States, its Territories and possessions; or such supplies and materials as are not produced therein in sufficient quantity to meet domestic requirements."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will not the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I gave notice about a week ago that I would offer an amendment to the end that our Government should purchase its supplies within the defense of our guns.

At a meeting held in New England recently there was a strong, favorable sentiment expressed in response to a speaker who criticized Congress in the matter. I have looked over the bills offered by others—one by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]—giving preference of 10 per cent to home manufacturers, and the argument of the War Department that this would be tariff revision in an unusual form. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has a bill in which be attempts to assist only by adding to present law the words "including duty." But these do not accomplish the end desired.

These two suggestions may be of some value. I am explaining this amendment to give the Chair time to decide whether or not the point of order holds against my amendment. From those whom we depend upon to give information as to parliamentary matters I learn that it is not subject to a point of order in the form now offered. Certainly, I hope there are others besides myself who will conclude to favor this proposition and let our people know that we do believe that these goods ought to be bought within the defense of our guns. Some items we do not ask to have included. First, supply of materials purchased in foreign countries for use locally.

We do not ask for foreign aircraft parts and the like as now expressly mentioned in the law. We do not ask for materials purchased or manufactured in the United States or its Territories or possessions. For instance, rope made in the Philippines to be used in the United States. All attempts to get a law of this kind have met with evasive answers from the War Department, suggesting that somewhere at some time it might cost the Government more and denying that there is need for legislation, as they claim they bought but little of foreign-made goods.

I quoted a case wherein I got the information from the Department of Commerce, where a little saving in a large order affecting my section of the country ended in a ridiculously small amount as compared to benefits of wages and other things to our own people, and I think it is time that the War Department and the Navy Department are willing to conform to some legislation. Let me quote from the Cramton bill; it is very short:

In the making of contracts to be performed in the United States, its Territories and possessions, preference shall be given to articles or materials of domestic production, conditions of quality and price, including duty, being equal. The term "articles" means that which is assembled or manufactured.

That is all that is. It is the same old provision that has formerly been in military appropriation bills, up to last year. Are there not others here who believe that materials ought to be purchased within the boundaries of our country or its possessions?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Can the gentleman give the House any estimate at all of how much foreign-purchased materials there are that would fall without these exceptions?

Mr. GIFFORD. I have tried to get it from the War Department and they simply say very little is purchased abroad. The Department of Commerce is trying to get it for me and did get for me in one instance the particular thing that I spoke of recently, but if they do not make such purchases what is the harm of having this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California state to the chair what the offending portions of the amendment are?

Mr. BARBOUR. I think all of it is offending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will observe that it is in the form of a limitation.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is in the form of a limitation, and yet I understand that the whole purpose of it is to change existing law. There is a bill pending before Congress at the present time, a legislative measure, that will do the very thing that this amendment proposes to do. It does come in, it is true, in the guise of a limitation. As I understand the rule in regard to a limitation it must not change existing law, simply in the guise of a limitation, and that is exactly what this amendment proposes to do.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Is not the gentleman in error on the limitation matter? Isn't it almost essential that if you change existing law it must reduce the expenses?

Mr. BARBOUR. It is suggested that there is nothing on the face of this amendment which shows that it will reduce expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not offered, as the Chair understands it, under the Holman rule; but it is offered as a limitation, it being well understood that Congress may appropriate for anything authorized by law and that Congress may refuse to appropriate for many things that are authorized by law.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the objection raised by the gentleman from California, I suggest that under existing law an officer can purchase anywhere he sees fit; but this amendment provides a change in that rule and the discretion of an officer is done away with.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I suggest this thought. I do not believe anybody opposes the proposition that Congress can restrict the expenditure of its money to any particular place or item that it wants to in an appropriation bill. Is not that all that it does in this amendment? It merely says that it can not be expended outside the territory of the United States. There is nothing in that that violates the rule. It seems to clearly fall within the rule.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have this observation to make to the Chair. I realize that this is a close point: Congress, of course, has the power to limit the application of an appropriation bill. On the other hand, it has been held by numerous occupants of the chair that that limitation must not go further than a limitation and changes a discretion that was vested in an executive officer by law. It occurs to me that this amendment which is now offered would interfere with the discretion; the Secretary of War now has to purchase these articles wherever he can get the most appropriate articles at the most appropriate price, and I doubt if it is within the rule on that account.

The CHAIRMAN. Would not Congress have a right to refuse to appropriate for any purpose that is authorized by law?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Undoubtedly Congress has the right; but having appropriated, then it is the duty under the law of the Secretary of War to spend that money as now provided by law, to wit, wherever he can get the most appropriate article at the most appropriate price. This limitation undertakes to tell him that he must confine himself to continental United States in the purchase of that article, and it seems to me that it would be limiting his discretion, putting definite limitations around it.

The CHAIRMAN. Would not Congress have the right to refuse to appropriate for any foreign-made goods?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. There is nothing in the language of the bill that says that it shall be purchased either here or abroad. Of course Congress would have the right to refuse to appropriate for any purpose that the law has designated. The Committee on Appropriations, which is an appropriating committee only and not a legislative committee, has brought in an appropriation in which the Secretary of War is directed under the general law to expend in a certain way, to wit, wherever you can get those articles at the most appropriate price and of the most appropriate quality.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am asking purely for information, but is it not the present law that the Secretary of War or whoever does this must purchase in the market where he can get the best price, all other things being equal?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I think that is the law. I think he is compelled to do it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If it is the law that he must do it—and he must go into the world markets, if the world market offers a better price—then it is a limitation of discretion and an actual change of existing law.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Let me say to the gentleman from Tennessee, the law, as I understand it, as to most purchases compels an advertisement and, of course, anyone who can deliver the goods, whether he be a foreign producer or a domestic producer, can submit his offer, and if that offer is the best offer, if it is a foreign producer, under the law the Secretary would have to accept his bid.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. Under the law the Secretary must pay the members of the Infantry of the Regular Army, must he not?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman contend that under the rule we could put a proviso on this appropriation to the effect that no part of it should be used to pay the Infantry?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Here is the point I make: Under the present law, if the Secretary of War, for example, is to buy a certain number of uniforms, he must advertise and set out the specifications and invite bids.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee this. I can not recall the exact wording clearly enough to state it, but what is the law regarding repairs of ships in a foreign port?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am not able to answer that.

Mr. BEGG. Is there not a decided limitation as to how much they can repair in a foreign port? I understand that is the law now. That partially answers the question that the gentleman raises.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me a moment?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In the Manual, section 825–A, I find this:

> An amendment to an appropriation bill, providing that in the purchase of materials for public purposes preference shall be given to domestic products, was held out of order as being a change of law, and not a mere limitation of the expenditure of the funds appropriated.

That is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 2, Fifty-second Congress, page 1020. That seems to be exactly in point.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit just this thought to the Chair: This amendment, instead of showing on its face that it will reduce expenditures, seems to me to imply that expenditure may be increased by preventing purchasing officials from going out into the open market and buying wherever they can buy cheapest, and compelling them to buy only domestic goods.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Michigan will permit, the Holman rule is not involved in the point of order. Whether or not under the guise of limitation it is in fact legislation is the question. The question raised by the gentleman from Tennessee is whether the purposes stated in the amendment are authorized by law. The Chair asked the chairman of the subcommittee whether all the purposes specified in this amendment are now authorized by law, but the Chair has not been shown what the law is on these several points. Therefore it is difficult to determine whether the proposed amendment under the guise of a limitation changes the law. The amendment in regard to foreign aircraft recites the law, that after July 2, 1926, and so forth. Reference is made to the United States Code, 1904–5.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, that is simply referring to one of the exceptions. I will read a section of the law.

> Section 3716, Revised Statutes:
> "The Quartermaster (Corps) of the Army, in obtaining supplies for the military service, shall state in all advertisements for bids for contracts that a preference shall be given to articles of domestic production and manufacture, conditions of price and quality being equal, and that such preference shall be given to articles of American production and manufacture produced on the Pacific coast, to the extent of the consumption required by the public service there."

Mr. Chairman, this is simply another limitation as to the discretion to be used by the War Department and the Army. It is perfectly in line with the others, and I am informed by those with whom I have talked that it does not, of course, come under the Holman rule, but it is a limitation on the discretion of the Quartermaster General of the Army.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, this question occurs to me as bearing on the point of order, whether this imposes an additional duty or burden on the administrative officer. It provides, if I heard the reading of it correctly, that he shall not purchase articles manufactured or assembled outside of the United States. Of course, that would impose on the Secretary the duty of determining whether they were so manufactured outside of the United States. A question to be determined is, Would that be such a duty or new burden as would take it outside the rule? To that I have not given any thought.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, on page 365 of the House Manual we find this proposition laid down:

> Propositions to establish affirmative direction for executive officers (IV, 3854–3859), even in cases where they may have discretion under the law so to do (IV, 3853), or to take away an authority or discretion conferred by law (IV, 3862, 3863), are subject to the point of order.

It seems that the proposed amendment would clearly take from the Secretary of War the authority to buy a product overseas, and therefore it seems it would clearly be subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit this further thought. The gentleman from Massachusetts read the general law. Now, let us say that the Army is in need of 100 machine guns of a certain specification. Under the law the Secretary of War would be required to give preference to an American manufacturer who submitted an offer of an equal price and equal quality. He is required to do that by law. If we adopt this amendment, other than as to the exceptions set out in the amendment, he would have no authority to make any foreign purchases at all, which would change the existing law that now governs the quartermaster.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. The amendment provides for patented articles, or models and devices purchased in foreign countries for experimental and research purposes. The gentleman thinks that is not sufficient?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I just make this point, that under the present law Congress has deemed it right to require the Secretary of War to give preference to American manufacturers where they are fair in their prices and have the necessary quality, but if the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is adopted, aside from the exceptions enumerated in his amendment, the Secretary of War would have no right to make any purchases at all from foreign countries, regardless of price or quality.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the Chair will permit, I would like to make one suggestion in connection with the statement made by the gentleman from Texas. If the quartermaster advertised for a certain number of rifles, he would be compelled under this amendment to purchase those rifles from an American manufacturer who might bid 10 per cent higher than the price asked by a foreign manufacturer, whereas the present law provides that an American manufacturer shall be given preference provided his prices are the same and the quality is the same, but under this amendment he would be required to give the order to the American manufacturer, notwithstanding the fact that his bid might be 10 per cent higher than the foreign bid. It seems to me that is the logical conclusion to come to.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina refer to the law which this amendment will violate?

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, I was just citing the law as it was stated here without challenge, that he is required to give preference to American-manufactured goods wherever they are not of higher price than others and are of equal quality—the two bids being equal, the American manufacturer is given preference. But if this amendment is adopted he can not purchase from a foreign manufacturer, but the preference must be given to the American manufacturer, even though his price may be 10 per cent higher than the foreign price. I may have misunderstood the law, but that is the law as I understood them to read it.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I think the act of March 2, 1901, is possibly the act the chairman has been asking for.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman give the citation?

Mr. BARBOUR. It is the act of March 2, 1901, chapter 803, Thirty-first Statutes, 905, and it is page 214 of the code, section 1201. This act provides:

> That hereafter, except in cases of emergency or where it is impracticable to secure competition, the purchase of all supplies for the use of the various departments, and posts of the Army, and of the branches of the Army service, shall only be made after advertising, and shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation and the interests of the Government considered.

There is nothing in this amendment which says anything about quality or cost to the Government.

Mr. STEVENSON. Nor emergency either.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's contention is that under the provisions of this amendment, the quartermaster would be compelled to purchase domestic goods regardless of the price or the quality, which of itself would be a violation of the statute already in existence.

Mr. BARBOUR. And as pointed out by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] nothing appears on the face of this amendment to indicate that it is a limitation or that it will limit this appropriation or the expenditure of it. The fact of the matter is, the indication is that it will cost more.

The CHAIRMAN. It is clearly a limitation in form.

Mr. BARBOUR. In form only.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment provides that:

No appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the purchase of materials or supplies manufactured or assembled without the territorial limits of the United States, its Territories, or possessions.

It is in form a limitation. The Chair has been asking gentlemen to cite the law that this would change, and the gentleman from California has just cited one instance where it is provided that the quality, price, and so forth, of the goods shall be taken into account.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, may I read from the House Manual, at the bottom of page 503?

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the section or the page?

Mr. DOWELL. It is section 958.

A limitation must not give affirmative directions, must not impose new duties, and must not be accompanied by language not directly limiting the appropriation.

In this instance, it seems to me, this amendment clearly goes beyond that. I am in sympathy with this amendment, but I think we ought to keep within the rules and have the matter brought before the House in a different form. This is clearly a change in the law and as it is written would be in conflict with the rules of the House.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the Chair hear me further on the ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair is having some citations looked up.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. In this connection I want to say to the Chair that the chairman who made the ruling which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] has called to the attention of the present occupant of the chair said in his opinion:

The Chair at the outset thanks the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], an authority on parliamentary procedure, for his able argument and clear presentation of the case, both of which fortify the conclusions reached by the Chair.

This was stated by the Chair in connection with the decision which the gentleman from Iowa has called to the attention of the present occupant of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee cited paragraph 825–a of the Manual:

An amendment to an appropriation bill providing that in the purchase of materials for public purposes preference should be given to domestic products, was held out of order as being a change of law and not a mere limitation of the expenditure of the fund appropriated.

This was ruled out of order, and as the Chair understands that was later made the law in a legislative bill, so that it is now required to give the domestic manufacturers the preference.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, where quality and price are the same.

The CHAIRMAN. When that provision was offered as an amendment to an appropriation bill it was held out of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was not then the law.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not then the law; and it was later made the law on a legislative bill. The Chair is more influenced by the argument made by the gentleman from California that this imposes new obligations or duties upon an executive officer.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the Chair permit me to make just one further remark? I agree with all that; but in my amendment we take off or subtract from his duties. He does not have to determine quality or price. There is less for him to determine than before, and it does not add anything.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is why it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] has given away the strongest point in his case. The gentleman makes the very point the Chair has been diligently searching for.

As a matter of fact, the amendment does seem to liberalize the law and, as the Chair sees it, the effect of the amendment offered in the form of a limitation would be to require on the part of executives of the Government something which would not be required of them if this were not passed. It therefore changes their duties and the law to that extent, and therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, is a change of existing law.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: Page 66, line 22, add as a separate paragraph the following:

"That there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $137,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary for the construction of a hard-surfaced road through the Fort Sill (Okla.) Military Reservation beginning at the site of the fort and running to the reservation limit on the north, being a part of one of the public thoroughfares of the States running from Fort Sill to Apache, Okla., to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. JAMES. I will reserve it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have asked my friend the distinguished chairman to reserve the point of order against my amendment, in order to explain to the members of the committee the vital importance and the pressing need of this item.

The committee is probably aware of the fact that in the Sixty-ninth Congress the Senate passed this very item in a special bill authorizing $137,000 for the purpose of paving this road through the Fort Sill Military Reservation. The Senate passed this bill, gentlemen, after a favorable report from the War Department had been made, and with your permission I should like to read into the RECORD at this time the report of the Senate Military Affairs Committee. It was made by Mr. TYSON, chairman of the committee, or possibly acting chairman.

Mr. JAMES. What year was that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That was in the Sixty-ninth Congress, two years ago.

Mr. JAMES. Senator Wadsworth was chairman of the committee in that Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am not sure about that, but here is the record of the report of the Military Affairs Committee, which I should like to read [reading]:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3614) authorizing an appropriation for the construction of a hard-surfaced road across Fort Sill (Okla.) Military Reservation, having considered the same reports thereon favorably with the recommendation that it pass.

Appended hereto and made a part of this report is a letter from the War Department over the signature of Hon. Dwight F. Davis, the Secretary of War, under date of December 13, 1926, addressed to Hon. James W. Wadsworth, jr., chairman of the United States Senate Military Affairs Committee.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1926.

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr.,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR WADSWORTH: In compliance with your request of March 23, 1926, I am pleased to submit the following report on bill S. 3614, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, dated March 15 (calendar day March 18), 1926.

This bill, which authorizes an appropriation of $137,000 for the construction of a hard-surfaced road across the Fort Sill Military Reservation, has been carefully studied, and is satisfactory to the War Department.

There is no existing law relating to this matter.

This road connects at each end with one of the most traveled north and south highways of the country, and is necessary to give a safe and satisfactory route across the reservation for the use of the general public.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has been consulted and advises that this proposed legislation is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

I now want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the War Department, over the signature of Hon. Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War, states that the bill has been "carefully studied and satisfactory to the War Department." The report also states that it connects at each end with "one of the most traveled north and south highways of the country, and is necessary to give a safe and satisfactory road across the reservation for the use of the general public. Two years ago this proposed legislation was not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

The report might have added also that this is the only road across this military reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would like to impress, if I can, upon members of the committee that this road is of extreme military value and that it is the only road across this reservation.

The present temporary road was laid out by the State and local authorities with the approval of the military officers at Fort Sill. I am advised that those officials in charge at Fort Sill feel that the immediate building of this road is of vital importance from a military standpoint. The temporary road recently built across the reservation, to which I have referred, is across lowlands, making is extremely difficult to travel through the Fort Sill Military Reservation during rainy weather when the roads are muddy. I have personally been over the road and know it to be almost impassable during the rainy seasons.

The road in question parallels the Rock Island Railroad, and is the only outlet north from the military reservation.

May I say further that the State of Oklahoma is spending millions of dollars on this and other highways; that this is a Federal highway and connects the north and the south highways of the entire country. Several counties on each side of the reservation north and south, east and west, have voted bonds and are building this highway up to the Fort Sill Reservation on either side. If the Federal Government does not make sufficient appropriations to pave this road across the military reservation, then in a comparatively short while it will be the only gap in this great highway. Such a condition will seriously impair the usefulness of this Federal highway and greatly discommode the traveling public on one of our great arteries of traffic.

I believe it is the duty of this Government to build a substantial road through our military reservations. I have received many telegrams and letters urging that this item be included as a real necessity. I realize full well that a recent report of the War Department states that the road is of little or no military value. Except for that report my special bill making the authorization would have been passed before now. But might I again remind you that the report on this identical measure only a little over two years ago by the War Department was favorable. Nowhere have I read a more favorable report. The Secretary of War goes further and says, over his signature, that this appropriation is a necessity. I submit that there has been no change in the situation at this military reservation since this report of Secretary Davis, who declares he studied the bill. If it was necessary two years ago, it is even more necessary today. May I call attention to the further fact that in case of armed conflict or hostilities, which we hope and pray may not soon occur, that it would be extremely difficult for Army trucks or other vehicles to get out of Fort Sill, especially in rainy seasons, because of the low and somewhat swampy land through which the road traverses. In addition to all the foregoing reasons I might say that this road when hard surfaced will add from 1,200 to 1,500 acres to the range for firing of the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill. This I am sure you will agree is of great importance so far as the military value of the road is concerned.

I thank the gentleman from Michigan for reserving the point of order, and may I express the hope the gentleman will now withdraw it and permit this item for the construction of a road through the Fort Sill Military Reservation to be adopted.

Under the permission granted me I desire to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this time a letter received by me from Hon. Henry W. Leininger, chairman of the State Highway Commission of Oklahoma. Mr. Leininger's letter is to the point and points out clearly, I think, the necessity for the passage of this item.

Hon. JED JOHNSON,
Congressman, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The State Highway Commission of Oklahoma respectfully requests your earnest support in having an appropriation made for the construction of a hard-surface road north and south through the Fort Sill Military Reservation.

You are probably aware of the deplorable condition this road has been in for the past two years, and also the fact that on account of the game and forest reserve being connected on the west to the military reservation, that all traffic for 30 miles east and west has to pass over this road.

In order to relieve the situation to some extent the highway commission and the Comanche County Commissioners donated during the past year machinery, labor, etc., to open a new route designated by the officers of Fort Sill so that traffic could cross temporarily.

While Fort Sill officers express a desire to help in any way possible they say that they have no funds to aid in any road work on the reservation.

We understand that steel for a bridge across Medicine Creek is on the reservation. Why not get this placed and the road constructed during next summer?

The county commissioners and the highway commission are both building their roads on each side of the reservation and it certainly looks bad for the United States Government to have these roads in almost impassable condition.

Trusting that you will be able to grant us relief, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION,
H. W. LEININGER, Chairman.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is clearly legislation, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

For continuing the establishment of the park; compensation and expenses of the superintendent, maps, surveys, clerical and other assistance; maintenance, repair, and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; maintenance, repair, and operation of one horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle; office and all other necessary expenses; foundations for State monuments; mowing; historical tablets, iron and bronze; iron gun carriages; roads and their maintenance, including posts and guard rails on highways, $54,000.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 69, line 13, after the word "ways" strike out the figures "$54,000" and insert "$59,500."

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation has been carried for $60,000, but during the last session of Congress there was a bill passed providing for the taking over of certain roads of this park under certain conditions by the States of Tennessee and Georgia, and for that reason a deduction was made. Since that time it has become manifest that the roads in Georgia are not going to be taken over, and so the Secretary of War and the President has recommended $5,500 additional, which makes $59,500, the amount of my amendment.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman says the roads will not be taken over. It is hoped by everyone that the roads will be taken over, but there is no assurance that they will be taken over during the next fiscal year. On the supposition that the roads would be taken over, the estimates and appropriations were reduced; but, as they have not been taken over, an additional estimate was submitted, which has the approval of the Budget and has been transmitted to the House by special message and has the approval of the President, and I suppose will receive the approval of gentlemen in charge of the bill.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I did not mean that the roads would not be taken over eventually, but I meant during the next fiscal year.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. Can the gentleman give the House any information as to whether the roads will be taken over, and if so, when?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I do not know.

Mr. BARBOUR. My understanding is that the State of Tennessee has agreed to take over its part.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is true. And $500 has been taken off for its upkeep.

Mr. BARBOUR. But the State of Georgia has not agreed to take over its part.

Mr. TARVER. The State of Georgia is not in a position to take over the roads lying in Georgia on account of a decision of the supreme court of that State recently rendered, to the effect that the highway commission of the State had already taken over on the part of the State highway system all the mileage it was authorized to do by law. Therefore in the absence of additional legislation on the part of the State of Georgia the State can not take over its part of the road.

Mr. BARBOUR. It will take an act of the legislature to authorize it?

Mr. TARVER. It will.

Mr. BARBOUR. When does the gentleman expect the legislation will be had?

Mr. TARVER. The next session of the legislature is on the fourth Wednesday in June of the present year, but whether or not the legislation can be had then is a problem.

Mr. BARBOUR. There will be an opportunity for legislation before the next fiscal year 1931?

Mr. TARVER. Yes; there will be an opportunity for securing legislation.

Mr. BARBOUR. The War Department stated that the reason it did not ask for this amount of money was that the roads were to be taken over by Tennessee and Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Yes; they were under that impression, but they have been informed to the contrary.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. We now have the recommendation of the Secretary of War, the Budget Department, and a message from the President, recommending this addition of $5,500.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is supported by a Budget estimate, and the committee has no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to make an inquiry about a paragraph on the page which has just been read, the disposition of the remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees. I make the inquiry for information. Does that apply entirely to the Regular Army and the members of the Regular Army, and could the chairman of the committee inform me whether there is any appropriation to take care of the bodies of former soldiers in the World War, for instance, who died in poverty? Let me explain myself a little more clearly, and I think it will be of interest to the Members of the House. Here is a heading in the Washington paper of a few days ago: Lost Battalion Hero Buried in Potter's Field. It is inconceivable to us to think that a man who belonged to the lost battalion should be taken off and buried practically as an unknown in potter's field in New York City.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, this provision in the bill would not include a case of that kind, but there is a provision of law that enables the payment of $100 for the funeral expenses of a veteran of the World War though I can not just now cite the gentleman to it definitely.

Mr. FISH. I hope the gentleman is correct. I know that the bodies of the veterans who are in hospitals and who die in veterans' hospitals are provided with a casket and certain clothing up to $100, but whether this applies to those out of hospitals I do not know.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; I have had cases of that kind with the Veterans' Bureau where a veteran of the World War had died, and I believe it applies also to the soldiers of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars.

Mr. MICHENER. The soldiers of any war.

Mr. FISH. Then this is a matter for the American Legion of New York City to take up and investigate.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. The amount is $107.

Mr. MICHENER. It is $100 for the burial, if he does not leave sufficient funds, and $7 for the flag.

Mr. FISH. And that is for the veterans of all wars?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. And there is another provision providing for headstones for the veterans of all wars.

Mr. FISH. Then it is not a matter for the Congress, but for the American Legion in New York City.

The Clerk read as follows:

MOORES CREEK NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

For continuing the establishment of a national military park at the battle field of Moores Creek, N. C., in accordance with the act entitled "An act to establish a national military park at the battle field of Moores Creek, N. C.," approved June 2, 1926 (U. S. C. 1937, sec. 422), $3,980.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation for the continuing the establishment of a national military park at the battle field of Moores Creek, N. C., while not very large, gives the War Department the opportunity to make further study for the permanent needs of this park.

It was the purpose and intention to have had the past year quite a celebration at this park and to have had appropriate exercises with Maj. Gen. B. F. Cheatham and others to have made addresses. The Daughters of the American Revolution would have taken part.

At that time it was the purpose to have removed the bodies of Mary Slocumb and her husband Col. Ezekiel Slocumb under military escort to be reinterred at the battle field. Mary Slocumb made an immortal ride horseback to the battle front and her husband took an important part in the battle.

It is the hope to have this celebration during the present year.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tomb of the Unknown Soldier: For payment of the cost of the accepted design, including all working drawings, for completing the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in the Arlington National Cemetery, as authorized by the public resolution approved July 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 914–915), $3,500.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 73, after the figures in line 12, add the following:

", and when an appropriation shall have been made therefor, there may be constructed, in accordance with detailed plans and estimates to be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of War, approaches and surroundings, approximately 480 feet by 220 feet, together with the necessary adjacent roadways, to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., all to be in harmony with design for the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier accepted by the Secretary of War and approved by the Arlington Cemetery Commission, the American Battle Monuments Commission, and the Fine Arts Commission."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is subject to a point of order if anyone should care to make it. The purpose of the amendment is this: An act has been passed by the Congress authorizing the expenditure of $50,000 for finishing the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Two thousand five hundred dollars of that has been appropriated, and $3,500 more is carried in this bill, to pay certain preliminary expenses, the cost of preparing the design, and the supervision of the work. We are told that the balance of $44,000 of the amount authorized will be sufficient to complete the tomb itself, but the plan worked out provides for a rather elaborate approach to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and there is nothing yet authorized in regard to that part of the plan. The Quartermaster Corps, in discussing the matter with our committee, stated that they would like to have authority to go ahead with the whole plan at one time, and rather than appropriate just $44,000 to complete the tomb itself we thought it would meet with the approval of Congress if we asked for this authorization so that the whole plan for the improvement and completion of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier would be authorized and the money could then follow along in the necessary amounts. That is the purpose of this amendment which, strictly speaking, is legislation and subject to a point of order if anyone desires to make it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman how much is authorized by his amendment?

Mr. BARBOUR. No amount is authorized. The Quartermaster General has stated to the committee that the best estimate that he could make would be about $350,000 additional; but he stated that he did not want the committee to take that as a definite estimate, because it might amount to more than that. That would be in the neighborhood of $400,000 all together, and possibly more.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose the amendment for beautifying the grounds and approaches to the Tomb of the Unknown American Soldier or to oppose the small appropriation for the proposed design for a new tomb. Personally, I am frank to state that I would have preferred a more simple design even than that which the committee is bringing before the House. I think if they had simply provided for a marble top on the existing tomb instead of the present concrete slab it might have been more dignified and suited the purpose better; but I do not want to place my judgment against that of the various commissions and committees that have passed on the proposed design for the tomb, a picture of which has been shown before the House. I understand the purpose of the amendment of the gentleman will involve $350,000, but, in my judgment, a mere matter of money should not be considered in this particular case.

The real reason why I rose here is to put on record—and I hope I shall be permitted sufficient time to do so—a statement in regard to the origin of the legislation that provided for bringing back the body of the unknown American soldier. A prominent member of the legion recently called my attention to the fact that the American Legion Monthly Magazine of November contained an article by John Thomas Taylor, who is the national legislative representative of the legion here in Washington, in which he wrote as follows:

> At this same session of Congress we had the necessary legislation enacted to bring back to America and bury at Arlington the body of the unknown soldier.

I wish to say there is practically no foundation for any such statement. The national convention of the American Legion never indorsed the proposition to bring back the unknown soldier. The bill was introduced by me when I first came to Congress in December, 1920. It was the only bill introduced in either branch of Congress providing for the return of a body of an unknown American soldier. The bill was signed by President Wilson; the last bill, I think, that he signed while he was in office. It was signed by him in the President's room adjoining the United States Senate on the morning of March 4, 1921.

It is unfortunate that such articles should be published and extravagant and reckless statements should be made by high officials of the American Legion, and for the sake of historical accuracy I rise to state that no national Legion convention had ever indorsed the proposal, and that Mr. Taylor's only contribution was a 2-minute speech at the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs upon my request. The main witnesses were Gen. John J. Pershing as the commander of the American Expeditionary Forces, and Maj. Gen. John A. Lejeune, representing the Marine Corps, and Maj. Gen. P. C. Harris, The Adjutant General of the Army.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does not this official take credit for a lot of other things that he does not do?

Mr. FISH. Yes. He takes credit for practically every piece of legislation that is adopted for the welfare of the veterans. The fact is that Members of the House who are also members of the American Legion introduce legislation and arrange for hearings thereon and secure the enactment of bills by both the House and Senate, whereupon Mr. Taylor assumes the credit. In many cases it is true that the Legion convention has indorsed certain propositions and might be justified in claiming some degree of credit, but even then the sponsor in the House or Senate should not be ignored.

In this case, however, the Legion never indorsed it because they had no opportunity. I think such reckless and exaggerated statements ought to be denied on the floor of the House for sake of historical accuracy.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from New York is a member of the Legion, and so is the gentleman from Wisconsin. Would it not be proper to state for the RECORD that the American Legion has sufficient sponsors in this House without requiring outside sponsors?

Mr. FISH. Yes; my colleague from New York reflects the general opinion of most of the Members of the House who happen to be veterans. I think it might be interesting to the Members of the House if I should place in the RECORD at this time a statement as to how the body of the unknown American soldier was chosen. A good many Members have asked me how the particular body of the unknown American was selected from the battle fields of France. He was chosen in this manner: Four bodies were taken from four separate American cemeteries in Europe and brought together at Chalons, France, where, under guard of general officers, a sergeant designated from the American army of occupation at Coblentz, walked into the room where the four identical caskets were and selected one by placing a few roses on it, which was closely guarded until interred in front of the Memorial Amphitheater at Arlington. That was pretty much the way in which the French chose their unknown soldier, except that they brought nine different bodies from nine sections of the battle front and conveyed them to a room in the citadel at Verdun, where they were guarded by general officers, in whose presence a noncommissioned officer, representing the rank and file of the French Army, came in and chose one of the caskets by putting roses on it. That casket was again put under special guard and was eventually buried under the Arc de Triomphe. The other eight caskets were buried in the citadel at Verdun. It is claimed that Gen. Maurice Maunoury, of the French Army, originated the idea of a memorial for the unknown dead of the World War.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. May I have two additional minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. It may also be interesting to know how some of the other unknown soldiers were chosen. In Italy they took bodies from a graveyard near the Adriatic Sea and after a night spent in prayer an Italian gold-star mother selected the casket by placing a white rose on it. The splendid sepulcher of Victor Emanuel in Rome was opened to receive the body of the unknown Italian warrior.

In choosing the unknown Belgian soldier a blind veteran was assigned the honor, while four veterans who had lost their left arms and four who had lost their right arms acted as pallbearers.

So much for the history regarding the selection of the bodies of the unknown soldiers in different nations. The French unknown soldier who is buried under the Arc de Triomphe in Paris has no other monument except the old arch that has been there for a hundred years or more. The unknown Englishman has no monument except Westminster Abbey, in which the tomb is located.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I understand there is a cenotaph to the unknown soldier in one of the principal streets of London.

Mr. FISH. Yes; but a cenotaph is different; it means a monument without a grave. I am not opposing the official design that has been chosen. If that design, however, had been some great big column, as was originally proposed in this House, I think I and the rest of the Members would have opposed it. But in this case they propose a beautiful tomb. My colleague from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] asked me if I spoke to-day to mention the figures on the proposed tomb, one representing Victory, one representing Peace, and the other a soldier, and he claims, I think with some justice, that the figure supposed to be a soldier does not resemble a soldier, and he hoped that some improvement can be made on that particular design before it is finally erected. In conclusion, I want the RECORD to show that Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota was the sponsor of the legislation granting the medal of honor to the American unknown soldier and to those of our allies during the World War. It is evidently necessary after eight years to place the facts in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for safekeeping from crass exaggeration and from ambitious or lurid imaginations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, the model of the proposed tomb was before the House during general debate on this bill. When the matter was under discussion at that time the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] suggested that possibly a person would have to draw somewhat on his imagination in regard to the figure of the American soldier. It had been stated to the committee by the representatives of the War Department that the three figures represented Peace, Victory, and the American soldier, but since that time we have received a communication from the Quartermaster Corps in which this statement is made—

> At the end of the tomb is a relief commemorative of the spirit of the Allies in the war. In the center of this panel Victory spreads her wings. On one side a male figure symbolizes Valor. On the other stands Peace, with her wreath to crown the devotion and sacrifice that went with courage to make the cause of righteousness triumphant.

So we are now informed that the figure which we were at first told represents the American soldier really represents Valor. I think with that statement some of the criticism of the gentleman from New York and others might not be so well taken.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, I have to confess that although I happen to be a member of one of the commissions that passed upon this matter I was not in a position at the time it was under discussion on the floor the other day to make a statement in regard to the one figure referred to. I may say that the Battle Monuments Commission, in passing upon this matter, passed upon it quite informally, but nevertheless very positively. It was the opinion of that commission, after comparing it with all the others, that this was so superior to all others that it ought to be the plan adopted. But, as I say, this action was taken informally.

The information which the gentleman has given to the House I have myself ascertained, and understand that to be the fact in regard to that figure. Of course, the House will understand that the exact lines of any of these figures on the model will not necessarily be followed in the preparation of the finished monument, the sculptor having the usual leeway in that matter.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am very glad to have that statement from the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Monument to William Rufus King: For every expenditure requisite for or incident to the payment of the cost of erecting at Clinton, Sampson County, N. C., a tablet or marker in commemoration of William Rufus King, former Vice President of the United States, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved May 23, 1928 (45 Stat. 719), $2,500.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to thank the committee and the Congress for passing this item. This commemorates a very great man, a former Member of Congress from my district, a man who has a long line of public service, and he was Vice President in Franklin Pierce's administration.

William Rufus King, lawyer, diplomat, Senator, and Vice President of the United States, was born April 7, 1786, in Sampson County, N. C., and is buried in Selma, Ala.; son of William and Margaret DeVane King, the former of Sampson County, N. C., who rendered important services to his country during the Revolutionary War; was a member of the convention which was called to adopt the Federal Constitution and was often a delegate from his county to the general assembly; grandson of (Woodson) King, of North Carolina; grandson of Drury and Lucy (Christian) Woodson. His early King ancestors came from the north of Ireland and settled on the James River in the colony of Virginia. He was educated in private schools, and graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1803. Afterwards he studied law in the office of William Duffy, of Fayetteville, N. C., and was admitted to the bar in 1805. Locating at Clinton, N. C., in his native county, he opened an office, and in 1808 was elected a member of the State legislature; was reelected, but resigned after his election as solicitor of the Wilmington district.

At the age of 24, in 1810, he was chosen to the United States Congress from North Carolina, continuing as a Member and supporting the measures of the Madison administration until 1816, when he was offered the position of secretary of legation to the American Embassy of St. Petersburg. He remained abroad for two years, traveling a great deal and being closely associated with William Pinkney, the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Russia. When he returned from abroad the Territory of Alabama was being organized, and he soon determined to locate in this section of the country.

He secured a residence and plantation near Cahaba, in Dallas County, Ala., and in 1819 was elected from this county as a delegate to the convention which formed the first constitution of that State. He was a member of the subcommittee which drafted that instrument.

When the first general assembly met he was chosen to the United States Senate and served from December 14, 1819, until April 15, 1844. During the latter year the relations of the United States with foreign powers had become very sensitive in consequence of the proposed annexation of Texas, and he was prevailed upon to accept the mission as minister to France, where he rendered extraordinary services to his country, and where he remained until 1846, when he was appointed by Governor Chapman to the seat in the United States Senate from Alabama left vacant by the resignation of Arthur P. Bagby. He was reelected, serving from July 1, 1848, to January, 1853, when he resigned, and was elected President pro tempore of the Senate May 5 and July 11, 1850, resigning as President pro tempore December 11, 1850.

He was nominated for the Vice Presidency on the ticket with Franklin Pierce in 1852, and was elected to this office by a large majority. While serving in the Senate he contracted tuberculosis, and in 1853 was forced to spend the winter in Cuba. By a privilege extended by special act of Congress he took the oath of office in Habana, Cuba, on March 4, 1853. As there was no improvement in his health, he returned to Alabama, arriving in Cahaba the day before his death. He was unmarried. His last residence, Cahaba.

When he died President Franklin Pierce said of him:

Since the adjournment of Congress the Vice President of the United States has passed from the scenes of earth without having entered upon the duties of the station to which he had been called by the voice of his countrymen. Having occupied, almost continuously, for more than 30 years, a seat in one or the other of the two Houses of Congress, and by his singular purity and wisdom secured unbounded confidence and universal respect. His failing health was watched by the Nation with painful solicitude. His loss to the country, under all the circumstances, has been justly regarded as irreparable.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation; for survey of northern and northwestern lakes, Lake of the Woods, and other boundary and connecting waters between the said lake and Lake Superior, Lake Champlain, and the natural navigable waters embraced in the navigation system of the New York canals, including all necessary expenses for preparing, correcting, extending printing, binding, and issuing charts and bulletins and of investigating lake levels with a view to their regulation; for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors, provided that no funds shall be expended for any preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate not authorized by law; and for the prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, for pay of inspectors, deputy inspectors, crews, and office force, and for maintenance of patrol fleet and expenses of office, $50,000,000.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of the capital stock of the Inland Waterways Corporation, authorized by section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress, as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes,'" approved May 29, 1928, $10,000,000, to remain available until expended': Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated $2,500,000 shall be available immediately, and of the balance not more than $1,500,000 shall be withdrawn from the Treasury during the fiscal year 1930, not more than $3,000,000 during the fiscal year 1931, and not more than $3,000,000 during the fiscal year 1932.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment. I want to get some information about this item.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment is in compliance with a Budget estimate that has been approved by the President and the Budget officer and sent to the Committee on Appropriations under date of January 9, 1929. This amendment provides for an appropriation of $10,000,000 in accordance with the act of Congress creating the Inland Waterways Corporation passed June 3, 1924, as amended by the act approved May 29, 1928, to purchase additional capital stock for the corporation. This money is to be used for the purchase of necessary new additional equipment and additional terminal developments for the Inland Waterways Corporation. Of this amount, two and a half million dollars is to be immediately available, and the further sum of one and a half million dollars available during the fiscal year 1930, which makes a total of $4,000,000 available during the coming year.

The necessity for this money being appropriated at this time is to provide the necessary additional equipment and additional terminal improvements for the corporation. The present facilities of the corporation are not sufficient to take care of the demand of the transportation offered at the present time. During the past operating season the facilities of the corporation were not able to handle the grain and other commodities that were offered for shipment. There is great need of some new terminal facilities at various points, and of more towboats and barges to take care of the transportation now being offered.

The operations of this corporation are now divided into three divisions of which the main artery of the system is the lower Mississippi. The upper Mississippi division extends from Minneapolis to St. Louis; the lower division extends from St. Louis to New Orleans; the third division, known as the Warrior, runs from New Orleans, via Mobile, to Birmingham. Owing to the different depths of water in the various divisions it has been necessary for the corporation to have boats built to meet conditions on each division. General Ashburn, who has charge of the Inland Waterways Corporation, has submitted tentative estimates for the necessary immediate appropriations, which are as follows:

Purchase of one additional towboat for the upper Mississippi division, with complete equipment	$200,000
Purchase of a shifting boat between Minneapolis and St. Paul, and a shuttle boat to run from St. Croix to Stillwater	100,000
Additional grain transfer facilities at St. Louis	50,000
Improvements at St. Louis terminal	75,000
Betterments at East St. Louis terminal	75,000
Conversion of a Shipping Board steamer to a wharf boat for Cairo	75,000
Purchase of thirty 2,000-ton or fifty 1,000-ton barges for the Mississippi River	2,500,000
Terminal developments at Mobile, Ala	50,000
Terminal developments at Holt, Ala	50,000
Terminal developments at Birmingport, Ala	50,000
Quarters for employees at Birmingport, Ala	50,000
For installation of a grain transfer at Helena, Ark., similar to installation at Cairo, Ill	75,000
Two modern towboats for the lower Mississippi	650,000
Total	4,000,000

During the calendar year 1928 the tonnage transported by the corporation was 1,871,843 tons. With this additional equipment it will be increased at least 50 per cent. There is now on the lower Mississippi a 9-foot channel extending from the mouth of the Illinois River to New Orleans, and there is being developed a 6-foot channel from the mouth of the Illinois River to Minneapolis and St. Paul. If this amendment is adopted, new towboats and additional barges will be constructed and ready for use as early as September, 1929, and in time to take care of increased grain shipments. If increased transportation facilities are made, it will be a great saving in freight rates to the people. The approximate saving in freight last year made by this corporation is estimated between two and three million dollars, and it is estimated that the saving made by the corporation to our people of the United States from the time it started up to the present year is between eight and nine million dollars. The average all-river rate is 80 per cent of the rail rate. With all its handicaps the corporation during the past year made a profit, and after deducting an allowance for depreciation of about $400,000 there was a net profit of over $384,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. As I understand, the amendment of the gentleman is in accord with the Budget estimate?

Mr. CLAGUE. Absolutely.

Mr. CRAMTON. And it provides an appropriation to be available in 1931 and 1932, which is intended particularly for the Illinois and the Missouri Rivers.

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a little unusual to make specific appropriations so far in advance; but as I understand, this is justified on the ground that communities to be affected directly by this transportation on the Missouri and the Illinois are in the meantime to provide certain facilities, and the reason for this advance appropriation is that they may have a definite understanding of what the Government proposes to do and may accordingly provide these facilities.

Mr. CLAGUE. That is correct.

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, suppose they do not provide the facilities that it is now contemplated they will provide, may we understand here definitely that the money, then, will not be used?

Mr. CLAGUE. That is correct; it will not be used.

Mr. CRAMTON. This money will be only used in 1931 and 1932, if the facilities now contemplated are provided by these communities?

Mr. CLAGUE. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAGUE. Just a minute more and then I will yield. I have stated that $4,000,000 will be available this coming year. This leaves a balance of $6,000,000. Three million dollars of this amount, as provided by the amendment, is to be available during the fiscal year 1931, and the balance of $3,000,000 is to be available during the fiscal year 1932. The $3,000,000 available during the fiscal year 1931 is to provide for necessary equipment for transportation on the Missouri River. It is expected that about December 1, 1931, the Missouri River project will be completed with a 6-foot channel from Kansas City to the mouth of the Missouri. It will be necessary to provide for additional new equipment on the Missouri to Kansas City; it will be necessary to provide for at least four new towboats at a total cost of about $1,200,000, and to build forty-five 1,000-ton barges at $40,000 each, making $1,800,000; a total in all of $3,000,000. The $3,000,000 available during the fiscal year 1932 is to provide for new and necessary equipment for use on the Illinois River, which would require at least four towboats to cost about $1,600,000, and at least thirty-five 1,000-ton barges at $40,000 each, making a total of $1,400,000; in all a total of $3,000,000. The reason for a higher cost of towboats on the Illinois than on the Missouri or upper Mississippi is due to the fact that the Illinois will have a 9-foot channel.

The terminal facilities on the Missouri River and on the Illinois River will be constructed by the various cities, and, as the work of completing the channels of these rivers is now being rapidly done by the Government, the cities along these rivers are now making provisions to start early work on their terminal facilities, and they wish to be assured that the Government will provide the necessary barge equipment to handle the freight as soon as these rivers are opened for navigation. As soon as these new channels are completed on the Missouri and the Illinois, and a 6-foot channel completed to Minneapolis and St. Paul, the new barges will be constructed of at least 1,000 tons, and some 2,000-ton barges will be completed for use on the Illinois and lower Mississippi.

Until the 6-foot channel is fully completed to the Twin Cities on the upper Mississippi it will be necessary to use 500-ton barges. This necessitates the freight being transferred at St. Louis to the larger barges at a cost of 25 cents to $1 per ton. As soon as the 6-foot channel is completed on the upper Mississippi and Missouri and the 9-foot channel on the Illinois, 1,000-ton barges can be used on the Missouri and upper Mississippi, and 1,000 or 2,000-ton barges used on the Illinois, and when these barges are loaded and arrive at St. Louis they can be towed by fast towboats direct to New Orleans. This will give much faster transportation and a lower freight rate.

In order to bring this corporation to a high state of efficiency it is the plan of the managing officers to standardize the equipment, make it, so far as possible, interchangeable, and while each division will be fully equipped, if the same is interchangeable it will make the system unified and be to the great advantage of the whole system, particularly so when there is a rush transportation on any particular part of the system. When the inland waterway system is complete goods will be shipped in and out of 42 States of the Union and the reduction in freight rates will be reflected in a saving to every shipper. The act creating the corporation provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission may make joint rates with railroad companies, and the managing officer of the corporation now believes that all railroad companies will cooperate without any order from the commission in making satisfactory joint rates.

Secretary of War Davis and General Ashburn, chairman of the Inland Waterways Corporation, have shown that a success can be made of inland waterway transportation. At this time I wish to express my appreciation of their work.

The adoption of this amendment providing for this increased appropriation will, in my opinion, within the next five years place the corporation on a satisfactory financial basis, and I am of the further opinion that within five years this corporation will mean a saving of at least $5,000,000 a year in freight charges.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1929.

HON. FRANK CLAGUE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CLAGUE: The request for the appropriation of $10,000,000 to purchase stock of the Inland Waterways Corporation, to be made available as provided for in the letter of the Director of the Budget and of the President, is designed to accomplish several objectives.

Four million dollars will become available during the present calendar year, which is designed to be distributed throughout the various divisions of the Inland Waterways Corporation to meet the immediate necessities of operating at our highest efficiency and realizing upon the money invested.

Six million dollars is to be set aside and not made available until it is necessary to begin operations upon the Missouri River and the Illinois River. We design at present to expend $3,000,000 upon the Missouri River and $3,000,000 upon the Illinois River when they are opened for navigation.

This would allow us to purchase approximately four large towboats and about thirty-five 1,000-ton barges for the Illinois and four large towboats for operation upon the Missouri River with between forty and forty-five 1,000-ton barges.

The towboats to be designed for the Illinois River will be capable of going through directly from Chicago to the Gulf and the towboats to be designed for the Missouri River will be capable of carrying 1,000-ton cargo barges as far south as Cairo, where they will be turned over to the high-powered towboats, which we now have, for further transportation to the South.

The present intention of the corporation in designing its boats, is to standardize the barges so that they may be susceptible of interchange with the main stem of the Mississippi directly to the Twin Cities of the North, and to Kansas City or to Chicago, as their services may be desired. We are working toward an interchange fleet which we have not been able to do before, because of the varying depths of the river upon which we have had to operate.

The statement submitted by me to the Director of the Budget, approved by the Secretary of War, called for the immediate expenditure of $3,350,000, as follows:

Purchase of 1 additional towboat for the upper Mississippi division, with complete equipment	$200,000
Purchase of a shifting boat between Minneapolis and St. Paul, and a shuttle boat to run from St. Croix to Stillwater	100,000
Additional grain transfer facilities at St. Louis	50,000
Improvements at St. Louis Terminal	75,000
Betterments at East St. Louis Terminal	75,000
Conversion of a Shipping Board steamer to a wharf boat for Cairo	75,000
Purchase of thirty 2,000-ton or fifty 1,000-ton barges for the Mississippi River	2,500,000
Terminal developments at Mobile, Ala	50,000
Terminal developments at Holt, Ala	50,000
Terminal developments at Birmingport, Ala	50,000
Quarters for employees at Birmingport, Ala	50,000
For installation of a grain transfer at Helena, Ark., similar to installation at Cairo, Ill	75,000
Total	3,350,000

The remaining $6,650,000 was originally intended by me to set aside $5,000,000 for the Illinois and Missouri Rivers and $1,650,000 for additional equipment of the present facilities as urgent demands necessitated. Later developments through conferences with the Secretary of War, the Budget, and representatives of the public led to the modification of the original plan so as to set aside a tentative total of $6,000,000 for the Missouri and Illinois Rivers and the utilization of $4,000,000 for expanding the present facilities, to be distributed throughout the three present divisions, upper Mississippi, lower Mississippi, and Warrior, to the best advantage of the operations as a whole. Studies are under way which indicate the possibility of designing and constructing barges which may hereafter be a standard type, capable of utilization on the main artery, the lower river, and the upper river, the Missouri, and the Illinois. If this can be developed—and it seems entirely probable that it can be—it will obviate the present necessity of transfer of cargo from the upper river fleet to the lower, an expensive but at present a necessary movement.

One of the prime reasons for asking that $3,000,000 should be made available during 1930, and an additional $3,000,000 during 1931, was to be sure that there would be sufficient funds left to inaugurate service upon the Missouri River in the early part of 1931 and service upon the Illinois River in 1932.

In order that communities along these rivers may be interested to sufficiently develop interchange terminal facilities, the Inland Waterways Corporation must be able to assure the people living along these streams that the service will be inaugurated and maintained. Another reason for asking for the money to be divided in this manner is because it will offer a protection to the Secretary of War and to his executive officer to resist any demands to expend the total $10,000,000 upon the development of existing facilities if the total were made immediately available.

These demands would become more and more exigent, every sort of pressure brought to assure the expenditure of the entire amount as soon as it became available for the further development of existing facilities. If the total should be expended in this manner, it would inevitably lead to further demands upon Congress for more money to be appropriated and spent in the inauguration of the new services contemplated on the Missouri and Illinois, which would be entirely natural if the total $10,000,000 authorized to be appropriated were spent upon the present existing facilities, and no provision made for the inauguration of facilities upon the Missouri or Illinois Rivers.

It is the desire of the Secretary of War and of the corporation to keep faith with Congress in this matter and to do what was contemplated at the time of the passage of the act authorizing the appropriation of $10,000,000, i. e., carrying on existing facilities and inaugurate services upon the Missouri River and the Illinois River with a total of $10,000,000 appropriation.

I especially invite your attention to the results for last year for the entire corporation. During the year there was transported 1,871,843 tons at an average revenue of $3.71 per ton, on which the expense of operation aggregated $3.51 a ton, or a total net income per ton during the year of 20 cents per ton.

The net operating income during the year was $375,608.97, and this after absorbing a loss of $233,361.66 on the upper Mississippi division, and a loss of $95,410.96 on the Warrior division, and setting aside $450,000 for depreciation. The total coming into the hands of the corporation, including depreciation, was $868,218.41, over and above money necessary to operate the fleet.

The total funds coming into the hands of the corporation during the calendar year 1928 are $11,729,851.77. The total disbursements for the fiscal year 1928 were $11,345,804.58, leaving a balance on June 30, 1928, of $384,027.19.

Especial attention is invited to the fact that the losses on the Warrior division during 1927 were $208,822.55, which were reduced during the year to $95,410.96, and there was an actual net operating income on the Warrior River, including the Warrior River Terminal Co., for November of approximately $6,000. The expense per ton of the consolidated waterway movement for 1927 was $3.83 per ton, which was, however, reduced to $3.51 per ton for 1928, or a reduction in the cost of operation of 32 cents per ton. The operations can be summarized as follows:

The corporation carried more tonnage during the year 1928 than ever before in its existence at a less average revenue per ton, and at such a greatly reduced operating expense per ton that the net operating income per ton increased 22 cents.

The pressing and immediate necessities are the creation of more floating equipment upon the Mississippi and the Warrior Rivers and the development or improvement of terminal facilities which will enable us to reduce the operating costs. The $2,500,000 to be made immediately available will probably all go into new floating equipment and the $1,500,000 to be made available the 1st of July, 1929, will also go to making available new equipment for the three existing divisions, in addition to terminal developments which experience has proven to be necessary.

Yours very truly,

T. Q. ASHBURN,
Major General, United States Army,
Chairman and Executive.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1929.

Hon. DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War,
Governor, Inland Waterways Corporation,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: It is with keen personal pleasure that I transmit to you the following resolution unanimously adopted by the advisory board of the Inland Waterways Corporation at its annual meeting in Washington, D. C., January 11, 1929:

"Resolved, That the advisory board of the Inland Waterways Corporation does hereby express its appreciation of the sympathetic interest and deep appreciation of the problems confronting the Inland Waterways Corporation by the Secretary of War, the Hon. Dwight F. Davis; that the board does hereby express its confidence in him, and it congratulates him upon the results achieved by the Inland Waterways Corporation during his administration."

Respectfully,

T. Q. ASHBURN,
Major General, United States Army,
Chairman and Executive.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and ask for recognition.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is about time we had some statement as to what the point of order is.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have withdrawn the point of order, so I am out from under.

Mr. SCHAFER. I think the point of order is that we should have a quorum here on a question that is putting the Government into business to the tune of $10,000,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to this appropriation, nor do I object to the undertaking itself. My objection to the project is that which I voiced at the time of the consideration of the bill. Here is a bill sponsored by the most conservative men in this House, who are always quick to oppose and criticize any suggestion of Government operation of any kind, and yet they admit that private interests have not the courage nor the initiative nor the desire to assume any risk to develop this business. It may be profitable, as it has turned out to be under Government operation; but the bill provides that as soon as it is certain that it can be operated at a profit, the entire corporation, its property and business, must be turned over to some favorite who will be around looking for this great juicy plum.

That is not fair. If it is a failure, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] would say that Government operation is a failure and that it can not be done. But let the Government operate until it becomes profitable, and then it will go into the hands of a private corporation; and then the gentleman from Minnesota will say, "Oh, yes; look at the profits under private operation." [Laughter.]

It is necessary to develop our inland waterways and to have this service, and it should have been done years ago, but the railroads would not permit it. The railroads so control the system of transportation of this country that we can appropriate millions and millions for rivers and harbors and yet never have a chance to utilize our waterways as long as the railroads control the transportation policy of the country.

I insist that the situation has compelled Congress to act. You say that the private enterprise can not do it, therefore let the Government do it, but only until it is sufficiently profitable for private capital to take it over. Let the Government take the loss during the pioneer stage, and then let a group of individuals enjoy the profits.

I am in favor of not only having the Government initiate and pioneer this project, but in keeping and operating it after it is on a paying basis. If the Government can put it on a profit-producing basis, it should keep it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, I am heartily in favor of the appropriation. My good friends from the Mississippi Valley and my friends from the Missouri Valley and the Chicago section convinced me of the merits of the barge line. I think the bill establishing this service is a good thing for the country. I want to help with what influence I have to put this great project across.

In this connection, however, I desire to speak to you gentlemen back of this legislation, and I hope you will all give me your kindly attention because it is at a time like this that we can get your attention. I want the attention of men who control the legislation of the House.

I think the most effective and best thing about this inland water transportation act, known as the Denison Act, is the fact that under that act we can have connecting water and rail rates from the streams where this barge line operates. When we passed the act at the last session I thought the provision applied to all inland waterways of the country and was so told by Mr. DENISON that was the intent of the act; but as a matter of fact, that was stricken out in this body or in the other—I do not know which. The Government of the United States is spending large sums of money upon an inland waterway from Boston to my section and finally to the Gulf. In my district there is at the present time being constructed a link of this waterway which will cost something like $6,000,000, and yet we are unable to get connecting water-and-rail rates into the interior. I think the most salutary and best thing about the Denison Act establishing the Government barge line is that you can not only have water transportation but have through connecting water-and-rail rates from the points where the barge line operates into the interior.

I am supporting this appropriation heartily and doing all I can to help you gentlemen. I hope that when we make the clarion call and the Macedonian cry you will come down and help us.

I am very sorry that the present leadership of the House is not going to give us a river and harbor bill this session, but we have in this present appropriation bill $50,000,000 for rivers and harbors, and the State of North Carolina has been reasonably taken care of. The following items are the proposed allotments for river and harbor projects in the State of North Carolina for the fiscal year 1930:

Proposed allotments for river and harbor projects in the State of North Carolina for the fiscal year 1930, based on an appropriation of $50,000,000

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Only, Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in support of the amendment appropriating $10,000,000 to purchase equipment for the barge line just offered by a member of the Appropriations Committee. As has been said, this item has the approval of the War Department, the Bureau of the Budget, and was submitted to the House by the President in a special message.

The barge line, or, at least, that part of the line on the Mississippi River below St. Louis, is self-sustaining. Without the additional equipment, for which this appropriation provides, the line can not function properly. It can not increase its activities. The upper river line from St. Louis to St. Paul and Minneapolis is now in operation. This money will enable the corporation to provide equipment to move the grain from the great Wheat Belt this summer. The activities of the line have been curtailed due to lack of equipment.

General Ashburn, chairman of the Board of the Inland Waterways Corporation, is authority for the statement 16,000 tons have been carried on one tow. One of the large steel barges has a capacity equal to about 70 freight cars.

The volume of freight handled by the barge line continues to increase, but the maximum has about been reached with the present equipment.

The barge line was started by the Government during the war because the railroads were unable to move all the freight offered. It was an experiment, but is no longer classed as an experiment. We are spending millions of dollars annually improving our rivers and harbors and it is to put the rivers to work that this appropriation is requested.

Personally, I hope the day is not far distant when this corporation will be taken over by private capital. I am willing to vote for the sale of the barge line, but before doing so I want to see an agreement signed providing a penalty of forfeiture in the event the purchaser does not operate the line on a schedule to be agreed upon before sale.

With this appropriation I feel confident the Inland Waterways Corporation will demonstrate to private capital it would be advisable to engage in transportation by water. Some of the great steel companies along the Ohio River have already provided private lines while others are having equipment built to start operations in the very near future.

To decline to pass this appropriation would simply mean a waste of the money already spent by the Government on this service. I sincerely hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. When we adopt the amendment just presented by my colleague Judge CLAGUE we will make available for this present calendar year the expenditure of $4,000,000 for much-needed equipment in the form of additional tow boats and barges for the Government barge line. That is about all that can reasonably be spent this calendar year for that purpose. Furthermore, as I pointed out to the House a week or so ago, time is most important in this matter. What we need is an appropriation of substantial size that will be available now so that arrangements can immediately be entered into for the building of additional towboats and barges. When the crop movement began last August in my section of the country, we were unable from that time on to the close of navigation to begin to take care of the grain that was offered the barge line. That was even more true of the lower Mississippi River. Hence the occasion for expediting action in every possible way so as to make a substantial appropriation immediately available and thereby enable the Inland Waterways Corporation officials to immediately make plans and execute contracts for the immediate building and expeditious delivery of this equipment. This entire appropriation of $10,000,000 furnishes the additional capital required throughout the system. That is what Congress determined last May. It is my understanding that the Inland Waterways Corporation officials expect to act immediately so that this equipment so much needed can be made available for the moving of next fall's crop.

The original capital of the Inland Waterways Corporation was $5,000,000. The original appropriation in that act was $3,000,000. It was two years ago that we appropriated $2,000,000, a portion of which was used for the putting of equipment on the upper river and the balance was used on the Warrior and the lower river. The success of the operation on the lower river was such and the progress made upon the Warrior and the upper Mississippi River was such that it was perfectly apparent that if we were going to carry on this demonstration the way it should be carried on more capital was needed. As a result of that, Congress last May increased the capital to $15,000,000. In addition to that, Congress authorized the extension of this service to the lower Missouri and the Illinois River. The lower Missouri will be ready in about a year, in a state of practical navagability, and I think the Illinois in about two years. Of course, it is obvious that if the work was to be carried on additional capital was needed upon the rivers then being used and also for the rivers to which the work was to be extended. Not only is this appropriation at the present time with its limitations going to be helpful to the municipalities on these rivers but it is also going to be helpful to the Inland Waterways Corporation management in making their plans. For example, in the making of contracts for equipment and in the making of terminal arrangements they know that all of this money will be eventually available.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the interest of the House, I want to say something about the other features of the authorization bill in reference to the joint-rate arrangements with the railroads. We put in there a rather drastic provision; at least the carriers thought so. It was contested before the Interstate Commerce Commission last fall. Our colleague Mr. DENISON appeared before the commission in connection with the argument. The commission sustained the provision. That was followed by a conference between the officers of the Inland Waterways Corporation and the railroads. That was followed by two more conferences, one of which has been held, and the other will be held the latter part of this month, and it looks very much as if the Inland Waterways Corporation and the railroads were going to be able to get together and to amicably agree upon a plan for a joint-rate arrangement, and if that can be done it will mean a great deal toward advancing the work that Congress started in to do when it passed the transportation act eight years ago.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. And is it not true that the Illinois Central Railroad from its territory makes a through rate to the Gulf and thence by water to the western coast to compete with the all-water rates from New York to San Francisco?

Mr. NEWTON. I think that is the case.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I think those rates are now being made up by the Illinois Central, so that a shipper in the Chicago area can send his goods to San Francisco just as cheaply as a New York firm can by water.

Mr. NEWTON. I know it was contemplated that that would be done. I know that some talk has been had, and I am glad to know that that is the case.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I heard the other day that system had practically been agreed upon.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman was a Member of Congress when the transportation act was passed?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And I suppose he favored it?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. There is a provision in that act which provides for water and rail transportation interchangeably and through water and rail rates.

Mr. NEWTON. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I assume that is going to be the policy of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, of which the gentleman is a member. I do not want to commit the gentleman too far, but I hope while we are all in a good frame of mind that the gentleman will look with favor in the future upon that particular provision.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman appreciates very much the interest that the gentleman from North Carolina has always taken in this important subject.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me express the hope for most expeditious action by the executive branch of the Government, to the end that this additional equipment will be available on upper and lower rivers this early fall.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15712, the War Department appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNATIONAL MAP OF THE WORLD (S. DOC. NO. 202)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

With reference to my communication of December 30, 1924, regarding legislation to be enacted by the United States in connection with the Map of the World on the Millionth Scale, I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending a request to Congress providing for an annual appropriation of $50 for the payment of a contribution by the United States toward the support of the Central Bureau of the International Map of the World on the Millionth Scale. The recent developments in the matter are explained in the report of the Secretary of State, which has the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior, and I trust that this small annual appropriation will be granted.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 12, 1929.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—FIRST INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON SANITARY AVIATION (S. DOC. NO. 201)

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending that Congress be requested to authorize an appropriation of $1,000 for the payment of expenses of delegates of the United States to the First International Congress on Sanitary Aviation, to be held at Paris, France, in 1929.

The recommendation has my approval and I request of Congress legislation authorizing an appropriation of $1,000 for the purpose of participation by the United States by official delegates in the First International Congress on Sanitary Aviation, to be held in Paris in 1929.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 12, 1929.

ADDRESS OF HON. R. A. GREEN, OF FLORIDA

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by Congressman R. A. GREEN over the radio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech over the radio by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech of Hon. R. A. GREEN, of Florida, from radio station WJSV, Washington, D. C., January 12, at 8 o'clock p. m.

FARM RELIEF

Friends of my radio audience, it is quite fitting that in this time of great agricultural distress in our Nation as a whole that we should devote some time and thought to the problem nationally and as it pertains to the individual States.

After all, the problem of agriculture is a matter of distribution. Surpluses in fruits, vegetables, meats, and staple crops occur largely through the lack of proper distribution by means of adequate market facilities. We find thousands of bushels of peaches decaying under the trees in Georgia, Virginia, and the Carolinas, and at the same time millions of people in the various parts of our country desiring and demanding fresh peaches. We find carloads of luscious red strawberries and watermelons perishing in the fields of Bradford County or rotting in an overglutted market in a few of our larger cities, while persons in other sections of the country—in fact, nine-tenths of the country—are desiring and demanding fresh strawberries and are willing to pay for them the highest market price. The citrus crops of Florida this year may run to 18,000,000 bushels and that of California possibly more, but, even so, this amount of fruit would give only a few oranges and grapefruit to each individual in the United States if they were properly distributed. In like manner the problem of distribution applies to almost all of the other crops of our Nation. Our country makes the supply and in our country is the demand, but there is no effective medium by which the supply of our various crops may reach immediate and the remote demand. What is most needed in our United States for the relief of agriculture is a large, effective marketing system controlled by honest officials of our Government; but I shall not dwell upon agriculture as a national problem, but will confine myself more to farming and farm products of my own great State, Florida.

It will be very strange to my hearers, perhaps, to learn of the great diversity of soil conditions and of agricultural products of the State of Florida, but, my friends, I would have you bear in mind that the State of Florida is some 400 miles wide at its northern boundary and reaches on down between the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean for a distance of some 500 miles, embracing a total area of well over 35,000,000 acres, or 9,000 square miles more than the State of New York. I would have you bear in mind that in the western portion of Florida we have there the end of the Appalachian chain of mountains, and here where the hills meet the Gulf of Mexico are to be found soil conditions similar to that of the foothills of the other Appalachian States. Passing then on eastward and southward through the State almost every type of soil is to be found, including that rich and productive humus soil in the Everglades near the great Lake Okeechobee. The fertility and productiveness of this Everglades soil is probably not surpassed by even that of the Nile Valley. It is in many places several feet in depth and produces most luxuriantly practically all staple and vegetable crops, including sugar cane.

In the portion of Florida east of the Perdido River and west of the Suwannee River are to be found vast acreage of grapes, Satsuma oranges, watermelons, sugar cane, extensive corn and cotton acreage, and last, but by no means least, great fields of tobacco catch the aroma from the rain. Different kinds and varieties of tobacco are here grown. That of probably greatest interest, however, is the tobacco which is grown under shades and particularly valuable for wrappers of high-grade cigars. Probably 25 per cent of American-grown wrapper tobacco is produced in these fields. Millions of yards of cheap cotton cloth are used to shade the young and old plants from the rays of a semitropical sun. Some grades of this tobacco, when it is ready for use on the cigar, sell for as high as $4 per pound, and it is not unusual for 1 acre to produce from 1,200 to 1,500 pounds. This is a growing industry and with adequate tariff protection on Sumatra wrapper tobacco, the industry will experience great strides in the future.

From this section and well on down into central Florida thousands of carloads of watermelons are shipped from the State annually. These melons go on the market at a season when competition is not so great and owing to the favorable soil and climatic conditions to be found in Florida the quality of the melon is superior. East of the Suwannee River to the Atlantic and on well down through central Florida for some 200 miles is known as the great central section of the State. The products of this section are in a large measure similar to those of the western portion of the State as far as staple crops are concerned. In this section at Hastings, in St. Johns County, are some of the most productive Irish potato fields in the world, and also throughout central and west Florida are large and lucrative paper-shell pecan groves. In this section also, stock raising, dairying, and poultry industries are carried on quite extensively. It is not at all unusual for a farmer, operating on a very small scale, however, to produce sufficient surplus poultry products to purchase him a new automobile each year, or to, as a side line, sell sufficient hogs to buy a new automobile or build him a new home in one year. Dairy farms are now springing up throughout this entire section. I would have my listeners bear in mind, however, that in spite of the growth of the poultry, dairying, and livestock industries of the State of Florida, she still imports some $50,000,000 worth of these products annually; in fact, she imports about as much as is produced at home, thus showing the bright future for these industries within the State. The underproduction of these products is caused largely by the abnormally rapid growth of the State's population and also by the lucrative inducements along other lines of agricultural production.

In this section of the State, particularly at Starke, Fla., and Plant City, Fla., are to be found large acreage of strawberries. This luscious red fruit usually is ready for the market beginning in December and the shipping season may last as late as the middle of April, and it is not at all unusual for the grower to receive at Starke, Fla., $20 to $25 for one crate of 32 quarts of this product. It is not at all unusual for him to realize $1,000 net profit per acre per season. This, however, is a perishable product and great care must be exercised in its marketing, but when judiciously marketed the grower never fails to receive an unusually large profit.

This central section is also a great vegetable section, however, not as great as is the production further south in the State. The great cabbage, bean, cucumber, and celery fields are here found and this section is now shipping cabbage to the northern market.

Beginning in upper central Florida and going on to the end of the peninsula is the great Citrus Belt of our State. Florida has 287 carlot packing houses, and this number, of course, will increase because she has approximately 75,000 acres planted to grapefruit trees, 55,000 of which are bearing. She has approximately 170,000 acres planted to orange trees with about 100,000 of these trees bearing, different varieties producing grapefruit and oranges for the market at different times of the year. For example, the early varieties of oranges placed on the market from November to January are such as Parsons, Temples, and Enterprise; midseason varieties from January to March, seedlings and pineapple; later varieties from March to January, Valencias, Lue Gim Gongs, and other varieties. The citrus industry will always be one of Florida's most important, owing to the growth in popularity of this fruit and also owing to the peculiar soil and climatic conditions necessary for its profitable production. Florida has both.

I have noted with considerable interest recently the importance of citrus fruit as a diet for the sick and particularly its use as a preventive against influenza. I am reliably informed that recently 1,100 children of a New York State community, and hundreds of others in and about New York City, are being safely carried through the influenza epidemic through the means of grapefruit juice. Authority for this is Dr. Daniel Hodgdon, former president of Hahneman Hospital in Chicago. Doctor Hodgdon is of the opinion that the annual winter increases of cold might be completely controlled in the future by the use of citrus fruits. He says the time is near when every person in the United States will take the juice of at least two grapefruits a day during the winter months. While the humanitarian benefits of this use of grapefruit should be uppermost, Florida has a special primary interest in that the State is the main producer of the grapefruit and orange. Doctor Hodgdon has the 1,100 children under his care and all are free from influenza, which he attributes to the careful feeding of citrus-fruit juices. Not only among children is this cure and preventive to be noticed, Doctor Hodgdon says, but older people are using it to advantage as well. And if I might take a look into the future, I would say that every member of the average American family in the future will increase their use of grapefruit juice until they take each day during the cold winter months the juice of at least two grapefruits. Doctor Hodgdon further recommends the use of a glass of orange juice after meals to facilitate digestion. It will be interesting to my listeners to know that recently the Florida Citrus Growers' Clearing House Association, which is a new and splendid organization for the orderly and effective marketing of citrus fruits, has donated 20 carloads of grapefruit to be used throughout the country as a preventive of influenza. My friends, the citrus industry in Florida is safe and will grow.

In the central and southern portion of the State is to be found vast acreages of eggplants, table cucumbers, snap beans, peppers, celery, tomatoes, early Irish potatoes, avocado pears, and in fact practically any and all table vegetables. During the last few days Florida peppers produced in this district have been selling as high as $15 per crate on the New York market—the highest price ever obtained. A standard carload at these prices would sell for more than $5,000. Avocado pears produced in this section have recently sold as high as $25 per crate. This, my friends, is a high price to be paid for vegetables, but the American consuming public will pay for the things which it desires, and during this season of the year these products are produced almost solely in the State of Florida; therefore the vegetable-growing industry in south Florida will increase. I would have you bear in mind that in the rich lands of the Everglades and other portions of south Florida many of the vegetable crops are placed on the market in New York, Washington, Chicago, and other cities 10 to 12 weeks after the seed is put in the ground, and on these lands it is not at all unusual for three crops to be produced on the same land in one year. In this Everglades land it is not unusual for two corn crops of 75 bushels per acre each to be produced in one year; and this, by the way, is in the region which the Congress is now laboring so hard to carry Federal aid for flood control. Our efforts in the Congress for flood control in these rich lands, we believe, will be successful.

In the Everglades to-day some of the largest and most productive sugar-cane plantations in the world are to be found. D. H. Dahlberg and others have just finished a 1,500-ton sugar mill which began grinding sugar cane January 10. This is the first unit of a 7,500-ton mill to be built. There are several others of these gigantic mills now grinding sugar cane in this vicinity. This enterprise will succeed and it will be only a few years until in Florida will be found the Nation's sugar bowl.

It will be of interest to you to learn that the United States Weather Bureau has established branch stations in Florida at Jacksonville, Tampa, Miami, Apalachicola, and Pensacola, and from these stations weather information is broadcast to approximately 150 points for the information and guidance of Florida's farmers, fruit and truck growers. The United States Department of Agriculture is also cooperating with our State in furnishing market news to several places in the State. Some of these places are Jacksonville, a general farming center; Tampa, fruit and trucking center; Winter Haven, citrus-fruit center; Sanford, celery center; Hastings, Irish-potato center; Leesburg, watermelon center; Pahoka and Canal Point, in the Everglades, vegetable center.

My friends, there are many additional agricultural industries and products in Florida of which I would tell you if time permitted. Of particular interest to you would be the tung-oil industry in the vicinity of Gainesville. This plant is growing successfully and its nuts produce varnish oil, but I must hasten to this conclusion: According to the last statistics which I have, Florida stood at the top of the list of crop value per acre with $107, while the next highest was $79 for California; Massachusetts and New Jersey, $73; Connecticut, $66; Colorado, $62; and on down the line until the lowest State, and I will not mention its name, was only $11 per acre. I am sure that the new statistics will give Florida even a better lead over all States than this.

Of Florida's more than 35,000,000 acres less than 3,000,000 are farmed, thus showing that millions of acres are still to be had, offering wealth and industries, as well as edible products, to other millions of our Nation. Florida's agricultural products for the 1927–28 shipping season were valued at $140,000,000, which occurs to me is a large amount to be produced from less than 3,000,000 acres. It furnishes about 80 per cent of the Nation's grapefruit, 60 per cent of the Nation's eggplants, 40 per cent of the table cucumbers, 40 per cent of the snap beans, 65 per cent of the peppers, 32 per cent of the celery, 25 per cent of the tomatoes, 10 per cent of the early Irish potatoes, and a large percentage of the other vegetable products consumed by the Nation.

And, my friends, Florida has no bonded or other State indebtedness, no inheritance tax, no income tax, no corporation tax, no corporation stock-transfer tax, no severance tax, no franchise tax, and no tax on intangibles. But her real hope and future rest is her productive soil and unparalleled climate. Her rural homes are rapidly becoming modern, attractive, and comfortable. Her rural life is encouraged by hard-surfaced roads everywhere, and here are built modern schools and churches. Her rural communities are developed. Her more than 30,000 lakes are still clear, placid, and surrounded by gigantic forest trees, draped with Spanish mosses. Her thousands of springs still gush forth an overabundance of transparent and God-given fluid, sparkling with purity and virtue. Her rivers still meander "here and yon" and give vent to the sweet perfume of the magnolia in the moonlight. The flaming poinsettia, the hibiscus, the bougainvillea, and the rose are still there, and the mocking birds sing at dawn. My friends, Florida's rural life is rich.

Mr. WALSH of Montana presented petitions numerously signed of sundry citizens of the State of Montana, praying for ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it was my pleasure this morning to receive a delegation of 80 ladies from my State, and they gave to me for presentation to the Senate this very numerously signed petition in favor of the peace pact. I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I present petitions from sundry organizations and citizens in various towns and communities in North Carolina. They are numerously signed and in favor of the ratification of the peace pact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present petitions from a large number of women's organizations of Tennessee in favor of the Kellogg peace pact. These petitions were presented to me by Mrs. Perry, Mrs. Parker, and Miss Williams, three splendid and distinguished ladies of my State. I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. I present numerous resolutions adopted by women's clubs and other organizations in the State of Virginia, favoring the prompt ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war. I ask that the resolutions may lie on the table and that the sheet accompanying them be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and the matter referred to to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GREAT NATIONS MAKE A PROPOSAL—DO YOU KNOW ABOUT IT?—THEY PROPOSE TO ABOLISH WAR BETWEEN THEMSELVES—CAN THEY DO IT?—A BIG QUESTION FOR THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES—WILL YOU HELP?

If this generation fails to devise means for preventing war, it will deserve the disaster which surely will be visited upon it. Later generations will not be likely to act if we fail. (Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States.)

Everywhere and always France will remain in the front ranks of the nations to maintain peace. (Aristide Briand, French Minister of Foreign Affairs.)

Who in Europe does not know that one more war in the west and the civilization of the ages will fall with as great a shock as that of Rome? (Stanley Baldwin, British Prime Minister, 1926.)

National Committee on the Cause and Cure of War, a federation composed of American Association of University Women, Council of Women for Home Missions, Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions of North America, General Federation of Women's Clubs, National Board of the Young Women's Christian Associations, National Council of Jewish Women, National League of Women Voters, National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, National Women's Trade Union League. (National office, 1010 Grand Central Terminal Building, New York, N. Y.)

Mr. BRUCE. There was placed in my hands by a lady a copy of a number of resolutions, in the nature of petitions, favoring the peace pact, but she made no request of me to have them filed. I should like to have permission of the Senate to file the petitions if upon examination I shall so desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received later.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask that all Senators may have permission to file such petitions.

Mr. SMOOT. Every Senator has that right now. It is not necessary to ask permission to file them.

Mr. SACKETT presented numerous petitions and letters, telegrams, and papers, in the nature of petitions, from sundry women's clubs, civic and religious organizations, and citizens in the State of Kentucky, praying for the prompt ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMOOT presented sundry resolutions adopted by women's clubs and civic organizations in the State of Utah, favoring the ratification of the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

As in legislative session,

Mr. TYDINGS presented the memorial of Mrs. Joseph B. Seth and sundry other citizens of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST presented a communication from the city clerk of Prescott, Ariz., embodying a resolution adopted by the mayor and common council, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., January 11, 1929.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,

Senator from Arizona, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: At a regular meeting of the mayor and common council of the city of Prescott, Ariz., the following resolution was adopted:

"That whereas the use of national forests as recreational areas has developed to a degree of great intensity; and

"Whereas such is bound to result in contamination of watersheds and streams within the national forests; and

"Whereas many cities and towns throughout the country obtain their water supply for domestic and municipal purposes from watersheds and streams contained within national forests; and

"Whereas Senate bill No. 2097, introduced by Mr. NORBECK, provides for regulation in such national forests as will reduce to a minimum the contamination of water supplies of said cities and towns: Now therefore be it

"Resolved by the mayor and common council of the city of Prescott, Ariz., That this body does favor the passage of said Senate bill No. 2097, and does urge the Congress of the United States to pass such bill, and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to Senators ASHURST and HAYDEN and to Representative DOUGLAS, also to the district Forest Service office at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and to the local forest service office."

I am directed by the mayor and common council to ask that you use your best endeavors on this proposed legislation so that the water supply of the city of Prescott may be protected.

Yours very truly,

ARTHUR A. FOSTER, City Clerk.

FEDERAL LAND BANK SYSTEM

Mr. BLEASE. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter in reference to the Federal land bank system and that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR BLEASE: You are probing right; keep going. Meyer's man Polzer was head of the War Finance Corporation until he broke it and lost the Government two and one-half million; his headquarters were in Atlanta until the corporation broke. Now he's big man with farm loan board and put most of old field men in the land bank field. Look out for this N. W. Yanky. He's cussed you out all over Georgia and South Carolina.

Second. Scott Farley, that Arnold engineered in as acting vice president to succeed him. Farley broke two banks at Opelika, Ala. Alabama not being Columbia division. He was sent to Florida to take up citizenship so he could be eligible to get a big job at Columbia. Arnold had him put in as secretary of the Orlanda association and he got crooked down there. Ask the association examiner. Then Polzer and Arnold got him as vice president. Now this crook wants to be president at Columbia.

Write this off on your typewriter and tear this up and I will send you more information. They would cancel my loan if they knew me, so hit them. They are breaking all the farmers. That intermediate credit bank will run a farmer, say, 500, charge him 10 per cent for stock, $50 that he never gets back, and take 8 per cent and give him $410 out of the $500 and take mortgage on his crop and mules and break him up; and then the Republican Party says they are helping the farmer. They should say they are helping rob him.

I believe Senator HARRIS will help you, as he won't stand for this, and an Alabama man holding big job that belongs to Georgia or South Carolina, North Carolina, or Florida man. Get Farley's record. He has one that don't belong to bank that poor farmers depend on. That gang has took our money and homes and give us h——.

You will hear some more. Work on this and old War Finance Corporation Polzer.

SHINGLE AND LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. DILL. I ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, to present and have read at the desk a memorial by the Legislature of the State of Washington.

There being no objection, the memorial was read, as follows:

OLYMPIA, WASH., January 14, 1929.

Hon. C. C. DILL,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

I herewith transmit copy of a house joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of the State of Washington January 14, 1929:

"To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Washington, most respectfully represent and petition your honorable body as follows:

"Whereas since the removal of the tariff on the importation of shingles and lumber into the United States the shingle and lumber industry in the State of Washington has suffered extreme and heavy losses to labor, manufacturing, incident operations, and business receiving a direct benefit from the industry of more than $200,000,000, which is not only a loss to the State of Washington but to the Nation as a whole; and

"Whereas the Republican Party in its platform adopted at its last national convention reaffirmed its belief in a protective tariff, and did assert:

"'We realize there are certain industries which can not now successfully compete with foreign producers because of lower foreign wages and lower costs of living abroad, and we pledge the next Republican Congress to an examination and, where necessary, a revision of these schedules to the end that American labor in these industries may again command the home market, may maintain its standard of living, and may count upon steady employment in its accustomed field'; and

"Whereas the Democratic Party in its platform adopted at its last national convention did declare itself in favor of a sufficient tariff which would afford—

"'the maintenance of legitimate business and a high standard of wages for American labor'; and

"Whereas the present United States tariff act actually discriminates against American production of shingles and lumber in favor of foreign production of such products, forces approximately 125,000 American workmen into direct competition with foreign oriental labor, thereby effectually annuling the United States exclusion act so far as it affects American shingle and lumber workers, and is fast destroying the American shingle and lumber industry: Therefore

"Your memorialists do most earnestly pray that your honorable body place a duty upon the importation of shingles and lumber into the United States sufficient to cover differences in cost of production in the United States and in foreign countries, and permit American shingle and lumber manufacturers to pay fair compensatory wages to their workmen, give them full-time employment, and perpetuate the American shingle and lumber industry, its incident and dependent operations, and prevent stagnation and distress to American business; be it further

"Resolved, That this memorial be immediately telegraphed to the President of the United States and to the State of Washington's Senators and Representatives in Congress, and to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States."

ARTHUR W. CALDER,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I received a similar telegram. I am delighted that my colleague has placed it in the RECORD. I trust when the tariff bill comes over here from the House we will have splendid support from the other side of the Chamber for an adequate tariff along the lines suggested.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if what we read in the morning paper is correct, namely, that the new President and the new administration are to pick out certain schedules upon which we are to consider tariff reductions or tariff increases, and this particular item should not be included, would the Senator then fight his administration on that proposition?

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Washington would do everything he possibly could for a tariff along the line suggested and hopes to have the support of his friend from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. So the Senator is going to break with his party in the very beginning?

Mr. JONES. I am not crossing that bridge until I come to it; but I am telling the Senator what I propose to do with reference to the tariff suggested in the telegram.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS

Mr. VANDENBERG. I report back from the Committee on Commerce favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 11725) for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress, and I submit a report (No. 1446) thereon. This is the bill to reapportion the House of Representatives pursuant to constitutional mandates which have been ignored for a decade. Because it ought to be a matter of highest constitutional privilege I shall give notice later in the week of my desire to address the Senate on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12695) to authorize the licensing of patents owned by the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1447) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect in March, 1929, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1448) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

As in legislative session,

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 5378) authorizing the Fayette City Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near Fayette City, Fayette County, Pa.; to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. TYDINGS, as in legislative session, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, fiscal year 1930, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Insert the following in its proper place:

"For acquiring the necessary land and constructing roadways, in order to extend Rock Creek Park into Montgomery County, Md., from the District line to the Garrett Park culvert, $400,000."

AMENDMENT TO THE FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. KING, as in legislative session, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15848, the first deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Bertha Hanson, widow of George M. Hanson, late American consul at Colon, Panama, the sum of $4,500, being one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

As in legislative session,

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On January 11, 1929:

S. 3127. An act to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909; and

S. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution for the relief of the Iowa Tribe of Indians.

On January 14, 1929:

S. 3779. An act to authorize the construction of a telephone line from Flagstaff to Kayenta on the Western Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.; and

S. 4616. An act to legalize the existing railroad bridge across the Ohio River at Steubenville, Ohio.

FOURTH WORLD'S POULTRY CONGRESS (H. DOC. NO. 509)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending that Congress be requested to authorize an appropriation of $40,000 for the participation of the United States by official delegates and a national exhibit in the Fourth World's Poultry Congress, to be held in England in 1930.

The recommendation has my approval and I request of Congress legislation authorizing an appropriation of $40,000 for the purpose of participation by the United States by official delegates and a national exhibit in the Fourth World's Poultry Congress, to be held in England, probably in the second half of the month of July, 1930.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 15, 1929.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

As in legislative session,

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12449) to define the terms "child" and "children" as used in the acts of May 18, 1920, and June 10, 1922; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MORIN, Mr. JAMES, and Mr. McSWAIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5944) for the relief of Walter D. Lovell.

"BOTHERING A BUSY MAN"

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I present an editorial from the Washington Daily News of January 12, 1929, entitled "Bothering a Busy Man," which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOTHERING A BUSY MAN

"Sir, I'd rather be right than be President," said Henry Clay.

As Herbert Hoover closes his door on his last visitor these long winter evenings he may sometimes think of the disillusioned Kentuckian's remark. If he does he must bow to that gallant ghost and reply, "Sir, you said a mouthful!"

For Hoover is now forming his Cabinet. He is determining who shall head the various executive departments of the Government during his term of office. It is not an easy task at best. He must find 10 big men for 10 big jobs, 10 men of ascertained ability and proved integrity, each by intelligence, training, and temperament suited to the particular job to be filled.

Not an easy job, for big men do not come from every cradle. A task to make one seek the best advice obtainable and Hoover apparently is seeking just such advice. Undoubtedly he is getting it. But it appears he is likewise getting much advice that is not so good. If one may judge from the delegations crowding his hotel quarters and the names they are reported to be offering the President elect he is getting some advice that is distinctly bad.

He is being urged to select this man and that for political reasons. This man because he comes from a certain State, that man because he helped carry another State; this man to please one element in the party; that man to please another.

Bad business, choosing a Cabinet for such reasons. And nobody can know this better than Herbert Hoover.

For the greater part of two terms Hoover himself served as a Cabinet member. If he bears in mind the unhappy history of those two Cabinets he is unlikely to be moved by the importunities of the politicians now beseiging him. He is likely to keep in mind the fundamental need—10 completely qualified men for the 10 important positions.

Hoover has seen a weak Secretary of the Navy relinquish his control of the priceless naval reserve oil lands, turning them over to a cunning Secretary of the Interior to be bartered away for cash. He has seen those two colleagues retired from public life in disgrace, leaving the stigma of that disgrace on the administration of which they were members.

Hoover has seen an unscrupulous Attorney General fill the United States Department of Justice with crooks and incompetents and seen the latter busily turning their opportunities into personal profit. He has seen that colleague retired in disgrace, leaving his mark on the President who appointed him and the President who failed to remove him until forced by the public's demand.

Hoover has seen lesser presidential appointees sent to prison—an Alien Property Custodian, a Director of the Veteran's Bureau—for following the example set by bad Cabinet officials.

Hoover sees to-day two former Cabinet colleagues endeavoring to explain why the one, at the request of the other, prevented the criminal indictment of an important bureau chief.

Is it anybody's idea that Herbert Hoover has failed to understand why these things could happen? Does any hopeful politician believe that the man soon to be President is willing, for momentary political considerations, to risk making the mistake his predecessors made, that he will take a chance on a single incompetent appointee?

Surely not. We don't believe that any of the politicians now gravely advancing the merits of their political friends are as stupid as some of them seem. We believe they are only playing the game the way they are accustomed to play it. As they see it no harm can come from promoting the hopes of a friend, while some good may come to themselves thereby.

Of course, some harm does result. A busy man, with tremendously important work to do, is given a lot of unnecessary bother.

DEFINITION OF CERTAIN TERMS

As in legislative session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12449) to define the terms "child" and "children" as used in the acts of May 18, 1920, and June 10, 1922, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

The Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty for the renunciation of war transmitted to the Senate for ratification by the President of the United States December 4, 1928, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations December 19, 1928.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I rise to make some comment on criticisms which have been expressed touching the treaty under consideration. By way of introduction I take occasion to signify my dissent from the view which has been expressed within and without this Chamber, reluctantly by some who favor the treaty and exultantly by some who oppose it, that it is a mere gesture, a futile gesture, or a meaningless gesture. To my mind it is vastly more than a gesture. It is, in my estimation, a revolutionary pronouncement reversing the position that war has hitherto occupied in the domain of international law. Heretofore war has been regarded in international law as a perfectly legitimate means by which a nation might advance its interests or its policies. Whatever might be thought of the nation that precipitated hostilities and however unprovoked might be its attack upon another country, it violated no law. It acted entirely within its sovereign right in doing so. It offended against no nation except the one assailed. If the treaty should be in force, it would be an outlaw in pursuing such a course. It would offend against every nation signatory to the treaty comprising, as it is expected, practically every civilized nation. It would become a lawbreaker and guilty of an international crime.

I do not overlook wars of self-defense, so called. They all contemplate an antecedent violation of the treaty by the nation against which the defensive measures are directed. At the worst, the treaty would cast upon a nation resorting to arms the burden of vindicating its course or losing the respect of the world.

The frantic efforts of the belligerents in the great World War to convince of the rectitude of their course and cause leave no room for doubt of the importance that is attached, and very rightly attached, to world opinion in such a crisis. The puny Republics of Bolivia and Paraguay are even at this moment employing the press in order each to justify its course, not alone to free itself from the odium of being regarded as the aggressor but also in order to make more certain the sympathy of other nations from whom it might expect such aid as neutrals may extend.

Furthermore, there can be no doubt that a treaty such as this will act as a powerful deterrent upon any nation that might otherwise be bent on war. Treaties have been violated in the past, it is true; but whatever may be said concerning the fragile nature of treaties, no nation is entirely devoid of honor in some degree; no nation lightly violates its plighted word.

Much has been said in this debate and in connection with the discussion aroused by the cruiser legislation about the ruthlessness with which Germany disregarded her treaty with Belgium and about the incontinency of Italy in abandoning the cause of the Central Powers; but does anyone believe that either of those nations thus proved perfidious with a light heart and without misgivings? The task of inducing Italy to side with the Allies would have been a comparatively simple one if she had not already been bound by a solemn compact with their enemies. Those two instances of treaty violations, so recent and so gross, are believed by some to give support to the theory that treaties are entirely useless. Sight is lost of the innumerable treaties that have been scrupulously kept. It has never been seriously charged. I believe that there has not been the most meticulous observance of the treaties entered into here in the city of Washington in 1922, limiting the number of capital ships of war that certain nations might maintain, and limiting the size of cruisers becoming units of their naval establishments. No one really doubts that if the late conference at Geneva upon the same subject had resulted in an agreement limiting the number of such cruisers it would have been religiously kept.

Two gentlemen enter into an agreement not to pursue a certain course of conduct, and, of course, there is less likelihood that they will follow it than if they had not so undertaken.

If the plighted word of individuals exercises a restraining influence over them, or incites them to action, why not that of a nation?

It is not alone in the domain of international law that the treaty will effect a radical change. I believe it will exercise a powerful influence over the attitude of the people of the world with relation to war. Among savages every man is a warrior and is esteemed in proportion to his prowess and the success that he achieves. Every rude speech is a recital of the triumphs of the tribe and the valor of individuals. The necessary effect, if not the purpose, is to imbue every youth in the tribe with the hope that opportunity will come to him to join in some foray that he may emulate the example of his brave ancestors in battle. How much different is what has been fed to the generations as history? A succession of butcheries, the story of which always exalts the victors and sanctifies the unyielding victims. The tale is always a tale of the "pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war"; rarely, if ever, of the devastation wrought by conquering armies, of the miseries endured by the combatants or the populace within the range of their operations, or the train of evils that has invariably attended wholesale slaughter and that are visited upon the victors and the vanquished alike.

The successes are by the writers of the nation achieving them magnified and emphasized and the reverses are minimized or entirely ignored.

I scanned with horror the huge canvases on the walls of the foreign office in Berlin, all depicting battles in which the German armies triumphed. Never a one was there of an engagement in which they suffered defeat. The situation in the Pantheon in Paris is not essentially different. Religion—at least what sometimes passes for religion—and poetry have combined to emphasize the glamor of war. Art has contributed not a little to the development of the war spirit. These considerations and many others have all operated to break down the resistance to the war spirit whenever provocation arises or the passions prompt resort to war.

The treaty before us contemplates war as an essentially evil thing, and the nations signatory agree to abjure it because it is an evil thing. I regard this treaty as important, furthermore, because I look to see it followed by other agreements between the powers intended to attain, or at least to promote, the end aimed at by it. If the nations of the earth agree to renounce war as an instrument of national policy and not to resort to it for the solution of international controversies, it seems to me necessarily to follow that they must set up some other kind of machinery for the solution of such controversies, at least as to those that are capable of solution by the application of legal principles, those that are justiciable in character. It would seem as though some arrangement of that kind is not only desirable but indispensable.

I said, Mr. President, that I rose for the purpose of submitting some observations upon criticisms of this treaty which have been heard within and without this Chamber. They are summarized in an address delivered by Professor Borchard, of Yale, at Williamstown during the summer, and therein appears to my mind practically everything that has been said against this treaty on this floor, of course, with more or less elaboration and repetition. I refer to it particularly because the instrument was introduced in the RECORD some time ago by one of the Senators holding views, I take it, quite in conformity with those expressed in the address, and because the name of the author came before the Senate yesterday in connection with remarks submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]. It is understood likewise that the author inspired, if he did not dictate, the resolution of "understandings" offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES].

For the purpose of illustrating the utter recklessness with which the writer uses the English language, I read first a sentence from the address as follows:

When the United States at the First Hague Conference secured recognition by our cosignatories for the Monroe doctrine, it was regarded as an achievement of American diplomacy.

It will be news to every Member of this Chamber, I am sure, that our representatives at the First Hague Conference obtained recognition of the Monroe doctrine, and it would be startling intelligence, I am very sure, to most of the nations of the earth, some of which, as we were told by the Senator from Missouri the other day, have expressed themselves in contemptuous language concerning it.

What happened at the First Hague Conference? The agreement setting up The Hague tribunal having been entered into the American plenipotentiaries attached the following to their signatures:

Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign state; nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

It was not in the body of the instrument at all; it was not above the signature of any other signer of the treaty; it was a mere declaration upon the part of the American representatives to that conference. I am not a little amazed that a teacher of international law should put out a statement to the world that the Monroe doctrine was recognized through the diplomacy of American representatives at the First Hague Conference. I should be glad to hear from any gentleman who thinks that the Monroe doctrine was recognized by any nation by the action taken at the First Hague Conference.

But to refer to the criticisms of the treaty by the writer. After having recited in brief the notes exchanged in relation to the treaty, the writer continues:

The original proposition of Mr. Kellogg was an unconditional renunciation of war.

Then, in italics:

The treaty now qualified by the French and British reservations constitutes no renunciation or outlawry of war, but in fact and in law a solemn sanction—

A solemn sanction—

for all wars mentioned in the exceptions and qualifications.

The word "sanction" is there as inappropriately used as is the word "recognition" in the sentence to which I have heretofore adverted.

I find the Century Dictionary defining "sanction" as—the act of ordaining or decreeing as sacred or inviolable a decree, ordinance, sanction. The action of making sacred; the act of rendering authoritative as law; the act of decreeing or ratifying; the act of making binding, as by an oath.

I continue:

When we look at the exceptions we observe that they include wars of self-defense, each party being free to make its own interpretation as to when self-defense is involved, wars under the league covenant, under the Locarno treaties, and under the French treaties of alliance.

I first call your attention to his complaint that under the treaty wars of self-defense are tolerated. Is there anyone here opposing the treaty who would like to include wars of self-defense in those which are interdicted? Would Mr. Borchard be in favor of a treaty which prohibited or interdicted wars of self-defense? If he is not, why advert to the matter? Why urge it as a matter of criticism of the treaty?

Even the Society for the Outlawry of War, whose views have been expressed upon this floor from time to time, in their program expressly exclude wars waged in self-defense.

We go on:

Considering these reservations, it would be difficult to conceive of any wars that nations have fought within the past century, or are likely to fight in the future, that can not be accommodated under these exceptions. Far from constituting an outlawry of war, they constitute the most solemn sanction of specific wars that has ever been given to the world.

Now, observe:

Considering these reservations, it would be difficult to conceive of any wars that nations have fought within the past century, or are likely to fight in the future, that can not be accommodated under these exceptions.

These exceptions are self-defense, Locarno, and the covenant of the League of Nations. No wars during the past century have been fought under either the Locarno agreements or the covenant of the League of Nations; so we reduce this statement to the fact that all wars which have been fought within the last century have been fought as wars of self-defense. Thus, the writer argues that the treaty is valueless, because it does not include wars of self-defense; and yet we are perfectly safe in saying that if it had declared against wars of self-defense it would have invited even more irrational criticism from the author of this article.

He goes on:

Again it will be noticed that we recognize a British claim to use war as an instrument of national policy in certain undefined "regions of the world," any "interference" with which by anybody, including the United States, will be regarded by Great Britain as a cause of war.

Before I go to that, however, I want to advert to these so-called wars under the league covenant and the Locarno treaties.

When it was suggested in the correspondence between our Secretary of State and the French Government that perhaps the French Government would be unable to enter into a treaty of this character, because it was already bound to the Locarno treaties and the covenant of the League of Nations, Mr. Kellogg expressed the view that there would be nothing inconsistent at all in their doing so; in other words, that there was nothing whatever that was contradictory between those agreements and the treaty proposed. He elaborated this idea in his address, referred to in the notes, and said that if a nation should violate one of those agreements it likewise violates the multilateral treaty, and all other nations are released from their obligations under the multilateral treaty, and are at liberty to proceed against the offending nation as they see fit.

I read from Secretary Kellogg's note——

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator yield for a mere question of information?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator will observe that excepted, too, are what the French designate as their treaties of neutrality.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator state what those treaties of neutrality are?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Those treaties, as I understand the matter, are to the effect that if any of the nations with which France has these neutrality treaties shall be attacked by another nation, France will come to their aid; but if those nations are attacked by another one, that other one must violate this multilateral treaty, and that releases France to go to their aid.

I read:

I am reluctant to believe, however—

Mr. Kellogg says in his letter to Ambassador Claudel—that the provisions of the covenant of the League of Nations really stand in the way of the cooperation of the United States and members of the League of Nations in a common effort to abolish the institution of war. Of no little interest in this connection is the recent adoption of a resolution by the Sixth International Conference of American States expressing in the name of the American Republics unqualified condemnation of war as an instrument of national policy in their mutual relations. It is significant to note that of the 21 states represented at the conference 17 are members of the League of Nations.

That is to say, 17 American Republics that are bound by the covenant of the League of Nations have asserted that they see no inconsistency whatever between that covenant and this treaty, and they freely sign this treaty.

But he goes on:

I trust, therefore, that neither France nor any other member of the League of Nations will finally decide that an unequivocal and unqualified renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy either violates the specific obligations imposed by the covenant or conflicts with the fundamental idea and purpose of the League of Nations.

That is to say, Mr. Kellogg said to them, "In my judgment there is no conflict at all between these things, and therefore it is unnecessary to make any exceptions with reference to that matter."

Let me be a little more specific about this matter.

Under the Locarno agreement Great Britain agrees to come to the aid of France if Germany should again invade her territory. Of course, if Germany should invade the territory of France she would be in violation of this multilateral treaty, and that would release all nations so far as Germany is concerned from their obligations, and they could proceed against her as they saw fit.

There are other nations that are interested in the covenant of the League of Nations that have taken exactly the same view with respect to it.

Germany, in her note, the first which came in response to the invitation to join in this treaty, said as follows:

Respect for the obligations arising from the covenant of the League of Nations and the Rhine pact must, in the opinion of the German Government, remain inviolable. The German Government is, however, convinced that these obligations contain nothing which could in any way conflict with the obligations provided for in the draft treaty of the United States. On the contrary, it believes that the binding obligation not to use war as an instrument of national policy could only serve to strengthen the fundamental idea of the covenant of the League of Nations and of the Rhine pact.

Japan is interested in maintaining the integrity of the covenant of the League of Nations. She does not desire to enter into any kind of an agreement that will in any wise embarrass her in her obligations under the covenant of the league. She said:

The proposal of the United States is understood to contain nothing that would refuse to independent states the right of self-defense, and nothing which is incompatible with the obligations of agreements guaranteeing the public peace, such as are embodied in the covenant of the League of Nations and the treaties of Locarno.

Ireland is intensely interested in the preservation in its entire integrity of the covenant of the League of Nations, and she does not want to enter into any agreement that would in any wise run counter to that instrument. The Irish Free State said, in its note:

Sharing the view expressed by the Secretary of State of the United States in his speech before the American Society of International Law that nothing in the draft treaty is inconsistent with the covenant of the League of Nations, the Government of the Irish Free State accept unreservedly the invitation of the United States Government to become a party to the treaty jointly with the other states similarly invited.

Canada is likewise a staunch supporter of the League of Nations; and one of her distinguished statesmen only a few years ago was elected the president of the assembly, serving in that capacity with marked distinction, speaking English and French with equal facility. Mackenzie King, in his letter, said:

The question whether the obligations of the covenant of the league would conflict in any way with the obligations of the proposed pact has been given careful consideration. His Majesty's Government in Canada regards the league, with all its limitations, as an indispensable and continuing agency of international understanding, and would not desire to enter upon any course which would prejudice its effectiveness. It is, however, convinced that there is no conflict either in the letter or in the spirit between the covenant and the multilateral pact, or between the obligations assumed under each.

Great Britain, having expressed in the first place some misgivings as to whether there might not be some inconsistency, and as to whether she could or could not with an easy conscience sign the multilateral pact in view of her obligations under the covenant, said as follows in the note of July 18, 1928:

His Majesty's Government in Great Britain do not consider, after mature reflection, that the fulfillment of the obligations which they have undertaken in the covenant of the League of Nations and in the treaty of Locarno is precluded by their acceptance of the proposed treaty. They concur in the view enunciated by the German Government in their note of the 27th April that those obligations do not contain anything which could conflict with the treaty proposed by the United States Government.

The letter of the British secretary for Australia contains the following:

They have also particularly examined the draft treaty from the point of view of its relationship to the covenant of the League of Nations, and in this connexion have come to the conclusion that it is not inconsistent with the latter instrument.

Mr. President, no nation has expressed any contrary view; and all of these have concurred in the view that there is nothing inconsistent in these instruments at all. Therefore the statement that there is reserved from this treaty wars waged under the Locarno agreement or the covenant of the League of Nations implies an entire misapprehension or is a misrepresentation of the whole situation. There is not any such reservation at all.

Let us go on. I read further from the article which I have used as a text:

But the most extraordinary feature of this treaty still remains to be mentioned. It will have been noticed that we recognize the legality of league wars and Locarno wars.

"We recognize the legality of League wars and Locarno wars." I dare say enough has been said upon that subject, but I want to add this: The Covenant may be used as an excuse for perpetrating wrongs against another nation; it may be used as an excuse for a war of aggression, as may the Locarno treaty. It is absurd to say that we have approved in advance, or given any sanction whatever to any of these wars. All that has been said on our behalf is that a war legitimately waged under those agreements does not subject a nation joining in it to the charge of having violated this treaty, since the offending nation against which they proceed has by its acts released them from the multilateral treaty.

I continue:

As Europe correctly seems to assume—

Observe—

As Europe correctly seems to assume, we are now bound by league decisions as to "aggressors" and league policy generally, but without any opportunity to take part in the deliberations leading to league conclusions.

I submit that that statement borders upon the absurd. Let us suppose that the council of the League should determine, and determine erroneously, that some nation has been guilty of a violation of the covenant and a violation of this treaty, and they proceed to make war on it. How can it be said that we are bound in any sense whatever by any decision that is thus made? But even if they reach a just decision, in what sense is the United States "bound"? By what course of reasoning are we denied a right to reach a contrary conclusion, and what must we do or refrain from doing, whatever decision is thus arrived at?

To continue:

We indeed recognize by this treaty the legal right of the League to make war even against us.

I ask if absurdity can go any further?

Whether the further European claim that we are bound to support league conclusions as to "aggressor" nations, and other political conclusions, either by joining with the league or by refusing to trade with the league-declared pariah, is sustainable or not; at the very best it places us in the uncomfortable position either of being bound by decisions in the making of which we had no part or of having recriminations leveled against us for refusing to support our treaty.

The writer does not undertake to say that such a contention is even reasonably made, and yet it has been advanced in the course of this debate that when we agree that we will not go to war, we obligate ourselves to go to war against a nation which violates the treaty. Again:

We are now about to sign a treaty in which we expressly recognize the right of the other signatories to make war upon anybody, including ourselves, for the purpose of enforcing, even against us, their mutual obligations under the covenant of the League of Nations, not to mention individual undefined national interests in any part of the world. They alone will determine the occasion of such action, without our participation.

In justice to Europe, it can not be said they have left us in doubt as to their conception of our obligations. Indeed, these obligations are expressly or implicitly contained in the very reservations which the United States has excepted.

I have tried at least to make it clear that we have accepted no reservations of any kind. Those things that are called reservations are implicit in the treaty, necessarily implied.

Now, I want to advert to the much-commented-on note of Mr. Chamberlain. I read paragraph 10 of his note of May 19, 1928:

The language of article 1, as to the renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy, renders it desirable that I should remind your excellency that there are certain regions of the world the welfare and integrity of which constitute a special and vital interest for our peace and safety.

"For our peace and safety."

His Majesty's Government have been at pains to make it clear in the past that interference with these regions can not be suffered. Their protection against attack is to the British Empire a measure of self-defense. It must be clearly understood that His Majesty's Government in Great Britain accept the new treaty upon the distinct understanding that it does not prejudice their freedom of action in this respect.

In the article to which I have just referred emphasis is given to the use of the word "interference" in this note, and much has been made of it in the course of the discussion here. It will be borne in mind that it must be read in connection with the sentence, which immediately follows:

His Majesty's Government have been at pains to make it clear in the past that interference with these regions can not be suffered. Their protection against attack is to the British Empire a measure of self-defense.

That is to say, if any nation should attack Egypt, for instance, Great Britain, the note says in effect, would be obliged to go to the defense of Egypt, regarding that as essential to the defense of her rights. They declare in effect—and there is no reservation at all—that "In acting in self-defense we are obliged to protect these nations against attack from the outside." But that was scarcely necessary, because if Egypt, for instance, were attacked from the outside, the attacking nation would find itself in violation of this multilateral treaty, and all nations—Great Britain as well as every other nation—would be free to proceed against it at will.

Mr. President, let me suppose, now, that Great Britain has expanded beyond any legitimate extent her claim of the right of self-defense. What difference does it make to us? Why should we hesitate to sign a treaty because, forsooth, Great Britain is claiming more than in decency she ought to claim?

It has been practically suggested in this article to which I have so frequently referred that by this we sanction and approve any wars Great Britain may care to engage in. Let us illustrate. France has for centuries been in control of Martinique in the Caribbean Sea. If relations between Great Britain and France should become strained and there were really cause for apprehension that a war between them was imminent, and France should immediately proceed to construct and establish there a great naval base which might be used against Jamaica, for instance, Great Britain might or might not be justified in regarding those acts upon the part of France as in the nature of a preparation for attack upon her, and possibly she would be justified, under the doctrine of self-defense, in taking steps to obliterate the works thus constructed by her ancient foe, now her ally.

Let us suppose on the other hand, however, that nothing of the kind exists; that these two nations that have thus enjoyed these two strategic points—France in Martinique and Great Britain in Jamaica—in a friendly way throughout the last century and a half at least continue their present relations and that there is no change whatever. If Great Britain would then seize Martinique, of course it would not be acting in self-defense, and who can assert that we have in advance given our approval or our sanction to any such aggressive conduct upon the part of Great Britain?

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SACKETT. I would like to ask the Senator if he knows of any war of self-defense that does not presuppose an aggression by some nation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have stated that a war of self-defense presupposes that the nation against which defensive operations are directed has already taken the offensive.

Mr. SACKETT. Then the nation that acts in self-defense is no longer under the treaty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No longer under any obligation.

Mr. SACKETT. Under no obligation at all. For that reason there can be no reservation of wars of self-defense.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. SACKETT. For that reason there can be no reservation in these statements of wars of self-defense.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. SACKETT. It is not a reservation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, as I said, these so-called reservations, which I insist are no reservations at all, which other nations may have made, ought to give us no concern. All we are interested in is what harm would come to us from ratifying this treaty.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] yesterday placed us under obligations by giving us the particulars in which he thinks that, in the interest of the United States, this treaty should be clarified, as it is expressed. In the first place, it ought to be clarified, he said, to indicate that the right of self-defense is reserved. I would like to ask the Senator from Missouri, in perfect candor and good nature, I hope, whether he thinks that the right of self-defense would be prejudiced unless specifically reserved?

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator is in error as to the position I took. I said that since the right of self-defense, it is specifically admitted by Mr. Kellogg, is reserved, I do not see that the treaty needs clarification in that respect.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I took down the four points upon which the Senator said he felt the treaty ought to be clarified, as the Senator yesterday gave them to us, first, self-defense; second, Monroe doctrine; third, no obligation to apply sanctions; and, fourth, no recognition of the binding force of the treaties mentioned in the notes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not remember the exact statement, but whatever I said is in the RECORD. I was speaking of the matter in a general way, but I had said, and it has been my position from the first, that since Mr. Kellogg made the statement that the right of self-defense was specifically reserved, and since England had accepted it, and France had accepted it, and every other nation, as far as I know, had accepted it, there is no doubt about that proposition.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would seem, then, with respect to the first particular in which it was said there is a necessity for clarification, it is withdrawn, so nothing further need be said about it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I say it is not necessary; but if we were going to bring in a report, I think it would be well to mention it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In the next place, the clarification ought to be made, it is claimed, so as to reserve to the United States the Monroe doctrine. That is the second point. Why should anything of the kind be done? There is no one here who has any hesitancy whatever in his support of the Monroe doctrine in its entirety. But why should we make a specific reservation of the Monroe doctrine when the right of self-defense is reserved as implicit in the treaty? Does anyone know of any justification for the Monroe doctrine except under the right of self-defense? Does anyone know of any ground that it may occupy except within the field of self-defense? When we reserve self-defense, or when self-defense is reserved, we reserve all rights that we have ever asserted or claimed under the Monroe doctrine. The original language of this doctrine by President Monroe is so well remembered that I need not advert to it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to interrupt the Senator and I do not care to engage in debate about it. I hope we have about reached the point where we can get through this matter without further discussion. But since the Senator asks what is the use of reserving the Monroe doctrine, it has been admitted to be desirable to reserve the Monroe doctrine in many treaties.

I have in my hand the treaty of arbitration between the United States and the French Republic, from which I read:

> The provisions of this treaty shall not be invoked in respect of any dispute the subject matter of which—

And then follow (a) and (b), and then—

> (c) depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions, commonly described as the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am reading from the arbitration treaty of 1928 between the United States and France. Similar treaties were negotiated during the year 1928 with Albania, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Lithuania, Poland, Sweden, all containing similar language.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. All arbitration treaties?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes. There are pending, we are advised by the State Department, negotiations for similar arbitration treaties with the following: Belgium, Bulgaria, China, Egypt, Estonia, Ethiopia, Great Britain, Greece, Hungary, Japan, Latvia, Luxemburg, the Netherlands, Norway, Persia, Portugal, Rumania, Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, Siam, Spain, Switzerland, and Turkey. In all these treaties of arbitration we have upheld this doctrine. In The Hague tribunal we made reservations.

So I simply say it has been deemed advisable in the past to make express reservations. That being true, I think it would be wise to do it here. Of course, we can assert that this is the doctrine of self-defense. It has always been so stated, although we have sometimes extended it beyond what I think is strictly self-defense. I simply say that for the sake of clarity, and I do not care to discuss it. I hope I am through discussing this treaty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very glad the Senator has called attention to those treaties in which the Monroe doctrine has been reserved. Those are arbitration treaties. Those are treaties under which we agree to submit to arbitration certain questions. We do not agree in the pending treaty to submit anything to arbitration.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think we agree to submit everything to arbitration.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; we do not; and that is the difference between a "no war" treaty and an arbitration treaty. We agree that we will not go to war and that we will not seek settlement of controversies except by peaceful means.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that we could very well point out a difference, that in the treaties referred to by the Senator from Missouri unless the Monroe doctrine were excepted it would be included.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Why, if it is a matter of self-defense?

Mr. NORRIS. Those who favor the treaty, and I think everybody practically agrees to it, maintain that the Monroe doctrine is already excluded.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is the point exactly. Everybody does not agree to it. It is a question whether the world would so construe it and hence, if everybody agreed to it here, why not say it? I think it is important to be said and I think we need not discuss it. But if the Monroe doctrine is a doctrine of self-defense, then these treaties of arbitration would exclude it as a part of the doctrine of self-defense. If we are not satisfied with that, we want it specifically mentioned. Of course, it is true no nation can ever waive its right of self-defense and retain its sovereignty, although the original language of these treaties was a waiver of every kind of defense. It was afterwards put in by implication, and it was stated that it was always there, but that we could not see it. The original intent of this treaty when it started off was undoubtedly to outlaw war.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can not yield to the Senator to make his own speech. I want to take issue with his statement that the language was changed so as to include it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I did not say it was changed. I said the original intent was that, and afterwards the construction was given to the language.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator said that the language had been changed in order to exclude self-defense. There has been no change of the language at all.

It will be noted that not only the Monroe doctrine but some other questions are reserved from these arbitration treaties.

> The provisions of this treaty—

According to article 3—> shall not be invoked in respect of any dispute the subject matter of which

> (a) is within the domestic jurisdiction of either of the high contracting parties,
>
> (b) involves the interests of third parties,
>
> (c) depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions, commonly described as the Monroe doctrine,
> (d) depends upon or involves the observance of the obligations of France in accordance with the covenant of the League of Nations.

Those questions we will not arbitrate, but that is an entirely different thing from the treaty before us. The first article of this treaty provides:

> The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

That is to say, they agree not to go to war.

Article 2 provides:

> The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

That does not say we will submit all our controversies to adjustment by pacific means, but it says that we will not seek the solution for them by any other than by pacific means; namely, we will not go to war about them. If we are going specially to exclude the Monroe doctrine from the operation of the treaty by reason of the considerations now advanced by the Senator from Missouri, we should exclude the other subjects mentioned in the arbitration treaties also. But they are not in here because we do not agree to submit them to arbitration.

Is it the contention of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] or the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that under this treaty we have to submit domestic questions to arbitration? Is that the understanding of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BAYARD. May I make this suggestion to the Senator——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would rather the Senator would answer my question first. Is it the opinion of the Senator that under the treaty before us we are obliged to submit to arbitration questions that are within the domestic jurisdiction of this country?

Mr. BAYARD. No; I do not think we are obliged to do it; but the point is——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is it the opinion of the Senator that we are obliged to submit to arbitration under this treaty a controversy that involves the interests of third parties?

Mr. BAYARD. No; I have not taken that position at all. The position I take is that, having that arbitration treaty, that treaty being in existence, if we adopt the present Kellogg peace pact then we revert to that arbitration treaty in good honor and fair honor as a means of conciliation between the two countries between whom the treaty of arbitration has been negotiated.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am trying to point out that there is a perfectly good reason for excluding the Monroe doctrine from a treaty by which all questions are submitted to arbitration except those specifically named and referred to in the treaty, while it is wholly unnecessary to do so in this treaty, which is not a treaty of arbitration at all, but simply a treaty of no war.

Mr. BAYARD. May I make this suggestion to the Senator? We still have in contemplation, according to the report sent me from the State Department, some 23 other nations with whom we will set up these arbitration treaties excluding the Monroe doctrine and other matters excluded in the French arbitration treaty from which the Senator just read.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; we will not arbitrate those questions.

Mr. BAYARD. But under section 2 of the present treaty now pending before the Senate we say:

The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

I suppose that "pacific means" must mean some channel of a friendly nation. We have established that channel or are trying to establish that channel, and when we establish that channel we set up certain conditions precedent.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It simply means we will not endeavor to solve them by war; we will try to solve them in some other way.

Mr. BAYARD. But we decline to discuss those under these arbitration treaties.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Discuss what?

Mr. BAYARD. The four reservations made in the arbitration treaties. We say they are not subjects of arbitration.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We would decline to discuss them here. We will not seek a solution of them by war. That is all we say.

Mr. BAYARD. The point I am making is that we have in contemplation some 23 other arbitration treaties similar in form to those negotiated in 1928. Assuming we ratify the Kellogg treaty, or peace pact, and that thereafter we go ahead and complete the ratification and exchange of the other pending arbitration treaties, do we not in all conscience and in all morals bind ourselves under those new arbitration treaties to keep off of the four questions which are excepted?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course we do.

Mr. BAYARD. That is my contention exactly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; with respect to everything except the four questions; we have already set up machinery for the adjustment of them.

Mr. BAYARD. And they are not susceptible of arbitration or any other conciliation between our country and other countries.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; and that is why they are reserved in the treaty.

Mr. BAYARD. Why can they not be expressed by some form of reservation here?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is no occasion to exclude them here, because we do not agree by this treaty to submit anything to arbitration.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment? I want to be sure as to one thing in my own mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SACKETT. There can not be any breach of the Monroe doctrine, as I understand the Monroe doctrine, to be expounded by every Senator upon the floor without an attack of some kind.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. SACKETT. And if there should be an attack, then we would no longer be obligated under the treaty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We would be released.

Mr. SACKETT. And that is the reason why no mention of the Monroe doctrine is going to help this treaty one way or the other.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. The Monroe doctrine presupposes an attack by some nation upon one of the American Republics, which necessarily releases the United States, and that, as well as the fact that the Monroe doctrine is based upon self-defense, safeguards it completely, in my estimation.

In addition to what was put in the RECORD a few days ago, Mr. President, concerning the basis of the Monroe doctrine, I desire to submit some observations from some of our statesmen. I read first from a speech delivered by Mr. Webster in 1826. I am very glad that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has come into the Chamber, because he seemed to think the other day that we had no sort of support anywhere in the world now or at any time in the past for the Monroe doctrine. I will read what Mr. Webster said——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I did not make any such statement as that. The Senator has been cavilling here about accuracy this morning. When did I say that we had no support for the Monroe doctrine anywhere?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the Senator did not say so, but the Senator did say that a certain English statesman had made some sneering remark about the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I said that the minister of Great Britain during the controversy over the Venezuelan matter had made certain characterizations of the Monroe doctrine. I said that I did not know whether he had done so in his official correspondence or not, but that he did make the statement that it was not international law, but a bit of American impudence or insolence.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, it is a matter of very little concern what he did or what he did not say or what the quotation I am about to read says; it is merely by way of introduction to some other remark of Mr. Webster. He said:

* * * the sentiment which this declaration inspired was not confined to ourselves. Its force was felt everywhere, by all those who could understand its object and foresee its effect. In that very House of Commons of which the gentleman from South Carolina has spoken with such commendation, how was it received? Not only, sir, with approbation, but, I may say, with no little enthusiasm. While the leading minister, Mr. Canning, expressed his entire concurrence in the sentiments and opinions of the American President, his distinguished competitor, Mr. Brougham, in that popular body, less restrained by official decorum, and more at liberty to give utterance to all the feeling of the occasion, declared that no event had ever created greater joy, exultation, and gratitude among all the free men in Europe; that he felt pride in being connected by blood and language with the people of the United States; that the policy disclosed by the message became a great, a free, and an independent nation; and that he hoped his own country would be prevented by no mean pride or paltry jealousy from following so noble and glorious an example.

I merely desire to quote the following paragraph to show what Mr. Webster thought was the foundation of the Monroe doctrine. He says:

It is doubtless true, as I took occasion to observe the other day, that this declaration must be considered as founded on our rights and to spring mainly from a regard to their preservation. It did not commit us, at all events, to take up arms on any indication of hostile feeling by the powers of Europe toward South America. If, for example, all the states of Europe had refused to trade with South America until her states should return to their former allegiance, that would have furnished no cause of interference to us. Or if an armament had been furnished by the Allies to act against Provinces the most remote from us, as Chile or Buenos Aires, the distance of the scene of action diminishing our apprehension of danger and diminishing also our means of effectual interposition, might still have left us to content ourselves with remonstrance. But a very different case would have arisen if an army, equipped and maintained by these powers, had been landed on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico and commenced the war in our own immediate neighborhood. Such an event might justly be regarded as dangerous to ourselves and, on that ground, call for decided and immediate interference by us.

I will now read from the letter of Mr. Olney in the famous Venezuelan controversy.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to add——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. My recollection is, however, quite agreeing with all that the Senator has just said, that Daniel Webster does not fail to point out that, while the Monroe doctrine is grounded upon self-defense, we were not indifferent to its effect upon the struggling people of Central and South America.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course he does, and, of course, also does Mr. Clay.

I read from the Olney letter, as follows:

Is it true, then, that the safety and welfare of the United States are so concerned with the maintenance of the independence of every American state as against any European power as to justify or require the interposition of the United States whenever that independence is endangered? The question can be candidly answered in but one way.

Mr. Cleveland, in making his report of the transaction to the Congress, said:

Without attempting extended argument in reply to these positions—referring to the position of the English Government in the controversy—it may not be amiss to suggest that the doctrine upon which we stand is strong and sound, because its enforcement is important to our peace and safety as a nation, and is essential to the integrity of our free institutions and the tranquil maintenance of our distinctive form of Government. It was intended to apply to every stage of our national life, and can not become obsolete while our Republic endures. If the balance of power is justly a cause for jealous anxiety among the governments of the Old World, and a subject for our absolute noninterference, none the less is an observance of the Monroe doctrine of vital concern to our people and their Government.

I think the world understands that the Monroe doctrine is a part of our system of self-defense. I do not think there can be any question about that; at least we so understand it.

The next reason why this treaty should be clarified, according to the Senator from Missouri, is to get rid of anyone imagining that there is an obligation to apply sanctions; that is to say, we should provide by declaration of this body that when we agree not to go to war we do not mean that we will go to war. The contention that by this treaty we obligate ourselves to go to war against every nation violating it originates in a disordered mind. I care not who may have said in Europe that there is an implied obligation on the part of every nation to assail that nation which violates the treaty, I insist that it goes against common sense. Greece invades Bulgaria in violation of the treaty. Of course we would deplore anything of the kind, but under what kind of reasoning can it be argued that we have obligated ourselves by this treaty to go to the aid of Bulgaria? It would not clarify this treaty to say we were under no such obligation. It would introduce confusion worse confounded.

Then we ought to have some clarification, it is advanced, so that it will be understood that there is no recognition of the binding force of the treaties named in the notes. The treaties named in the notes are the covenant of the League of Nations, the Locarno treaties, and the neutrality treaties. Why should we undertake to say that there is or there is not any binding force in the covenant of the League of Nations among those who entered into it? Why should we undertake to say that France's neutrality treaty with Poland and France's neutrality treaty with Czechoslovakia are binding or are not binding upon either Czechoslovakia or Poland? I do not think the Senator from Missouri could possibly have made that suggestion reflectingly.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Perhaps, Mr. President, in view of the Senator's polite characterization, I possess a disordered brain; that was the charge the Senator made here; and he made it against a good many other Senators, because there are nearly 30 Senators who have expressed the same view. Our brains may all be disordered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. However that may be, I desire merely to add that no such suggestion has been made in any of the correspondence between any of the nations with respect to this treaty. No intimation of that kind is carried in any of the correspondence. Why should we pay any attention to what some newspaper in some country of Europe may say about this matter or what some individual may say about it? What is said in this Chamber in debate, it is said, can not be resorted to for the purpose of interpreting this treaty. How much more is that true of what has been said by some newspaper in Belgrade, for instance, or in Prague, or by some member of the Swedish Storthing as to what he or it thinks would be the obligation of a nation under this treaty; and why should we take note of such things officially in our action here?

The treaty needs no clarification. It is in no sense ambiguous. The notion that peril to our Nation lurks in it is "wrought of such stuff as dreams are and as baseless as the fantastic visions of the morning."

Mr. JONES. A Senator asked me to call for a quorum at the conclusion of the address of the Senator from Montana; so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to submit some observations, and I would just as soon submit them now as later.

Mr. JONES. Very well. I rather think that would be satisfactory to the Senator who asked me to call for a quorum at the conclusion of the address of the Senator from Montana. I think he thought something else was coming up. So I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is regrettable that the advocates of the treaty under consideration were compelled to engage in a struggle of no mean proportions to secure its consideration. A naval bill is on the calendar which calls for an expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars for the construction of war vessels. It was insisted by some Senators that that measure should have precedence over the peace treaty, and only after a bitter contest did the multilateral treaty secure a superior place upon the calendar. But the naval bill is pressing upon the heels of this measure and to-morrow it is quite likely the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the cruiser bill, which embarks our country upon an era of naval construction the ultimate cost of which no one can predict. To many it is inexplicable that there should be so much apparent eagerness for world peace and so strong a desire for preparations for war. There has been a nation-wide propaganda, particularly during the past year, for what has been denominated "national preparedness." Scores of citizens have gone through the land declaring that our country was not safe and was menaced by foes; that its security was imperiled; that only by enormous appropriations could our Nation be placed in a position where its vital interests were protected and its integrity assured.

And the administration has pursued this irreconcilable and inconsistent course. It has loudly declared that the United States is for world peace; that it renounces war and solemnly promises to settle all controversies by pacific means. It would seem that it believes that there is some virtue in the renunciation of war and the pledge to settle disputes of every kind by pacific means. If it does not so believe then it is insincere in attempting to secure the ratification of this treaty. If the Secretary of State had no belief in the efficacy of this treaty, in solemn obligations entered into by the United States and other nations, under which war was renounced, then this treaty should not have been negotiated and its ratification should not be urged.

The President of the United States, as well as the Secretary of State, have proclaimed that the ratification of this treaty would constitute a notable contribution to world peace. The influence of the administration has been employed to secure its ratification, but while engaged in negotiating the treaty and attempting to secure its ratification both the President of the United States and the Secretary of State have lent strength to the movement in favor of appropriations amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars to build additional naval craft and to carry out a policy of "preparedness."

Mr. President, there are many people who can not reconcile these positions of the President and the Secretary of State. They will not only regard their conduct as inconsistent but many do not hesitate to say that the United States is insincere, if not hypocritical, in demanding the ratification of the multilateral treaty and at the same time insisting that hundreds of millions shall be expended in military preparations. Speaking for myself, I can not reconcile these divergent positions of the administration. In my opinion, many people of the world will charge the United States with insincerity when they learn that the United States ratified a peace treaty—a treaty renouncing war and sacredly and solemnly promising to settle all disputes of every kind and character by pacific means, and synchronizing with the ratification of the treaty, it appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars for military preparations. Such conduct will not inspire confidence among the nations of the world in the good faith of this Nation. It will tend to arouse suspicions among millions who will regard the military preparations as a revelation of the true mind of America and the true purpose of this Government. Yesterday the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] pushed through the Senate three or four bills calling for millions of dollars to strengthen the Navy; to elevate guns, and to make our fighting ships more powerful. To-morrow he will demand the passage of the cruiser bill, and with the sentiment manifest in the Senate it seems hardly possible to prevent its passage. With the passage of the cruiser bill additional appropriations will be required for naval and other military purposes. No one can foretell what the direct and indirect cost of the cruiser bill will be. The naval personnel will be largely increased; various forms of auxiliary craft will be required; naval bases will be strengthened; the ordinary expenses of the Navy will be augmented, so that it can be safely predicted that the effects of the bill directly and indirectly will add perhaps a billion dollars to the burdens of the American people.

So in the consideration of the treaty we are met with the thesis that a solemn renunciation of war and a pledge to settle all international disputes by pacific means, call for naval armaments and military preparations. In other words, we solemnly abjure war and pledge the honor of the Nation to settle every controversy by peaceable means, and then proceed with increased zeal to strengthen our Navy and carry forward additional military preparations. It would seem to me that if the administration had confidence in the efficacy and virtue of the multilateral treaty which they profess it possesses, they would manifest that faith by seeking to exorcise from the world the spirit of war and earnestly strive to create an international will for peace.

There is much psychology in a treaty of this character. If it is effective as an instrumentality for the promotion of peace, it will be largely because it acts upon the minds of the people and develops or creates a sentiment against war with all its horrors, and an unconquerable faith that peace can be realized. This treaty should aid in the mobilization of the moral forces of the world; but it will be deprived of its potency and strength if the nations signing it confess its impotency by increasing their military forces, and talk of the imminence of war. German writers said much about the "will to conquer" and the "glory of war," and the necessity for Germany to take her "place in the sun" and be prepared as a military nation to impose her will upon others. Thus a war psychology was developed. The talk of war in Germany produced reactions in other countries, and Europe for years lived in fear of military conflicts. Mothers retired at night not knowing but that with the morning sun a bugle call would be heard summoning their loved ones to military duty.

Apparently we have not learned the lesson that most wars are the product of fear and that fear is too often inspired by the clamorous voices of militarists. Civic and other organizations in our country are being appealed to by military officers and by others to give their support to what is denominated "preparedness." They are told our country is in danger and that it is necessary for its protection that we should spend more for military purposes than was ever expended in peace times by our country. Appropriations for the current fiscal year for the ordinary expenses of the Army and Navy alone, exceeded $700,000,000. The appropriations for the next fiscal year will exceed this stupendous amount. We hold out by this treaty a hand of friendship, but in the other hand we carry a sword.

I regret that the President of the United States employed language in his recent Armistice Day speech which some will construe as provocative of war and evidence of a disbelief in the efficacy and virtue of the Kellogg-Briand treaty. The President has been regarded as a man of peace, and many of his addresses have proclaimed the importance of peace and the evils of war. In the address referred to he declares:

> The whole essence of war is destruction. It is the negation and the antithesis of human progress. No good thing ever came out of war that could not better have been secured by reason and conscience.

In the face of this declaration the President supported the naval bill offered by Secretary Wilbur in December last which called for over a billion dollars for new naval construction.

The President, in the address referred to, further says:

> We do not know of any nation which has ever been able to provide arms enough so as always to be at peace. Fifteen years ago the most thoroughly equipped people of Europe were Germany and France.

In view of this declaration it was to be expected that the President would give enthusiastic support to the multilateral treaty, and it seems to me that the expectation would be strengthened if he would as earnestly seek to relieve the people from the heavy burdens involved in our military and naval expenditures and oppose programs and policies which would result in enormous additions to our Navy. While declaring in effect that no nation has been able to devise sufficient arms to always be at peace, he has, nevertheless, given his support to a naval program that when completed will exceed a billion dollars. The President has seen the evils of militarism. He has pointed out that with the military preparations of Germany and other nations, war was not avoided; and yet he has, as I have stated, approved of a program which will impose upon the United States enormous burdens.

The President further said that—

> The eternal question before the nations is how to prevent war and how to defend themselves if it comes.

He then states that—

> There are those who see no answer except military preparation.

I submit, Mr. President, that the military and naval measures which have been offered in the House and in the Senate during the past year, and which have received the approval of the executive department, give color to the charge that the United States supports militaristic policies, and instead of promoting peace, as it should, it devotes too great a portion of its revenues to military preparations. Is it not military preparation upon the part of the United States when it expends more than $700,000,000 annually for the ordinary expenses of the Army and Navy and projects a naval program of 71 war vessels, with ancillary naval auxiliaries and instrumentalities the aggregate cost of which will be a billion and a half dollars? Already our military and naval leaders are preparing a program for the replacement of battleships which, if carried into execution, will greatly increase our annual naval expenditures.

Mr. President, the loud clamors for preparedness are inconsistent with our appeals for world peace. They add to the fears of the world and contribute to the development of military and war psychology.

I can not understand the President's position when he refers to the extensive military preparations of Germany and France and the resulting war, and then states—

> If the European countries had neglected their defenses it is probable that war would have come much sooner.

So-called preparedness by a few nations, as many believe, provoked the war, and the nations which were not militaristic were drawn into the vortex. Those nations which spent enormous sums in preparing for war did not "neglect their defenses." Consequently it may not be said when they had not neglected their defenses and war ensued, that it resulted from failure to prepare for war. The nations which did not concern themselves so much in military preparedness were not the occasion of the war. It seems to me inconsistent to contend, in the face of the fact that the military nations that had not neglected their defenses were responsible for the war, "that it is probable that the war would have come sooner had they made less military preparations."

The President states:

> To be ready for defense is not to be guilty of aggression. We can have military preparation without assuming a military spirit.

Mr. President, when nations make preparations for war, they have in mind other nations against whom they are preparing, and when they talk of military preparations or "preparedness" they create in the minds of the people fears or resentment and even malice and hatred. These situations finally culminate in military explosions and devastating wars. Military preparations presuppose national dangers and insecurity, and national insecurity postulates national foes and dangerous enemies. It might be interesting to inquire what military nation can be found that did not develop a military spirit. The development of a military spirit is concomitant with military preparations. Lord Grey, in his Memoirs, speaks of armaments as one of the greatest causes of war. The President, in his address, says it is our duty to "maintain an adequate Army and Navy." No one disputes that, but the question arises, What is an adequate army and an adequate navy? Denmark has practically abolished her army, which consists of a small patrol force. She has no foes and entertains no fears. What nation menaces the United States? Whom have we to fear?

In 1920 our naval officers contended that an adequate Navy for the United States required the carrying out of the 1916 program at a cost directly and indirectly of more than a billion and a half dollars. We had, in 1920, a Navy superior to any in the world, and I may say in passing that our Navy to-day is not equaled by that of Great Britain or any other power.

Returning to the question of what is an adequate army and navy, Germany insisted that when her military forces were greater than any other country in the world they were not adequate. The most militant nations have always contended that their military forces, whether on land or sea, were necessary for their protection and came within the requirements or formula of an adequate army and navy. Naval authorities in the United States declared in 1920 and 1921 that an adequate navy in the United States required the construction of nearly 100 naval vessels, the cost of which would be at least one and a half billion dollars.

The President further declares—

> That all human experience demonstrates that a country which makes reasonable preparation for defense is less likely to be subject to hostile attack and less likely to suffer a violation of its rights which might lead to war.

Mr. President, this sentence, fairly construed, is unobjectionable, but the question always arises when the problem of national defense or reasonable preparation for defense is under consideration. What are reasonable preparations and what is reasonably necessary for defense? I repeat that those nations which have taken the lead in preparations for defense and have made what they call reasonable preparations for defense have produced or inspired war or have been the most active participants in war. I am not contending that nations should not take reasonable steps for the protection of themselves and their citizens. Indeed, I take the opposite position. That is an obligation and a duty which must be met; but too often nations under the pretext of national defense prepared for war and made it the excuse for letting loose the thunderbolts of destruction. When Bismarck had prepared Germany for war he sought, by subtle and reprehensible means, to involve France in war.

I am challenging attention to these statements of the President which are being used to support demands for stupendous appropriations for our Army and Navy, to show at least their apparent inconsistency with the position of the Chief Executive and the administration in urging the ratification of the pending treaty. They insist that this treaty is one of the epochal events in the history of mankind, and many supporters of the administration declare that it presages an era of universal peace and leads to the abolition of war. My position is that our Government should show its faith in this treaty by promoting international conferences for the reduction of armaments and the setting up of instrumentalities supplemental to this treaty. Machinery will be needed and agencies required to settle international disputes. It is not sufficient to renounce war and solemnly agree to settle all disputes by pacific means; there must be organizations and agencies, judicial tribunals, and arbitration boards in order to realize the objective. But the President is preaching preparedness for war, and supports huge military appropriations. We would exhibit greater faith in this treaty if we were to bend every effort to secure international disarmament.

The President in the address to which I have referred gives expression to a genuine peace policy when he declares:

> The whole scheme of human progress and civilization requires that we should have faith in men and in nations. * * *

In these words the President states the basis of the multilateral treaty—faith in the honor of men and nations; faith in their solemn promises to renounce war and to follow the paths of peace. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to the discussions of the multilateral treaty before us and have been amazed at some of the views expressed. The treaty is free from ambiguity and should not have provoked the protracted debate which has occurred. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has just delivered an able address which, in my view, disposes of some of the objections which have been urged to the treaty.

In my opinion there is no reason for reservations or amendments to the treaty. So far as I am concerned, I shall be glad to vote for it without any change in its phraseology or any explanatory notes or reservations. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] has insisted that the Committee on Foreign Relations submit a report in the nature of an interpretation of the treaty, or at any rate as an explanation of their views as to what the treaty means. Mr. President, I have respect for the members of that committee, but their interpretation of the treaty, I submit, should not be controlling upon Senators. If the treaty is ambiguous and uncertain, then it should perhaps be amended or, at any rate, ambiguities should be removed by explanatory reservations. Where an instrument is clear and unambiguous, then interpretations are not needed. The duty rests upon Senators to determine as best they can the meaning of measures presented for their consideration. The responsibility rests upon them for their action. It might not be regarded as a valid excuse if a Senator were to say, "I relied upon the statements of some other Senator as to the meaning of a measure or a treaty, and finding the interpretation to be wrong I seek immunity from criticism." Of course, the Senate should be advised with respect to an important document such as this treaty is in regard to all matters pertinent and germane. Whatever information that bears upon the treaty they are entitled to possess. Indeed, it is their duty to secure all available information, and having secured it and acquainted themselves with the treaty, the responsibility rests upon them when they vote upon the question of its ratification.

Mr. President, I desire to answer in a general way some of the attacks which have been made upon the treaty. Many of them turn upon the exceptions stated in the interpretative notes of the various signatories, as well as certain statements by Secretary Kellogg. One listening to the debates could not be otherwise than impressed with the view that the League of Nations and the Locarno pact and the treaties referred to in the various notes constituted serious objections to the Kellogg treaty; in other words, that the League of Nations and the obligations resulting from the various treaties referred to are obstacles to world peace and valid reasons for not ratifying the treaty under consideration. Undoubtedly those nations which are members of the League of Nations, and those which are parties to the Locarno pact and the treaties referred to, are unwilling to weaken the effect of these treaties or to destroy whatever organizations have resulted therefrom. There has been no evasion by the principal signatories to the treaty in regard to this matter. They have definitely indicated that they were unwilling to enter into any treaty that would be inconsistent with their obligations under the Versailles treaty or the other treaties referred to. It is manifest that they believe a renunciation of war and the settlement of international disputes by pacific means, are not incompatible with their obligations under the important treaties mentioned.

It is true that sanctions have been provided in the covenant of the league and that obligations have been assumed which may authorize the obligors to engage in military activities; but the covenant as interpreted and the obligations as understood do not compel or require war, aggressive or otherwise, upon the part of signatories to this treaty, or any conduct inconsistent with the renunciation of war or the pacific settlement of international disputes. I think no criticism can be justly leveled against Mr. Kellogg or representatives of some of the signatories to the treaty before us because of their frank statements of fact, nor because they do not seek to absolve the members of the league and the signatories to the Locarno pact and the treaties of neutrality from obligations which they have assumed thereunder.

Mr. President, I should not vote for this treaty, much as I desire to, if it could be construed to mean that the members of the league would be compelled to abjure their solemn obligations under the Versailles treaty. I should not want my country to enter into a treaty that would compel a nation to be guilty of Punic faith.

I have wondered, in listening to the debate, whether there was a desire by some Senators to destroy the league and to make odious the treaties under the Locarno pact, and to supersede them by the pending treaty. If there is such a purpose, in my opinion it should be abandoned. The league has served an important purpose in preserving peace among the nations of Europe, and in directing world affairs amidst storms and tempests that threatened military repercussions, not only in Europe but in many other parts of the world.

It must be remembered that the treaty before us relies upon no sanctions; there is no element of force behind it. It does not outlaw war in a technical and proper sense. In any effective plan to outlaw war there must be agencies and instrumentalities defining war and providing for the determination of who are offenders; and, finally, there must be machinery and authority for the punishment of offending and recalcitrant nations. There may be renunciation of war, and at the same time organizations among nations which have renounced war as a national policy, armed with authority to repress lawless nations and thus prevent or terminate military activities.

Undoubtedly there are many people in this and other countries who misconceive the scope of the pending treaty, and who will be disappointed in its accomplishments. I have no doubt that there are millions who believe that this treaty will prevent all future wars; that when the nations of the world declare that they renounce war as a national policy, and pledge themselves to a pacific settlement of all controversies, that war, with all its horror and evils, will no longer affright the nations and fill the world with woe and sorrow. It is to be regretted that these results will not follow the signing of this treaty.

The signatories to this treaty undoubtedly believe in the right of various nations to decline to abandon the agencies now in existence, which they regard as important for the present at least, in aiding in the preservation of world peace.

The Briand-Kellogg treaty, as I have stated, sets up no machinery for interpreting the treaty or punishing or restraining its violation. It rests upon good will and upon the conscience and national honor of peoples and nations. Perhaps it is a weakness of the treaty that it contains no provisions for its interpretation and no agencies to settle in a pacific way disputes which may arise among the nations adhering to the treaty. Obviously this treaty will call for additional international agreements. When nations renounce war and solemnly declare that all international disputes shall be settled by pacific means, they will supplement such declaration by further treaties to aid in discharging the obligations contained in this treaty.

Who shall say that a solemn obligation to renounce war is meaningless and will make no contribution to world peace? It is true that nations have violated treaties and doubtless in the future will be untrue to international pledges; but it is equally true that such violations will result in condemnation proportioned to the development of international morality and conceptions of national responsibility.

The world is not devoid of honor. It exists among men and it is found in nations. The world has made advancement; there is a higher standard of individual, national, and international morality to-day than ever before. Humanity is slowly and painfully, but with certainty, marching to higher levels; there is less of provincialism and racial and national prejudice than ever before. The world is growing smaller. All parts are being brought into close association, and the prejudices of the past are yielding to ethical and spiritual influences which seek international friendship if not world solidarity.

Some people scoff at the "public opinion" of the world and the good faith and conscience of the world.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] grew dramatic and eloquent when he discussed the question of "public opinion." Yet I venture the assertion that it constitutes the most powerful influence in all the world to-day. It is an imponderable force, the effect of which may not be easily determined or measured, the effect of which will persist, and the influences of which will persist, as the agencies which it has influenced multiply in the world.

It is a fact, Mr. President, that public opinion, imperfect as it is, oftentimes unreasoning, and too often resting upon faulty foundations and lack of information, does influence if not control national and international conduct; and it is equally true that as the means of communication increase and international contacts become more numerous public opinion will take on additional force and virtue and become more powerful in determining individual, community, national, and international conduct.

The settlement of international disputes can be brought about by two means, and two means only, war or law; and when I use the word "law," of course, I mean its corollaries—conferences, agreements, international law that may be developed through agreements and treaties, and usages among the nations of the world.

If war is renounced measures must and will be devised to settle pacifically all disputes arising. There is an equivalent for war. Disputes arise between neighbors and friends and communities, but civilization has pointed the way to settle them, not as they were settled in past ages but by legal and pacific means. And so nations will devise methods to observe peace and settle controversies.

I advert to the question heretofore alluded to, namely, that the claim is made that this treaty contains exceptions which, in the aggregate, devitalize the treaty and render it wholly worthless as an agency for preventing war and establishing peace. The treaty is criticized because as interpreted it excepts defensive wars, and yet we have not so far advanced in international morality and Christian sentiment as to agree to abolish the right of self-defense. We all know that a solemn agreement for its abolition would not always be observed. If, however, international agencies were set up with the consent and approval of the world, with positive authority and jurisdiction over all controversies, I believe there would be few occasions when a nation would rebel against the decisions of such agencies.

Is it just to criticize nations, as has been done during the debate, which have entered into solemn engagements for the preservation of peace, because when they adhere to the Kellogg treaty they declare their purpose to carry out existing obligations? The members of the League of Nations believe that sanctions may be necessary to enforce peace, or, at any rate, to prevent war. Do we desire to have members of the league repudiate their obligations and undermine the integrity and authority of the league?

In my opinion the League of Nations is the greatest organization in the world to-day for the promotion of world peace. I am not in accord with those who denounce the league and declare that the terms of the provisions of the Versailles treaty are so unjust that the treaty must be scrapped and destroyed. It is conceded that the Versailles treaty contains some unfair and perhaps unjust provisions. What treaty ever written did not? The situation following the World War finds no parallel in the history of the world. The problems confronting those who had the responsibility of drafting a treaty exceeded the burdens resting upon any treaty makers. Most of the world had been in the war. Peoples for centuries had been submerged; nations had been destroyed and their territory partitioned. Peoples had been conquered and brought under sovereignties and governments not of their own choice. Alsace-Lorraine had been taken from France. Poland had been dismembered. Millions of the Serb race had been incorporated into the Austrian Empire. The Turk had superimposed his cruel authority upon Christian peoples whose territories had been ravished and whose people had been slaughtered. Geographical and ethnic lines had been disregarded and cruel wrongs and injustices had been perpetrated by autocratic governments upon many races within many European nations.

Declarations had been made by the allied nations during the war that the peace terms should embody provisions rectifying some of the wrongs and injustices under which the people suffered. The populations of central Europe were so intermixed that it was humanly impossible to prepare a treaty that would meet every situation and do exact justice to all. It was certain that no treaty, no matter by whom prepared, would contain provisions satisfactory to all. I may add that the paramount reason which led Woodrow Wilson to so tenaciously cling to the idea of a League of Nations was the knowledge that any treaty, prepared when the atmosphere of war had not been cleared and when the fears and animosities resulting from the war were still in the hearts and minds of the people, would contain some injustices which in time must be removed. He believed that such rectification should come through councils of the nations and through agencies set up by them rather than by the sword.

Who is there bold enough to say that he could have written a better treaty and could have met the situation in a better manner? The league is accepted by the peoples of Europe, and they would regard its impairment or destruction with the gravest apprehension. It is to them a tower of strength, a protecting agency, a rock, and a fortress under the walls of which they seek and find refuge.

The members of the League of Nations have covenanted to maintain peace and to avoid aggression. To accomplish these ends they have created machinery and set up instrumentalities. We can not hope, indeed we should not desire, that this beneficent organization should disband. The Locarno pact and the treaty as interpreted by those who are parties to the same are in harmony with the terms of the treaty before us. The obligations under those treaties are promotive of peace and tend to prevent war.

While it is true the Kellogg treaty provides for no sanctions and the League of Nations does, it is believed by those who are members of the league and are parties to the Kellogg treaty, that the provisions for sanctions and the obligations under the treaties referred to, will make more certain that the renunciation of war will be effective in promoting peace and that the settlement of controversies by pacific means will, with more certainty, be realized. Germany is a member of the league and is a party to the Locarno pact. Her interest in the league is great, and her association with members of the league is adding to her prestige and power. All members of the league regard it as an active and powerful force for the happiness and security of the world.

Much time has been devoted to the interpretative notes of the British Government. The purpose of the notes is to advise the signatories to the treaty, that the British Government has obligations under the league and the Locarno pact which it may not avoid, and that for the protection of the Empire and in its defense, it has vital interests in various parts of the world. Whether the United States signs the treaty or not, Great Britain regards herself as having these obligations.

This treaty does not require that the United States recognize the various interpretations placed by the members of the League of Nations upon the Versailles treaty, nor does it make any commitments, as to what if any obligations Great Britain has with respect to various possessions and territories in different parts of the world. We are not interpreting the Versailles treaty or the Locarno pact or the treaties of neutrality. This treaty does not interpret the treaties or define obligations thereunder any more than it attempts to define what is self-defense or what steps must be taken by a nation in order to protect itself. This treaty rests upon the good faith, upon the honor and integrity of nations. Treaties which require that upon the happening of certain contingencies one or more of the signatories shall engage in military operations must, in the final analysis, rest upon the good faith of the nations signing the treaties. Treaties calling for punitive action and for the application of sanctions, fundamentally rest, as I have stated, upon the good faith and honor of the nations signing them. If Great Britain conceives that she has duties under the Locarno pact or the Versailles treaty, the performance of which is not in conflict with her obligations under this treaty, we can not insist that she abandon what she conceives to be her obligations under those treaties. Perhaps there are persons in the United States who desire that Great Britain withdraw from India or from South Africa or Australia or, for that matter, from Canada; and yet we know that such a course is not probable and that if adopted the results might be injurious. It might not be conducive to the peace and welfare of the world.

Certain it is that for the present no treaty is possible which in terms denies the right of the signatories thereto to defend their vital interests in their respective countries. Would it be wise for Great Britain to abandon India? Do the people of Australia, New Zealand, or Canada, or, for that matter, the people of the world, desire Great Britain to renounce all connection with these countries? It is believed that if some of the British dominions were to set up independent governments and renounce their allegiance to the King, it might result in an international situation harmful to the world.

Is there any desire in the United States that Germany withdraw from the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium? These treaties, as well as the covenant of the League of Nations, are believed to be in the interest of security; and, imperfect as they are, they are conducive to world peace.

Why then object to these "exceptions" stated in the interpretative notes? Most of the arguments against the treaty are arguments against the league, and the other treaties which have been referred to.

Certainly the American people do not desire, as a condition precedent to becoming parties to the Kellogg treaty, that all other treaties should be scrapped. This treaty will strengthen the other treaties, and they add to the strength of this treaty. They seek the security of the peoples of the world and tend to prevent the lighting of the fires of war and the devastation wrought by international conflicts. If the sanctions of the league deter nations from war, then such sanctions are factors contributing to the fulfillment of the terms of the Kellogg treaty.

It is no objection to this treaty that the league and the Locarno pact tend to preserve the status quo. The nations within the league and within the pacts referred to desire the maintenance of the status quo until by peaceful means rectification can be made and injustices removed. If boundaries fixed in the Versailles treaty should be changed, it were better that the change come through negotiation and the employment of the agencies set up by the nations than by the sword upon bloody battle fields. One only has to examine conditions in Europe to see the progress which has been made toward European peace since the Versailles treaty was signed.

MONROE DOCTRINE

It has been insisted that before the Senate ratifies the treaty there should be an exception in favor of the Monroe doctrine. I agree entirely with Secretary Kellogg and Mr. BORAH that the right of self-defense is inherent in nations and that the treaty does not invalidate or vitiate that right. I agree with them that the right of self-defense comprehends all legitimate and honest measures necessary for the protection of the United States and its vital interests. The Monroe doctrine, as properly interpreted, has been regarded by many as an essential feature or part of the necessary program of self-defense. But our Government can not, under the guise of self-defense, so interpret the Monroe doctrine as to constitute it an engine of offense or oppression.

In the interest of accuracy I might add that the right of self-defense may be limited. A nation may limit by treaty many of its sovereign rights. It may limit its military establishment and the number of its battleships. It may limit rights which come within the category of self-defense. So that the statement that the right of self-defense is inherent and inalienable, and can not be waived, needs some qualification. To what extent the right of self-defense or protection can be limited, I do not pretend to say.

Under the Monroe doctrine the United States can not carry out imperialistic policies or impose upon Latin America unjust measures. That it has been perverted and misinterpreted and misapplied no one can deny.

I agree with statements of Mr. Kirby Page, editor of the World Tomorrow in his excellent article on "The Monroe Doctrine and World Peace" that the use of marines and gunboats to the extent that they have been employed by the United States in Nicaragua and Haiti would be a violation of the terms of the treaty, which calls for the settlement of all disputes or conflicts through pacific means. In my opinion, the United States was not acting under the Monroe doctrine in carrying on military operations in those countries, nor can its conduct be justified.

There have been too many cases of intervention under the pretext of enforcing the Monroe doctrine, and this has prevented the growth and development of that spirit of amity and friendship which should bind Latin America and the United States together. In view of the contradictory interpretations of the Monroe doctrine and the evils which have resulted therefrom, and by reason of various acts under these interpretations, it is not to be wondered at that in some Latin-American States there is no enthusiasm for the Monroe doctrine. The fact is that the Monroe doctrine is differently interpreted by the people of the United States and by those holding positions in various departments of the Government.

I submit that there is no agreement among Americans as to what the Monroe doctrine is. Recently communications were sent to hundreds of leading citizens of the United States asking their views upon the Monroe doctrine. The contrariety of views was somewhat astonishing, and yet it is not to be wondered at when there have been so many misinterpretations and so many political and partisan interpretations in the United States of a doctrine or principle which, as originally announced, was clear and definite.

The conditions existing throughout the world immediately before and prior to the announcement of the Monroe doctrine are different from those obtaining now. The doctrine of legitimacy prevailed in Europe; autocratic governments ruled the people. A political system existed which opposed democratic institutions and the spirit of liberty throughout the world. The Holy Alliance sought to place an oppressive system, not only upon the peoples of Europe but the inhabitants of most of the Western Hemisphere.

I do not assent to the position taken by the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] this morning that we were motivated in the announcement of the Monroe doctrine by altruism, by a desire to protect the South American Republics. We were moved by a desire to protect the United States, because we feared that if the machinations of the Holy Alliance were executed the safety of this Republic would be jeopardized and the liberty of the American people imperiled.

The European system of government was regarded by Monroe and the American people as dangerous to free institutions and republican forms of government. They believed that if the principles of the Holy Alliance were carried out in Latin America the security of this Republic would be endangered. They believed that this Republic stood as a great sentinel guarding the way of liberty and democracy and that the fastening upon Latin America of an autocratic system regnant in Europe would jeopardize the existence of this Republic and menace the freedom of American citizens. The Monroe doctrine as conceived was to safeguard the United States from the machinations of the Holy Alliance and from the encroachments of European powers in the Western Hemisphere.

As stated by Prof. W. R. Shepherd—

> Throughout the message of Monroe * * * there runs like a red thread one connecting idea and purpose—the defense of the United States against aggression from overseas. No strain of altruism is there; no trace of a desire to do more than to defend what was justly ours; no thought of doing anything other than protect the national interests of the United States and them alone. * * *

Mr. John W. Foster, one of America's statesmen, stated that the primary object of the Monroe doctrine was—> * * * to prevent the permanent occupation by European nations of any territory of the American States or the overthrow of their political institutions. * * *

He also stated that various administrations have declared that—

> * * * European governments are free to make war upon the American States or to resort to force to support their complaints, provided they observe the two conditions stated as to territory and political institutions. * * *

Mr. President, I have heard the statement upon a number of occasions in the Senate that intervention by any foreign country in Latin America would be a violation of the Monroe doctrine. In my opinion, that view is erroneous and if persisted in will lead to unfortunate complications.

Mr. Foster, in one of his statements, referred to the act of Spain in 1864 in declaring war against Peru and Chile, and adds that—> * * * after having received assurances from Spain that it had no intention to reannex those Republics or to subvert their political system, Secretary Seward * * * instructed our ministers that "we concede to every nation the right to make peace or war, for such causes other than political or ambitious, as it thinks right and wise." * * *

Mr. Foster states that in 1860 Secretary Cass informed the French representative in Washington—> * * * that the United States did not call in question the right of France to compel the Government of Mexico, by force if necessary, to do it justice. * * *

Mr. Foster also refers to the incident of the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Spain approaching the United States—> * * * with a view to securing its joint action with them in a military expedition to compel Mexico to satisfy their complaints for the murder of their subjects and the destruction of their property. * * *

However, this proposition was declined, but Secretary Seward said that the President—> did not question that the sovereigns represented have undoubted right to decide for themselves the fact whether they have sustained grievances, and to resort to war against Mexico for redress, and have a right also to levy war severally or jointly. * * *

Mr. Foster also states that a similar attitude was assumed by the United States when, in 1902, the British, German, and Italian Governments sent a naval expedition to Venezuela to enforce the claims of their subjects, and he adds:

> * * * that many other instances may be cited for the forcible interference of European governments with American countries to redress the complaints of their subjects.

France in 1838 blockaded the ports of Mexico as an act of redress for unsatisfied demands. In 1842 and 1844 Great Britain blockaded the ports of Nicaragua. In 1851 she blockaded the whole coast of Salvador; in 1862 and 1863 seized Brazilian vessels in Brazilian waters as acts of reprisal; and in 1895 resorted to force to bring about a settlement of certain demands against Nicaragua.

Prof. John Bassett Moore has tabulated a list of armed interventions in Central and South America by European powers and states (Political Science Quarterly, Vol. II, p. 26):

We have not assumed to forbid European powers to settle their quarrels with American States by the use of force any more than we have hesitated to do so ourselves.

He refers to the letter to Secretary Cass to our minister in Spain October 21, 1858, as follows:

* * * with respect to the causes of war between Spain and Mexico, the United States have no concern and do not undertake to judge them. Nor do they claim to interpose in any hostilities which may take place. Their policy of observation and interference is limited to the permanent subjugation of any portion of the territory of Mexico or of another American State to any European power whatever.

Yet, Mr. President, in the face of these clear declarations of the limitations of the Monroe doctrine, some Americans, with an arrogance not to be justified, have so expanded the Monroe doctrine as to make the United States a sort of protector of all Latin-American countries. Those countries have not asked us to protect them. We have solemnly affirmed over and over again that they are independent states, and that small states have the same rights in the forum of international relations and international law as have the large and powerful states. When we gather around the table with the Pan American States to discuss Pan American problems, each of the states of Costa Rica, San Salvador, and Haiti has the same rights and the same number of votes in the determination of Pan American problems and questions as has the United States. Unfortunately there are Americans who disregard the rights of these sovereign nations and pervert the Monroe doctrine, the result of which has been the creation of resentments and animosities which militate against the peace and friendship which should exist between South and Central America and the United States.

Mr. President, I have here, apropos of the statement just made, some articles from the Chicago Daily News. I read just a sentence or two from an article written from Buenos Aires, by Mr. John W. White, who has been making a study of the economic and political conditions of South America, and particularly with reference to the relations between South American States and the United States. In one of his articles Mr. White says:

American prestige in South America has been lessened almost to the vanishing point as a result of the lack of centralized control in the direction of our foreign relations. Most of the bitterness that exists in South America to-day against the United States and its people arises from the entrance into the foreign field of several organs of the American Government which share none of the responsibility of the State Department for maintaining international good will.

* * * * * * *

To observers in South America it is apparent that the United States is proceeding with the development of a system which threatens to break down the effective control of America's foreign relations, with serious effect upon American business. A frequent question asked by American business men at their lunch tables in Buenos Aires, Rio, Santiago, and other South American Republics, is "Who's running our Government, anyway?"

If I may pause to reply to this question, I would say that many persons believe that trusts and monopolies and business interests exercise great influence in our domestic and foreign policies, and powerfully affect our industrial and economic life.

Is it Secretary Jardine with his prohibitions against South American meat and agricultural products? Is it Hoover with his pronouncements against rubber and coffee monopolies while he is supporting a cotton monopoly? Is it Davis, demanding that South American emigration to the United States be put on a quota basis?

* * * Or is it the Department of State?

Then, the writer proceeds to say:

This is not an academic question.

Then, he adds:

It requires only American marines in Nicaragua or some other political action by the United States to fan this ill will into a flame of hostility. Street meetings are held every day in some part of Buenos Aires to denounce the United States, and on more than one occasion attempts have been made to organize hostile demonstrations against the American Embassy.

I shall not consume the time of the Senate to read further from these interesting articles, and from many others which I have, appearing in Latin-American papers, as well as in books and papers published in the United States. These publications are criticisms of the United States in its treatment of Latin-American States and its recent perverted interpretation of the Monroe doctrine.

Secretary Seward, in a letter to our minister in Austria on September 11, 1863, said:

* * * when France made war against Mexico we asked of France explanations of her objects and purpose. She answered that it was a war for the redress of grievances; that she did not intend to permanently occupy or dominate Mexico; and that she should leave to the people of Mexico a free choice of institutions of government. Under these circumstances the United States adopted and they have since maintained entire neutrality between the belligerents in harmony with the traditional policy in regard to foreign wars.

Under the Monroe doctrine as properly interpreted by Mr. Seward in Mr. Lincoln's administration we stood by and saw Mexico invaded, as other South American countries were invaded, for the purpose not of permanently annexing territory but of redressing grievances which the European nations believed they had sustained because of the improper policy and conduct of some of the South American States.

Secretary Fish, in a report to the President dated July 14, 1870, pointed out that the policy of the United States—

* * * does not contemplate forcible intervention in any legitimate contest, but it protests against permitting such a contest to result in the increase of European power or influence. * * *

That is, on the Western Hemisphere.

Secretary John Sherman in 1897 declined to intervene in the conflict between Germany and Haiti when German warships were sent to the ports of Haiti. Secretary Sherman wrote to our minister in Haiti that—

* * * This Government is not under any obligation to become involved in the constantly recurring quarrels of the Republics of this hemisphere with other States. The Monroe doctrine, to which you refer, is wholly inapplicable to the case, and the relations and interests of this Government with its neighbors are not benefited by erroneous conceptions of the scope of the policy announced by President Monroe and since strictly followed.

Later, Secretary Sherman wrote to our minister in Haiti:

* * * You certainly should not proceed on the hypothesis that it is the duty of the United States to protect its American neighbors from the responsibility which attend the exercise of independent sovereignty.

I believe that President Roosevelt's message to Congress in 1901 contained a statement which was within the Monroe doctrine:

We do not guarantee any state against punishment if it misconducts itself, provided that punishment does not take the form of the acquisition of territory by any non-American power.

I should have added, Mr. President, when I was quoting from Secretary Foster that he said:

The other misconceptions as to the functions of the Monroe doctrine, which were based upon the false conception that the United States does not permit force to be used by European governments and that we must undertake the enforcement of their just claims against Mexico or other disorderly American Republics.

He stated that—

* * * from the language of that doctrine as announced by President Monroe we can draw no such mandate, and history of our relations with the American States shows that such a procedure on our part would be unjust if not impracticable.

He further added that—

* * * it is likewise a misconception of the doctrine to assert that it is our duty to interfere by force with the administration of the affairs of other American Republics, when they fall into anarchy through their oft-recurring revolutions.

Yet we have done that repeatedly. We went into Nicaragua quite recently without justification and carried on military operations and by force superimposed the will of the United States upon that Republic.

Mr. President, notwithstanding Mr. Roosevelt's earlier attitude toward the Monroe doctrine, I regret to say he later changed his position and misinterpreted the Monroe doctrine. In his annual message in 1904 he uses this language:

* * * Chronic wrongdoing, or an impotence which results in a general loosening of the ties of civilized society, may in America, as elsewhere, ultimately require intervention by some civilized nation, and in the Western Hemisphere the adherence of the United States to the Monroe doctrine may force the United States, however reluctantly, in flagrant cases of such wrongdoing or impotence, to the exercise of an international police power.

Why, Mr. President, under that broad statement the United States could take possession of any of the South American Republics when, according to our standards of justice and of the duties of governments, the ties that should bind peoples were loosened and those countries did not approximate the standard of national and international morality which we think should be observed.

This was in fact a declaration that the United States assumed a protectorate over Latin America and would exercise a police power for the preservation of order, the United States being the authority to determine what standard of order was to be maintained. This erroneous position and this extended view of the Monroe doctrine unfortunately has been followed more or less since then. We have prevented even temporary intervention by European and other powers, and where foreign lives and property have been endangered the United States has felt obliged to intervene. Mr. Page says there have been 30 armed interventions in Latin-American countries since the Spanish-American War.

Prof. J. W. Garner, in his American Foreign Policies, states that—> * * * if Monroe were alive to-day he would be quite unable to recognize the policy which still bears his honored name but which is not in fact his offspring.

This perversion of the Monroe doctrine is resented by Latin-American countries. Mr. Page quotes one editor, who states that it is—> * * * the shield and buckler of the United States aggression; it is a sword suspended by a hair over the Latin continent.

A writer in Foreign Affairs stated that—> * * * an overlordship on the part of their great northern sister is to-day infinitely more feared by the Latin Republics than is any danger from European imperialism.

Writers have pointed to the fact that it was a danger to the United States to assume a position of guardianship over Latin-American Republics, and that its assertion of the right to supervise their internal and police force would lead to reckless financial undertakings with European investors and, indeed, American investors, based upon the assumption that the United States would protect them in their defaults when pressed for settlement by European creditors. There should be more and more a collective responsibility for preserving the freedom and encouragement of American countries. Many years ago a writer in the Forum stated that the current interpretation of the Monroe doctrine frequently left the citizens of this country "inebriated with superabundant patriotism."

Doctor Rowe 14 years ago stated that the words "Monroe doctrine" have cast a kind of spell over the American people, and that this fact has precluded and still precludes a calm, dispassionate consideration of our international relations.

We must abandon the interpretation accepted quite recently which connotes new policies, including the so-called police power in the Caribbean Sea.

Prof. Filipe Barreda, of the University of San Marcos, Lima, Peru, in an article in Current History for March, 1927, declares that he found among Latin-American writers on the Monroe doctrine a startling misinterpretation of the facts. He states that it is a common mistake among the people of the United States to appeal to the Monroe doctrine as a ready excuse to justify armed intervention and political interference in Latin-American countries in behalf of commercial and industrial enterprises.

Mr. President, the United States by force went into Haiti because Americans had made investments there which they sought to protect and consolidate—through the interposition of the United States. We went into Nicaragua because American investors and capitalists were there. We have used our marines, our Army, and our Navy in Latin-American Republics because of economic penetration and American investments.

These erroneous conceptions lead to misunderstanding and the growth of suspicion and animosity between the United States and Latin America. Professor Barreda declares that the Monroe doctrine was a declaration for the protection of the United States and its commerce and industries against European intrigues at a particular moment of American history, and that in that sense it was interpreted from 1823 until the McKinley administration, at which period the doctrine was distorted and given a new meaning. He further states that during the first period the Monroe doctrine referred to the protection of the two Americas against European interference or threatened invasions, and that under this interpretation South American Republics regarded it at this period as a system of Pan American protection of the highest moral value. He proceeds:

> * * * but by the time President McKinley had been elected the Colossus of the North had grown in statute and was rich, strong, and abounding in vitality. The American people rejoiced in their increasing prosperity, and when the Spanish-American War came, and ended in victory, they were strengthened in national spirit and the feeling of national unity.

He refers to the surplus capital seeking foreign markets and the extent of investments in the Southern Continent. He claims that during the last 20 years the people of the United States have invested in Latin America more than $4,210,000,000. During this period Professor Barreda states that the Monroe doctrine has been corrupted and distorted in such an extraordinary manner that both its interpretation and its application have no connection at all with the policy originally stated by President Monroe. He states that a study of the various cases of the modern interpretation and application of the doctrine during the last 20 years makes it clear that it has been employed in the following ways:

> (1) In cases of internal political strife or revolution in Latin-American countries, the Government of the United States assumes the right to declare which is the constitutional party to be supported by the military and naval power of the United States.
> (2) When the conclusion is reached that a Latin-American country is not able to maintain an independent and competent government to keep order and discharge its international obligations the United States assumes the right to take political and economic control of such country.
>
> (3) The United States assumes the right to intervene in the political government and economic administration of a debtor nation in Latin America to enforce and secure the cancellation of public debts.
>
> (4) The United States Government assumes the right to intervene in the internal affairs of Latin-American countries when, in its opinion, political or economic ideas may endanger the private interests of American citizens.
> (5) The fixed attitude of the United States that the definition, interpretation, and application of the Monroe doctrine are its exclusive concern.

He declares that the deformations of the Monroe doctrine lack the essential character of Monroeism; that is, defense against European intervention with a view to aggression and to the subjugation of American countries and the annexation of American soil by European nations.

Mr. President, he further states that this interpretation sets the South against the North. All these interpretations are contradictory to the advice not only of Monroe but of such statesmen as Washington and John Quincy Adams. Monroe's message he quotes as follows:

> Every people have a right to institute for themselves the government which, in their judgment, may suit them best.

That was Monroe's view. Unfortunately that view has not always been adhered to by the United States in its dealings with Latin America.

Every international conflict between two or more American States, according to the view of Professor Barreda, should be settled by arbitration or by the World Court or by suitable instrumentalities that may be set up for that purpose.

Mr. President, I felt constrained to give more attention, perhaps, than I should have done to a discussion of the Monroe doctrine because of the constant assertions made here and elsewhere that the Monroe doctrine gives to the United States the right to interfere in Latin-American affairs, to collect debts which may be due to American citizens—and, for that matter, to citizens of European nations—and to assume a protectorate over these Republics. That such a doctrine would prove offensive to independent nations and to spirited and patriotic peoples must be obvious to everyone. We have declared, through the mouth of a great President, that the right of self-determination belongs to nations and to peoples. May I say that the right of self-determination is essentially and fundamentally the right of humanity. People have the right to set up governments giving to them such form as to them seems best.

Mr. President, I am for the peace treaty that is before us. I shall vote for it believing that it will contribute to world peace.

Mr. President, I wish we would think more of peace and less of war. I wish we would remember that this is a Christian Nation, that its mission is to promote peace and world unity. We recently commemorated the birth of the Prince of Peace, and millions proclaimed their fealty to His Divine authority. This treaty is in consonance with the spirit of the Master. It is an avowal of the desire of this Nation to contribute to that coming day when there will be peace on earth and good will toward men. Let us promptly ratify this treaty.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I think we are about to reach a vote on the peace treaty. I sincerely trust that we will vote upon it to-day. I think that this is a very auspicious occasion for the United States, the greatest Government in all the world, to join with the other nations in an effort to promote peace and prevent war.

The time was when war was the sport and plaything of kings, an instrument of greed and conquest. We are told that once upon a time two kings fell out at a banquet, both of them intoxicated, and in a few days their armies were fighting in the field to settle what one considered was an insult offered by the other. It would have been infinitely better for the two drunken kings if they could have shot it out between themselves and spared the lives of the innocent boys whom they had murdered on the field of battle.

I rejoice that the time has come in the history of the world when war is being outlawed, when the intelligent, upstanding nations are frowning upon war, when they are all turning their attention to the halls of peace and seeking to have their difficulties and their disagreements settled there and not upon the fields of carnage.

Mr. President, I rejoice that the time has come when two nations having a dispute, one with the other, are willing to submit their cause to arbitration, that their differences may be settled and their difficulties adjusted without the shedding of blood and the killing of human beings.

John Ruskin, one of the brightest minds ever produced in England, drew a picture of 30 young men selected in England and 30 in France. They had been trained in many lines of useful work—teachers, mechanics, and farmers. They were taken away from home and loved ones, away from useful occupations and were sent to a given point and fed until a certain day when they were arrayed against the other 30 men, and the command given to fire. In a moment's time 60 strong and useful men were dead—60 corpses, for friends and loved ones to weep over, and then to be buried in the ground.

Mr. President, I rejoice that the time has come when the life of the boy who might be killed in war is of great concern to thoughtful statesmen. We are no longer willing for an ambitious ruler to marshal his hosts and go out to war with another power in order to increase his power and territorial possessions or to bring military glory to himself. We are tired and sick of those things. If this Nation is not ready now to join in a movement for the promotion of peace in the world, pray tell me what would it take to bring it to that state of mind? When the World War ended it was costing this Nation a million dollars an hour. When that war was finally ended it had cost the nations of the earth $250,000,000,000, half the wealth of all the world. When that war ended it had murdered 10,000,000 young men. It had killed more men than all the wars of all the world. It had cost more money than all the wars of the world.

War is so costly and the implements of war are so dangerous and deadly now that something has got to be done to prevent another war like the one through which we passed from 1914 to 1918, because it would destroy civilization and consume the wealth of the world. War is a cruel, brutal, barbarous, and murderous thing. In its wake are broken hearts, and ruined homes. Its path is drenched with human blood and paved with dead men's bones. We ought, Mr. President, to join heartily with other nations in an effort to put war down and to promote peace, blessed peace, in the world. I want to close with a petition uttered by another:

Sow thou the seeds of happy peace,
All evils drive from us afar,
And bid the rage and tumult cease
Of hateful war.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I favor the ratification of the treaty without reservations or interpretations. When the prime ministers of the signatory nations exchanged their diplomatic notes regarding the treaty they fixed its status as an international document so far as anything outside the language of the treaty can affect it. The Senate can not change the meaning of the treaty now. The Senate may make reservations and interpretations that will serve to weaken it or to narrow its application to this country or to limit or restrict our Government's use of it. But to all such proposals I am unalterably opposed.

This treaty is the first international peace arrangement between the great world powers given to mankind that does not depend upon force or have force in the background. It is true the Scandinavian countries have signed treaties between themselves that absolutely outlaw and abolish war between themselves. I wish those treaties could be extended and made to include the world powers that have immense armies and navies that dominate the earth. Such an arrangement seems impossible at present. This treaty will not prevent war unless those in control of the governments signatories to it are determined to maintain peace. If it be the desire of those in control of the Government when this treaty is in effect, it can be made a most powerful instrument to enable them to prevent the outbreak of war.

But no treaty, no league, no organization of any kind can insure world peace unless it does two things: First, abolishes great navies and compulsory military service, and second, pledges every nation to a war referendum, except in cases of attack or invasion. I recognize that this ideal can not be attained at once, but I hope that this treaty may be the first step in the program that will ultimately lead to the adoption of such measures by the great nations of the world that will make war impossible.

I favor this treaty because I believe it may be used ultimately to bring about the condition I have mentioned. When a treaty renounces war and pledges nations to seek settlement of disputes by pacific means, it voices the sentiment of the masses of the plain people of all the civilized nations of the earth. They demand peace as never before. They want peace that is based not on force and fear, but upon reason and justice, and, most of all, public opinion.

The greatest challenge to the statesmanship of the world today is the formulation of a plan whereby nations may settle their disputes honorably without resorting to the organized assassination and murder known as war. The peace movement is in politics in this world as it has never been previously in history. The League of Nations, the Locarno agreement, the Paris pact are all the imperfect results of the efforts of statesmen of our time to act in harmony with a world-wide demand for permanent peace. Nations can no longer afford war. It destroys the victor as well as the vanquished. Vast international investments and the development of trade and commerce make peace more profitable than war.

For the first time in history the millions of common men and women who toil are able to think for themselves. The ever-increasing number of scientific inventions and scientific devices are freeing men and women from backbreaking toil and giving them time and energy to think. The intelligent people of all civilized nations are demanding that peace shall be maintained, and unless it is maintained there are large numbers of people in the world who think that those who lead their country into war are more deserving of being shot than those placed in the armies which they are supposed to fight. Make no mistake about it; we live in a different time and a different age. Scientific inventions, scientific methods, chemistry, have all combined to bring the nations of the world into the relationship of neighbors and make war both contagious and noncontrollable. When once it is started it almost surely will become world wide. Wise man fear it. Airplanes, radios, and other modern devices are continually making the people of all parts of the earth more closely associated and better known to each other. Statesmen of the world must recognize this condition and meet it by the adoption of methods by which nations can settle their disputes peacefully.

I have listened to many of the speeches made here expressing the fear of the results that would follow the ratification of the treaty.

For my part I have but little sympathy with the labored language of diplomats who technically split hairs, who endeavor to prove that an agreement designed to settle our disputes peacefully binds us to go to war with some nation. I believe that when the statesmen of the world in the future read this treaty they will place upon its terms the natural interpretation of the words it contains.

For my part I can conceive of no act more recreant to the trust of a people who long for peace than to do anything that would even tend to prevent the ratification and publication to the world of this Nation's purpose and desire to join with any other nation which is willing to join in the working out of methods and plans that will maintain peace. I rejoice in the purpose of those who wrote the treaty and shall support it wholeheartedly and enthusiastically.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Caraway	Glenn	La Follette
Barkley	Copeland	Greene	Larrazolo
Bayard	Couzens	Hale	McKellar
Bingham	Curtis	Harris	McMaster

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE] are detained in a meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I presume I should have stated before calling for a quorum that I was asking for the call for the purpose of submitting a proposed unanimous-consent agreement. I now ask that we may not have to call a quorum again under the rule; that this calling of a quorum may be regarded as a compliance with the rule for the purpose of submitting a unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, after consultation with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] for the purpose of expediting a vote upon the pending treaty, it has been suggested that the resolution that I offered a few days ago and debated might well be disposed of before a unanimous-consent agreement for a vote shall be entered into. Therefore having no desire to be an obstructionist, having been ready and willing to vote upon this treaty many days ago, I do not want at this time to reiterate what I said in the debate on the treaty last week. I now desire formally to offer another resolution, in the nature of a reservation, to be subjoined to the treaty following Article II.

The resolution which I am about to offer differs from the resolution which I offered last week, which resolution is upon the Secretary's desk and has been printed. That resolution referred to paragraph 10 of the British note of May 19, 1928. The purpose of that resolution was to make it clear to the world that America does not propose to admit by inference, by implication or by silence that the British Empire has the inherent right to rule over one-quarter of the area of the habitable globe and to dominate one-quarter of the people of the world without their consent. I am not going to discuss that question now. I covered it fully in the debate the other day. I have not been convinced by any argument I have heard in this Chamber that my conclusions then were in error. I endeavored to arrive at the conclusions set forth in that debate after what I believed to be a thorough study of the problem. It was my conclusion then and it is my conclusion now that paragraph 10 of the British note of May 19, 1928, is, in effect, a reservation to the pending treaty and that the British Government joins in this treaty only upon the express understanding that her alleged claims shall be recognized.

I know it has been contended that Great Britain has the right to do what she expresses in her note quite regardless of anything the Senate may do. I do not propose to recognize, however, this new-found British doctrine of imperialism. I am convinced that in future years if the situation ever arises where Great Britain may find it to her benefit, may find it to her interest, to invoke this new doctrine of imperialism, America will be in honor bound to recognize that doctrine.

We are about to join in this treaty. We shall do so with our eyes wide open. We know the notice that Great Britain has served upon the world. We can not, in my opinion, adhere to this treaty without by the same token admitting the full effect of the British note. Moreover, Mr. President, we can not in the future, unless we strip ourselves of honor, deny all that the British note implies. Therefore America proposes to tie her future course to that of Great Britain in the acknowledgment of an imperialism that challenges not only America but challenges as well the right of independence of subjected people. The guns at Bermuda and in the Caribbean Sea, under the direction of the British Government, then will continue to point at America more menacingly than they do to-day.

So, Mr. President, I shall offer this resolution, not limiting it to paragraph 10 of the British note alone but rather broadening the effect by applying it to all conditions or reservations contained in the diplomatic notes exchanged during negotiations for the treaty.

I have broadened the resolution for this reason: I do not want to be charged with having any specific antagonism toward any nation. If this peace treaty means what it says; if the diplomats who exchanged the notes during the negotiation of this treaty intended to speak as the treaty purports to speak for the outlawry of war, in the determination to settle international disputes by pacific means; then, sir, I propose by this resolution to make this treaty more than a mere scrap of paper. I propose to make this treaty something more than a mere gesture, something more than transcendental in words only. I propose to test the sincerity of statesmen and diplomats. If the text of this treaty implies nothing excepting the plain language of the treaty, if there are no conditions or reservations subjoined to the treaty, if the treaty is a renouncement of war, then let us say so in plain language. If the treaty does not renounce war, then why make a pious pretense?

Therefore, Mr. President, I submit the resolution that when the Senate of the United States shall advise and consent to the multilateral treaty now pending in the Senate, it is done with and in consideration of the understanding that any condition or reservation contained in the diplomatic notes exchanged during negotiations for the treaty shall not imply any admission of any reserve made in connection therewith and not a part of the text of the treaty; and I move the adoption of that resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I hope this resolution will not be adopted. It is, in my judgment at least, an attempt to effectuate a reservation—a reservation in a note by the British Government.

I have stated before what I understand to be the purport of the note to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers. It is a statement upon the part of the British Government of that which the British Government have understood to be explicitly in the treaty. I am not going to discuss it; but I desire to put in the RECORD in connection with this resolution the statement of the Secretary for Foreign Affairs of the British Government in the House of Commons when discussing this specific matter. He says:

> The honorable gentleman found fault with the wording of my note with respect to the passage dealing with self-defense. He appeared to think that there was something which I had added, and that it had no parallel in the American note. Let me call his attention to Command Paper 3153, Document No. 1, in page 2. At the bottom of the page there is a paragraph in which Mr. Atherton is instructed to call attention to a speech which Mr. Kellogg had made before the American Society of International Law. He quotes from it:
> "Self-defense: * * * The right is inherent in every sovereign state and is implicit in every treaty. Every nation is free at all times, and regardless of treaty provisions, to defend its territories from attack or invasion, and it alone is competent to decide whether circumstances require recourse to war in self-defense. If it has a good case, the world will applaud and not condemn its action."

The Secretary for Foreign Affairs further states:

> The honorable member will see that everything that was in my note is not merely implicit but explicit in the note which was handed to me by the American chargé d'affaires. * * * I venture to think that it does no good to put about those exaggerated suspicions, and that it will be much more helpful to say what is the fact, that our doctrine is exactly comparable to that of the American Government, that it is not a doctrine of aggression, that it is not a desire for territorial expansion, but a pure measure in self-defense necessitated by the geographical position of the empire.

It is my contention, and I think now conceded, that the right of self-defense is fully retained in the treaty, and that each nation must determine for itself what constitutes its right of self-defense and the extent of it. That is what the British note undertook to do. In my judgment it was wholly unnecessary, but it neither adds anything to nor takes anything from the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

> Resolved, That when the Senate of the United States shall advise and consent to the multilateral treaty, now pending in the Senate, it is done with and in consideration of the understanding that any condition or reservation contained in the diplomatic notes exchanged during negotiations for the treaty shall not imply any admission of any reserve made in connection therewith and not a part of the text of the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, your Committee on Foreign Relations has unanimously agreed upon a report which will be drafted and ready for final action in a few moments.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, before the Senator goes forward with that, may I say that I have upon the table a resolution dealing with the pending treaty, and I desire to withdraw it.

Mr. HARRISON. What about the reservations that the Senator had filed? Are they withdrawn?

Mr. MOSES. The resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. The resolution embodying the reservations?

Mr. MOSES. No; embodying the understandings. There are no reservations any more.

Mr. BORAH. After the report is filed it is hoped that we may have a vote, and I therefore submit a unanimous-consent agreement that we begin voting upon the treaty and any reservations or resolutions relating thereto at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the proposed unanimous-consent agreement be transcribed at the desk in order that there may be no mistake about it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, meanwhile will the Senator yield to me to present petitions by various women's organizations, church, and other societies in favor of the Kellogg peace pact?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, while I am on my feet, and in connection with this particular matter, I may say that I intend to vote for the peace pact; but I am not willing that anybody in Virginia shall think that I am simple enough to suppose that it is worth a postage stamp in the direction of accomplishing permanent international peace.

I think we are about to renounce something as a national policy which no nation on earth for 150 years has ever proclaimed as a national policy. Those who are familiar with the period must know that not even Napoleon was ever willing to concede that war was the national policy of his empire. In fact he rarely ever, if ever—except at Waterloo, when time with him was the deciding factor—went into a great battle without first importuning the adversary monarch against hostilities and begging him to avoid the inevitable sacrifice of life which would be involved in joining battle.

I had purposed speaking on the pact, but when I sat here and reflected that in the 28 years that I have been a Member of one or the other branches of Congress I have never known a speech to change a vote, I decided that I would not encroach upon the time of the Senate or delay the consummation of this great peace pact; yet I am not willing merely to vote and not go into the RECORD as having no confidence whatsoever in the accomplishment of any good by this alleged pact.

I am going to vote for the treaty for the simple reason that I think its defeat will psychologically be a bad thing. I have come to the considered judgment that Mr. Lincoln's most popular aphorism needs amending, wherein he said that "you can not fool all the people all the time." If the word "time" may be applied to an epoch or a period rather than to eternity, I say that all the people all the time for nearly the last 10 years have been fooled. They are going to be fooled now by a so-called peace pact that, in the last analysis, is one of the many devices that have been contrived to solace the awakened conscience of some people who kept the United States out of the League of Nations; and, whether it was so intended or not, it is going to confuse the minds of many good and pious people who think that peace may be secured by polite professions of neighborly and brotherly love.

That did not fool Theodore Roosevelt; it did not fool Henry Cabot Lodge, who for a long period was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations; it did not fool great men like Taft, the present Chief Justice; it did not in any respect or degree fool the President elect of the United States. Every one of those men is over and over again on the record in saying that no peace pact between nations will ever amount to a thrip that has not behind it the potential use of the military power of these nations combined.

I agree with that. But I am going to be simple enough, along with the balance of you, to vote for the ratification of this worthless, but perfectly harmless peace treaty.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, it is not my intention in the slightest degree to take up the time of the Senate now, and I congratulate those who have discussed this question upon reaching finally an accord. I do wish, however, before the vote is taken, to say that I vote for this pact—and I have been for it since its inception—under no delusions at all. I vote for it upon practically the ground that has been suggested in the earlier remarks of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] who has just taken his seat.

Mr. President, I remember a critic of the great novelist Henry James who once accused the author of analyzing his characters practically into disintegration, and I believe that this treaty has been analyzed by its proponents practically into disintegration.

Not only that, sir, but when I see, too, that we rely ultimately upon the opinion of mankind when war shall occur, I remember only 12 years ago during the time of the Great War. The first casualty when war comes is truth, and whenever there is a war, and whenever an individual nation seeks to coerce by force of arms another, it always acts, and always insists that it acts, in self-defense.

That being so, it begins what we were so familiar with only a brief period ago, war-time propaganda, whereby its people become war hungry in their patriotism and are lied into a desire to fight. We have seen it in the past; it will happen again in the future. Those in power, governments and statesmen, indeed, through propaganda, will not only fashion, but absolutely control public opinion, and the propaganda will always demonstrate the justice of the cause of the government and the infamy of the nation opposed. I will vote for this pact with a hope, only a hope. I am willing to indulge in any hope that peace may come on earth.

I remember long ago reading Justin McCarthy's If I Were King and seeing Sothern in his inimitable fashion portraying the character of François Villon. I remember certain words that were attributed by Mr. McCarthy to Villon. I dedicate those words to this treaty. Villon said:

> To Messire Noel, named the neat
> By those who love him, I bequeath
> A helmless ship, a houseless street,
> A wordless book, a swordless sheath,
> An hourless clock, a leafless wreath,
> A bed sans sheet, a board sans meat,
> A bell sans tongue, a saw sans teeth,
> To make his nothingness complete.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of the discussion which has just taken place I want to say a word. I should like to express my sincere views in a very brief way as to what I think of the treaty.

When we come to analyze this treaty, and to consider what the treaty is and what is behind it, and compare it with what is in other treaties for peace and what is behind other treaties, why should this treaty be considered as impractical or as an ideal beyond the power of men and women to attain? Why should a treaty renouncing war and pledging nations to the settlement of their controversies through pacific means be regarded as without value? Is the obligation in this treaty any less binding than the obligation in any other treaty? Is the honor or the good faith of the nations signatory to this treaty any less binding than the honor and the good faith of the nations signatory to any other treaty? If I understand international affairs, there is nothing behind any treaty save the honor and the good faith of the nations signing the treaty. They all rest upon the honor and the faith of the nations, and nothing more.

Sir Austen Chamberlain said at Geneva a few months ago, at a time when he was discussing a treaty which provided for the use of force, "Do what we will, we must depend at last upon the plighted word."

We may talk about treaties providing for war, and providing for the use of armies and navies, and for economic boycotts, but there is at last nothing behind any of those treaties except the honor and the good faith of the nations signing them.

There is just the same honor, the same binding obligation, and the same good faith behind an agreement not to go to war under any circumstances that there is behind an agreement to go to war under certain circumstances. Let us take an illustration. Suppose we have a treaty which provides for an economic boycott, and suppose the conditions upon which the boycott is to be laid have arisen, and suppose the time has come when we are to lay the economic boycott, and the nations refuse to go along. What is to be done about it? How is the treaty to be enforced? There is nothing behind it except that which is behind this treaty; that is, the honor of the nations signing the treaty.

Suppose there is a treaty providing for the use of an army or a navy, for the use of force, for the purpose of punishing another nation, and the time comes when those parties to the treaty are to punish the other nation, but the nations having signed refuse to go along, do not deem it to their welfare to go along. What is to be done about it? There is nothing, in the last analysis, except what there is behind this treaty; that is, the honor and good faith of the nations signing the treaty.

It has been intimated that it is easier to mobilize the passions for war, and is easier to direct the passions for conflict, than it is to mobilize the passions for peace or the passions for adjustment. I challenge the proposition. I say that the most searching, universal, and profound passion in the human breast to-day is the passion for peace, and if it is organized and directed as we organize and direct the passion for war, it will dominate and control in international affairs, and the great object and purpose of this treaty is to organize the peace forces, to organize the moral influences, in behalf of adjustment of difficulties without conflict. Its great purpose is to let the peace machinery of all peace plans work—to utilize the everlasting real aspiration of the human family.

Mr. President, it is said there is no security in this treaty, that there is no safety in it, that people are signing with their tongues in their cheeks. For decades and decades nations and people have been persistently and pathetically pleading for security, for safety, for some kind of understanding which would give them security; and they are entitled to it. Particularly has that been the problem since the World War. Fear and distrust and suspicion and hatred have tortured and tormented the human family long enough. They are entitled to the security for which they plead. But how are they to get security? How are they to get protection?

I do not hesitate to say that a scheme which undertakes to build security upon international force is a mad delusion. Any such scheme carries within itself the seeds of its own destruction. Nothing could better illustrate this than the happenings of a few months ago at the Geneva assembly. The Premier of the British Government, speaking on behalf of his Government, declared that the British Government could not and would not undertake to go further in extending that kind of security to foreign governments, that it would not undertake to go further in furnishing an army or a navy or giving the protection of its strong and mighty arm, and in effect he declared that to do so would imperil the existence of the British Empire itself.

To those who believe that security can be based upon international force I say, here is the fatal weakness. No responsible government will undertake to give an unlimited promise for the use of its fortunes and its people, no responsible government will undertake to pledge its army and its navy to another power, except upon the theory that it is necessary to its own immediate protection and defense.

When we pass outside of a certain range, a certain territory, or a certain latitude, no government will undertake to pledge security beyond that limitation. The result is that when we are building security upon force, we break the world up into groups and alliances and balances of power which in themselves breed distrust and suspicion, and, at last, hatred and war. This scheme brings into existence the very conditions which inevitably breed war.

Mr. President, that has been the history of Europe for these thousand years, and what is happening in Europe to-day? They are seeking security, based upon international force, by building up new groups and new alliances and new balances of power, and a whole continent is again being saturated with suspicion and distrust.

It is one thing to pledge the nations of the earth to peaceable adjustment, but it is a wholly different thing to pledge the lives and the fortunes of the people of a nation on the other side of the world.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, does not the Senator know—I assume that he has forgotten, however—that this Nation right now, without limitation, has made that very pledge to Japan, to maintain its territorial integrity and to enforce its rights in the Pacific? I refer to the 4-power pact.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator from Virginia also of the Locarno-Rhine pact, in which England has pledged her entire power to guarantee France and Germany from invasion?

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; a fine illustration, a beautiful illustration. Great Britain was perfectly willing to pledge security against the western frontier and upon the western problems, but when they undertook to extend it to a controversy upon the eastern side, Great Britain in effect said, No, that is beyond what we think is necessary to our protection and our security. We will not extend our guarantee beyond our own immediate interests. That is a beautiful illustration. That is a complete example that such a scheme breaks the world up into groups and groups deluge the world with distrust and finally engender war.

Mr. GLASS. But the Senator knows that England is in honor bound to maintain the territorial integrity of all Japanese possessions in the Pacific Ocean and to enforce its rights, and so is the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely, Mr. President. England is bound because her possessions and her interests in China are equal to those of Japan. She is simply entering into a combination for the purpose, I say again, of protecting her interests. But these nations will not go beyond what they conceive to be the immediate protection of their own interests. The last 10 years proves that beyond peradventure. As to the United States, it has not guaranteed any territory for Japan.

Mr. BRUCE. Have not Great Britain and Italy guaranteed Germany against invasion and France against invasion, the two powers in the world that are most likely to come into conflict?

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; and because they have limited it to a controversy that may arise upon the western side of Germany or the western frontier. Great Britain refused to incorporate the eastern frontier in her pledge.

Mr. GLASS. I am not talking about Great Britain.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Maryland was.

Mr. GLASS. I am talking about this Government of ours. I say that under the 4-power pact the United States has pledged its honor, its Army, its navies, and every power that it may exert to guarantee the territorial integrity and to maintain the rights of Japan in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. BORAH. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. GLASS. No; I am not. I have the treaty right here now.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator the reservation? The reservation says that this treaty does not bind us to use force or commit us to the use of force in the carrying out of the 4-power pact.

Mr. GLASS. I do not note any reservation whatsoever. There may be a reservation, but it is a reservation somewhat like the Senator's report from the Foreign Relations Committee, that will have no application to the treaty itself. Here is the plain text of the treaty, and I will read it to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I am perfectly familiar with it.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator seems to have forgotten it.

Mr. BORAH. No; I have not forgotten it at all. If the Senator will read the reservation, he will find it is exactly in accord with what I have stated.

Mr. GLASS. I do not discover any reservation here. My recollection is there was no reservation.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; there was a reservation. The Senator has overlooked it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Was the reservation in the form of an interpretative note?

Mr. BORAH. No; it was adopted here by the Senate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As a resolution of the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; as a resolution of the Senate.

Mr. President, it has been suggested that we close debate and vote. I feel that by reason of an understanding I must not go further with this debate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator that the hour of 4 o'clock was suggested in his unanimous-consent request, but it is now 4.05, so he had better make it 4.10. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I now file the report of the committee. I ask to have read the first article in the treaty.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho whether it was a part of the agreement that the report was not to be read?

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. Or was to be read?

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. There was no understanding about that?

Mr. BORAH. No. It can be read if anyone desires to have it read.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let the report be read.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, have we reached an agreement as to the time we shall vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No agreement has been reached.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that we vote not later than 20 minutes after 4 o'clock upon the ratification resolution and any reservation connected therewith.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I take it there will be no question that the report of the committee would be printed in the ordinary way. I would like to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would like to have it read.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us have a time fixed to vote.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to ask that we agree upon a time to vote.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I want to say that I have seen the substance of what will be presented in the report. I presume it will be read, of course, to the Senate. So far as I am concerned I am content with the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we may vote at not later than 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so agreed. The clerk will read the report.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Ex. Rept. No. 1, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report:

"Your Committee on Foreign Relations reports favorably the treaty signed at Paris, August 27, 1928, popularly called the multilateral or Kellogg-Briand treaty. The two articles in this treaty are as follows:

"'ARTICLE I. The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

"'ART. II. The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.'

"The treaty in brief pledges the nations bound by the same not to resort to war in the settlement of their international controversies save in bona fide self-defense and never to seek settlement of such controversies except through pacific means. It is hoped and believed that the treaty will serve to bring about a sincere effort upon the part of the nations to put aside war and to employ peaceful methods in their dealing with each other.

"The committee reports the above treaty with the understanding that the right of self-defense is in no way curtailed or impaired by the terms or conditions of the treaty. Each nation is free at all times and regardless of the treaty provisions to defend itself, and is the sole judge of what constitutes the right of self-defense and the necessity and extent of the same.

"The United States regards the Monroe doctrine as a part of its national security and defense. Under the right of self-defense allowed by the treaty must necessarily be included the right to maintain the Monroe doctrine which is a part of our system of national defense. Bearing upon this question and as to the true interpretation of the Monroe doctrine as it has always been maintained and interpreted by the United States, we incorporate the following:

"'We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. * * * It is impossible that the allied powers should extend their political system to any portion of either continent without endangering our peace and happiness.' (President Monroe's message, December 2, 1823.)

"'The doctrine upon which we stand is strong and sound because its enforcement is important to our peace and safety as a Nation, and is essential to the integrity of our free institutions and the tranquil maintenance of our distinct form of government.' (Message of President Cleveland, December 17, 1895.)

"'The doctrine is not international law, but it rests upon the right of self-protection and that right is recognized by international law. The right is a necessary corollary of independent sovereignty. It is well understood that the exercise of the right of self-protection may, and frequently does, extend in its effect beyond the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the State exercising it. * * * Since the Monroe doctrine is a declaration based upon this Nation's right of self-protection it can not be transmuted into a joint or common declaration by American States, or any number of them.

"'It is to be observed that in reference to the South American governments, as in all other respects, the international right upon which the declaration expressly rests is not sentiment or sympathy or a claim to dictate what kind of government any other country shall have, but the safety of the United States. It is because the new governments can not be overthrown by the allied powers "without endangering our peace and happiness"; that "the United States can not behold such interposition in any form with indifference."' (Hon. Elihu Root, July 1914.)

"'There are now three fundamental principles which characterize the policy of President Monroe as it was and as it is. First, the Monroe doctrine was a statement of policy originated and maintained by reason of self-interest, not of altruism. Second, it was justifiable by reason of the right of self-defense (which is a recognized principle of international law). Third, it called no new rights into being; therefore, whenever it oversteps the principle of self-defense, reasonably interpreted, the right disappears and the policy is questionable, because it then violates the rights of others. * * * The Monroe doctrine is based upon the right of self-defense. This is the first law of nations, as of individuals.' (Prof. Theodore Woolsey, June, 1914.)

"The committee further understands that the treaty does not provide sanctions, express or implied. Should any signatory to the treaty or any nation adhering to the treaty violate the terms of the same, there is no obligation or commitment, express or implied, upon the part of any of the other signers of the treaty to engage in punitive or coercive measures as against the nation violating the treaty. The effect of the violation of the treaty is to relieve the other signers of the treaty from any obligation under it with the nation thus violating the same.

"In other words, the treaty does not, either expressly or impliedly, contemplate the use of force or coercive measures for its enforcement as against any nation violating it. It is a voluntary pledge upon the part of each nation that it will not have recourse to war except in self-defense, and that it will not seek settlement of its international controversies except through pacific means. And if a nation sees proper to disregard the treaty and violate the same, the effect of such action is to take it from under the benefits of the treaty and to relieve the other nations from any treaty relationship with the said power.

"This treaty in no respect changes or qualifies our present position or relation to any pact or treaty existing between other nations or governments.

"This report is made solely for the purpose of putting upon record what your committee understands to be the true interpretation of the treaty, and not in any sense for the purpose or with the design of modifying or changing the treaty in any way or effectuating a reservation or reservations to the same."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask that we now proceed with the consideration of the first article of the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], while he is on his feet, now that all elements have reconciled their differences and everybody is for the treaty, has the State Department any objection to the report of the committee being adopted? I judge from what the Senator from Idaho said in his speech the other day that the State Department had no objection to the filing of the report, but would object to its adoption.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am proceeding on my own responsibility.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator from Idaho does not know how the State Department feels about it?

Mr. BORAH. I repeat, I am proceeding on my own responsibility.

Mr. HARRISON. I find myself trying to follow the Senator from Idaho and the State Department, but with one going one way and the other going the other way, I am lost.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Mississippi will follow me, he will be all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. I shall do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The clerk will read the first article of the treaty.

The Chief Clerk read the first article of the treaty, as follows:

ARTICLE I

The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

Mr. BORAH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is it necessary to take a yea-and-nay vote upon the separate articles of the treaty?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary to have a yea-and-nay vote until the question comes on the ratification of the treaty. The question now is on agreeing to Article I of the treaty. Without objection, it is agreed to.

Article 2 of the treaty will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read article 2 of the treaty, as follows:

ARTICLE II

The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to article 2 of the treaty. Without objection, it is agreed to. The Chief Clerk will now read article 3 of the treaty.

The Chief Clerk read article 3 of the treaty, as follows:

ARTICLE III

The present treaty shall be ratified by the high contracting parties named in the preamble in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements, and shall take effect as between them as soon as all their several instruments of ratification shall have been deposited at Washington.

This treaty shall, when it has come into effect as prescribed in the preceding paragraph, remain open as long as may be necessary for adherence by all the other powers of the world. Every instrument evidencing the adherence of a power shall be deposited at Washington and the treaty shall immediately upon such deposit become effective as between the power thus adhering and the other powers parties hereto.

It shall be the duty of the Government of the United States to furnish each government named in the preamble and every government subsequently adhering to this treaty with a certified copy of the treaty and of every instrument of ratification or adherence. It shall also be the duty of the Government of the United States telegraphically to notify such governments immediately upon the deposit with it of each instrument of ratification or adherence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, article 3 of the treaty is agreed to. If there are no amendments to be offered, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chief Clerk will read the resolution of ratification.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive A, Seventieth Congress, second session, a multilateral treaty for renunciation of war, signed in Paris August 27, 1928.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution of ratification.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES (when Mr. EDGE's name was called). The senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. HOWELL's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BINGHAM (when Mr. MCLEAN's name was called). If the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] were present, he would vote "yea." He is detained at home on account of illness.

Mr. McKELLAR (when Mr. TYSON's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TYSON] is unavoidably detained at home on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when Mr. WATSON's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from Indiana is detained from the Senate on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to state that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are unavoidably detained from the Senate, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of illness in his family. If these Senators were present, they would vote "yea."

The roll call resulted—yeas 85, nays 1, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas are 85, the nays are 1. Two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the resolution is agreed to and the treaty is ratified.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, at this moment I desire to call attention to the fact that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America are the only two nations that have ratified this treaty and are parties to it, and I hope these two great revolutionary countries will now proceed to outlaw war throughout the world.

CONSTRUCTION OF CRUISERS

Mr. CURTIS. I now move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. May I inquire what is the business now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I give notice that to-morrow morning when the unfinished business shall be laid before the Senate I will address the Senate in behalf of the pending measure, known as the cruiser bill.

O'FALLON RAILWAY VALUATION CASE

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senate, while considering the calendar, Senate Concurrent Resolution 31, being Calendar No. 1457, was passed over on account of objection made to it by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. The Senator from Utah has now expressed a desire to withdraw his objection, provided certain amendments shall be made. In view of the numerous requests which have been made for printed copies of the record and of the briefs filed in the so-called O'Fallon Railway case, which is now before the Supreme Court, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Concurrent Resolution 31 be given immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution to which he has referred with the distinct understanding that the words "and binding" shall be stricken out.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I, too, want to have an understanding, and I wish to ask the Senator a question. As I understand, I have the right to object if I choose. Is the consideration of the concurrent resolution going to lead to any discussion? If it does, I am going to object.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not think it will lead to any discussion.

Mr. BRUCE. If we are going to take it up and pass it without debate, very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Maryland that on a previous occasion we had the question up and obtained unanimous consent to print the briefs and record in the O'Fallon Railway case. It was found, however, that under the rules of the Senate the cost of the printing would be greater than was allowed, and so it became necessary to provide for the printing by a concurrent resolution instead of a Senate resolution.

Mr. BRUCE. I have no objection to having the concurrent resolution considered and adopted if there is no objection and it will not lead to debate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Maryland will not object. It is a very important case, and there are many demands for copies of the document proposed to be printed.

Mr. BRUCE. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland withdrew his objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE].

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 4 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 16, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, January 15, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Because of human frailty, our loving Father, we speak Thy name with faltering lips. All about us are the myriad forms of life and power. We no longer tremble before these mysteries of the material world. All in vain shall we find Thee here. Do Thou enable us to see more than matter. There is nothing greater in all the world than the soul of man! Oh, deal with us according to Thy will and wisdom. Give what is best; still the sigh and awaken the song. Among the shadows of the transient may we most reverently realize the permanent, to which we are eternally allied. We thank Thee for the imperishable certainties that sing on forever. Thy holy name, which is forever chanted through the heavenly spheres; may its voice continue to foretell the morning of earth's fairest day. Through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1320. An act for the relief of James W. Pringle; and

H. R. 11859. An act for the relief of B. C. Miller.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. MOSES and Mr. MCKELLAR members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Post Office Department.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. HALE and Mr. SWANSON members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments" for the disposition of useless papers in the Navy Department.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, there is a very important matter coming up from the Committee on Rules, and I think we ought to have a quorum present. Therefore I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-five Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend that 5 minutes to 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STEPHEN T. MATHER AND THE NATIONAL PARKS

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, word has been carried to the country that Stephen T. Mather, the first Director of the National Park Service, has, by reason of serious ill health, been obliged to resign that position, and his successor has been appointed and taken office. That word has caused the greatest of regret on the part of every Member of this House, just as it has in the hearts of nature lovers throughout this country.

My contact with him through my committee work has been of the closest nature in the last eight or nine years, and I have felt that expression should be given here, even in my humble way, in recognition of his outstanding services to the country as the head and the inspiration of the National Park Service. [Applause.]

For many years the national parks that had been set apart for the preservation of outstanding scenic areas were administered in a most desultory way. In 1915 Franklin K. Lane, a great Secretary of the Interior, demonstrated that capacity, greatness, and breadth of view when he disregarded party lines and appointed Stephen T. Mather, not of his party, as the head of the newly created Park Service. Disregarding party considerations and party lines, Secretary Lane selected wisely the head of the newly created National Park Service.

In 1915 Secretary Lane had brought Mr. Mather to Washington by appointment as assistant to the Secretary. At that time the administration of the national parks was chiefly by the Army, but in so far as there was any jurisdiction in the Interior Department it was brought together under Mr. Mather. His chief aide and legal adviser was Horace M. Albright, who had come to Washington for the purpose of following up his college work by researches in mining and land law and became an assistant attorney in the Interior Department, dealing chiefly with national-park matters.

Stephen T. Mather is a native of California, a graduate of the University of California, whose postgraduate work was on the staff of the New York Sun from 1887 to 1893. In 1894 he became interested in the borax industry, where the fortune was accumulated which he has drawn upon so lavishly for the public good.

Up to 1915 he had been actively engaged in the administration of his business interests, but this did not prevent him from realizing the importance of outdoor recreation; and as a member of the Sierra Club he explored the mountains of California and came in touch with many conservationists of note. Under Mr. Mather's efficient leadership the national-park work was coordinated and expanded, and in a year and a half legislation had been secured creating the National Park Service as a separate bureau of the Department of the Interior. Several months later, when funds became available for actually establishing the bureau, Mr. Mather was appointed its first director.

In the days of struggle before the creation of the bureau and for many years afterwards when funds for civilian bureaus were necessarily limited because of war and postwar expenses, Mr. Mather gave freely of his personal funds in many ways for the benefit of the national-park system. In one park a road was purchased with private funds raised through his efforts and largely with his own personal funds. In another, land for an administration site was purchased by him and donated to the Government. He spent thousands of dollars of his private fortune in the purchase of private lands within the parks, and by his example and through his untiring efforts secured many thousands more from other private sources. Just how much he has spent in helping the people of America to enjoy their national parks will never be known, for he has been very reticent about this; but the sum that is known is an impressive one.

By no means the least factor in Mr. Mather's success in coordinating, administering, and developing the national-park system has been his uncanny ability to pick the right man for a particular job; and the loyalty to the cause, as represented by the chief, has caused many a park superintendent and other officer to give up opportunities for larger financial returns to stick to the "park game," as they call it. Working under Mr. Mather has been a game in the truest sense of the word.

I have in my service of many years on the Committee on Appropriations come into rather close contact with many branches of the Government service in Washington and in the field, and nowhere have I seen such uniform devotion to the highest ideals of service to the country, such unselfish teamwork, such an esprit de corps as in the National Park Service as organized and built up under Stephen T. Mather.

Since Mr. Mather took charge of the national park system seven new national parks have been created, as follows: Hawaii, Lassen Volcanic, Mount McKinley, Lafayette, Grand Canyon,

Zion, and Bryce Canyon. Another one, the Rocky Mountain, was established several days after his appointment, but all the preliminary work on this project had been completed before he joined the Government. During his administration two other eastern projects, those for the establishment of the Shenandoah and Great Smoky Mountains National Parks, have received the approval of Congress, and their actual establishment undoubtedly will be only a matter of time. Park travel showed a mighty increase during his incumbency. During the 1915 travel year a total of only 334,799 visited the parks, while during the season ended September 30, 1928, the number of visitors to the national parks amounted to 2,522,188, with 502,656 more visiting the national monuments.

Confidence in Mr. Mather's administration led private individuals and corporations to invest huge sums in the installation of public utilities in the major parks. It is doubtful if any other man in the critical early days of the service could have obtained quite the same satisfactory results. Sufficient credit is not given to the public-spirited men who have organized and developed the needed utilities for the parks.

As Director of the National Park Service of the Interior Department Mr. Mather was also a member of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. He was also the representative of the Department of the Interior on the Coordinating Commission on National Parks and Forests, appointed by the President's committee on outdoor recreation for the purpose of considering proposed adjustments of national park and forest boundaries. He is now chairman of the National Conference on State Parks, an organization established through his personal efforts to urge upon our Governments, local and national, the desirability of acquiring land and water areas suitable for recreation and the preservation of wild life.

In 1926 he was awarded the gold medal of the National Institute of Social Sciences for his services to the Nation in the development and administration of the national parks throughout the country. The University of California, from which he graduated in 1887, in 1924 conferred upon him the honorary degree of doctor of laws, and he was the recipient of several other honorary degrees.

In December, 1921, hearings were held on the first Interior Department appropriation bill, all the appropriations for all the activities of that department in Washington and elsewhere being then for the first time, under the operation of the newly adopted Budget system, brought into one bill. Before that I had been in contact with the work of the National Park Service in a general way and through visits to some of the parks. Since that time my contact with the National Park Service and with the labors of Stephen T. Mather as its chief and inspiration have been close. My contact with him has been intimate, and as a natural consequence my confidence in him and my admiration for his work has become unlimited, as his wonderful personality and splendid ideals have won me and inspired me as they have all with whom he has come in contact. The opportunity given me by my committee work to cooperate with him has been one of the privileges and greatest pleasures of my congressional career.

In the early days of his administration the appropriations were small and sometimes contested before Congress, but in the latter days no request that has come to Congress from the Park Service has been denied by Congress, and frequently appropriations for the acceleration of his program have been granted that were not requested but were indorsed by the Park Service. In the fiscal year 1917 the total appropriations for the National Park Service were $784,566.67. In 1922 they were $1,433,220, in 1929 they are $4,659,700, and the 1930 bill, now pending, carries $7,390,940—very tangible evidence of the confidence of Congress in the leadership and administration of Stephen T. Mather, as well as interest in the work committed to his charge. He won the regard and confidence of our committee primarily in this: He is as careful and economical in the use of public funds as he is generous in the giving of his own.

No one knows how much of his own money has been put into the development of these projects, into the acquisition of timbered areas that were menaced by private development. It is many, many thousands of dollars that he has given of his money, but with that generous use of his own money he has combined the quality of careful economy in the expenditure of the public funds; and these qualities gave him the absolute confidence of our committee and have given him the absolute confidence of the Congress, and thus he has developed the program much more rapidly than otherwise would have been possible.

The preservation of our greatest scenic wonders as national parks and the contact of our people with them under proper condition is bound to affect appreciably and in a desirable way the future of our Nation.

Years ago Thackeray wrote to his daughters of a sunrise:

> Those magnificent spectacles of nature are like personal kindnesses from the Maker to us—and make me feel grateful.

On a former occasion in this House, December 6, 1924, I sought to emphasize the value of this work, saying then:

> These places are being secured to the free public use of all our people for all time to come. The park of other lands and other times was the monopolized exponent of human selfishness, with "keep out" signs facing the multitudes. The American public park idea is unique and its crowning glory is the national-park system. Therein are being enshrined nature's masterpieces, their beauties and wonders to be preserved and protected for the common use of all for all time to come. Whether it be preeminent in the glory of its trees, of a lake of unrivaled blue, of glaciers, of majestic peaks massing one upon another with eternal snow upon them, or one rising in solitary grandeur above a principality, of wild plant and animal life, of waterfalls that thrill and arouse while they subdue, or of eroded chasms and precipices colored by nature with beauty that defies the imagination, whatever it offers to delight the human eye, is offered freely and unselfishly to all alike. Paraphrasing Longfellow, whatever fortune is denied me, "you can not rob me of free nature's grace," and in the Nation's playgrounds and scenic reservations—
> You can not bar my constant feet to trace
> The woods and lawns, by living stream, at eve;
> Let health my nerves and finer fibers brace,
> And I their toys to the great children leave;
> Of fancy, reason, virtue, naught can me bereave.
> Communion with nature chastens and subdues the ego, it conduces to unselfishness and willingness to serve and sacrifice, it modifies the will to exploit, to monopolize, it clears the vision as to relative values of temporary gain against the eternal.

The act of August 25, 1916, establishing the National Park Service prescribed its duties thus:

> The service thus established shall promote and regulate the use of the Federal area known as national parks, monuments, and reservations hereinafter specified by such means and measures as conform to the fundamental purpose of the said parks, monuments, and reservations, which purpose is to conserve the scenery and the natural and historic objects and the wild life therein, and to provide for the enjoyment of the same in such manner and by such means as will leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations.

In establishing the Yellowstone National Park in 1872, Congress dedicated that marvelous area and set it apart "as a public park or pleasuring ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people."

In his sixth annual report as Director of the National Park Service, for 1922, Mr. Mather said:

> The subjugation and utilization of the forces and products of nature by man is the basis of successful economic existence and national development. But is nature untouched, unnecessary, or unwanted in our complicated scheme of living? Are not reserved places of great natural beauty as important in our daily life as those utilized areas that take care of our physical needs? Viewing this question in the light of what may be called business vision or practical common sense, and leaving out sentiment, we have only to point, for our answer, to the strenuous efforts of war-torn and other countries of Europe to reestablish their formerly large tourist trade by advertising their scenic attractions, to appreciate the extent to which the traveling public helps in filling the financial coffers of any country that has scenery of the first class to offer. Surely few of us are not susceptible to the appeal of nature. There is something in the quiet contemplation of natural scenery, and particularly in magnificent examples of the Creator's work, that is elevating, refreshing, restful, and inspiring. It exerts its appeal to the best in us; seeing it makes us better men and women, physically and mentally and spiritually.

It has been Stephen T. Mather's great opportunity in these past 12 years to lay the foundations of the Park Service, to define and develop the policies under which for centuries to come these national park areas shall be conserved unimpaired for future generations, while enjoyed by the present generation. As he has builded so wisely, his work will stand. There will never come an end to the good that he has done. Can any man desire a more wonderful career?

He came to this work because of the great confidence which Secretary Lane had in him, a confidence manifested in generous measure by each subsequent Secretary of the Interior.

He served longer under Hubert C. Work than under any other Interior Department head and the country is greatly indebted to Secretary Work for the constant and invaluable support he gave Director Mather at all times in his work of development, his building of policies and his preservation of these invaluable scenic areas. Against powerful political and other selfish interests he stood always in firm support of Director Mather, and I speak of my own personal knowledge in this.

Now, because of very serious illness which has confined him to the hospital since early November, Director Mather has felt obliged to resign from the service, his letter of resignation, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Roy O. West, reading:

MY DEAR Mr. SECRETARY: I regret that I am forced by illness to hand this, my resignation as Director of the National Park Service, to you, effective to-day. I am happy in the thought, however, that I can feel that the accomplishments of the past 10 years in particular in that field have seen the development of the national park system into one of real service to the public of our country, as was the purpose when the National Park Service was created.

I can not sever my connection with the Department of the Interior without paying a tribute to the fine service of my associates in the Washington office and in the field branches of my bureau who have been so loyal, efficient, and untiring in their helpfulness and without whom this result could not have been attained. No bureau chief has had more competent and faithful employees than it has been my good fortune to have had associated with me in this national park work. May I not also express here my gratitude for the inspirational leadership and unfailing support of yourself and your predecessors, the Secretaries of the Interior under whom I have served.

I wish, too, there was some way in which I could thank my friends in Congress for the aid, through legislation and appropriations, which has been so generously extended and without which our efforts would have been largely futile.

Faithfully yours, STEPHEN T. MATHER, Director.

Well-deserved tribute to his work was paid by Secretary West in accepting this resignation, when he said:

The Federal Government, and the American people as a whole, owe you a deep debt of gratitude for the many years of intensely patriotic, self-sacrificing, and constructive service you have rendered in furthering the cause of national parks and making these reservations readily available to all classes of our people. * * *

Under your splendid leadership the people of the Nation have been awakened to the beauties and possibilities of the national parks and the necessity of conserving these areas for all time. So firmly have you built the foundations of the National Park Service that it is now bound to move firmly onward along the lines of greatest service to the people. Not the least of your achievements was the ability of attracting to the service an unusually high type of men whose loyalty to their parks and to the chief who formulated its policies will insure its continued success.

The Secretary's letter in full is as follows:

MY DEAR MR. MATHER: It is with the keenest regret that I have received your resignation as Director of the National Park Service, tendered January 8. Since you ask it on the grounds of personal health considerations, I feel that I can not, in justice to you, decline to accept this resignation.

The Federal Government, and the American people as a whole, owe you a deep debt of gratitude for the many years of intensely patriotic, self-sacrificing, and constructive service you have rendered in furthering the cause of national parks and making these reservations readily available to all classes of our people.

Going back over your years of service I find that when you entered the Department of the Interior in January, 1915, there was no National Park Service and no coordinated administration of the national parks, these areas being administered as part of the miscellaneous work in the office of the Secretary. Largely through your personal efforts the establishment of the service was brought about and the work coordinated and put upon a practical, businesslike basis. Since that time seven new parks have been created, including the only eastern park so far established and the only ones in our Territories of Alaska and Hawaii. During the same time several existing parks have been enlarged to include important areas and their boundaries changed to make them capable of better administration. Even now two other Eastern park projects—the Great Smoky Mountains and Shenandoah—are pending, approved by Congress and the President, and it is only a matter of time before their actual establishment will be consummated. This achievement also should be listed as part of the work of your administration.

Especially noteworthy has been the manner in which you have brought about the installation of adequate public-utility facilities in the national parks through inducing private capital, without hope of immediate financial return upon their investments and in the face of grave hazards, to undertake this work. It was solely through your personal achievement and the confidence your integrity inspired that this result was made possible. Absolute confidence in your administration has been shown also by the Congress of the United States in appropriating larger sums each year for park work.

Under your splendid leadership the people of the Nation have been awakened to the beauties and possibilities of the national parks and the necessity of conserving these areas for all time. So firmly have you built the foundations of the National Park Service that it is now bound to move firmly onward along the lines of greatest service to the people. Not the least of your achievements was the ability of attracting to the service an unusually high type of men whose loyalty to their parks and to the chief who formulated its policies will insure its continued success.

Taken all in all, you have achieved results that I believe no other man could have accomplished in the early days of organization and administration during the trying period of the World War and its aftermath.

As Secretary of the Interior I am taking this opportunity, on behalf of the millions of Americans who enjoy the national parks each year, of assuring you of their grateful appreciation of the services you have rendered in developing and preserving these great national scenic areas.

With sentiments of highest esteem and heartiest good wishes for your speedy return to health, believe me,

Most sincerely yours,

ROY O. WEST, Secretary.

Announcement of his retirement has brought country-wide expression of deep regret, with universal commendation of his unusual public services.

The Evening Star, of Washington, said last night:

Not often is a country so fortunate as to possess at the head of one of its governmental branches an executive so whole-heartedly devoted to the interests thereof. This entire Nation has benefited by Mr. Mather's services.

The New York Herald-Tribune to-day:

* * * No friend of conservation has been a more stalwart upholder than Mr. Mather of the standard of excellence set for the National Park Service and of its freedom from commercial and industrial encroachment. The great tide of motor travel to these unique scenic reservations presented problems of access and facilities for recreation in keeping with park integrity. Mr. Mather's policy has guarded against excessive development in the manner of ordinary tourist grounds. Automobile roads are available, but they do not crisscross the parks. Wilderness areas are preserved. In the main, the National Park Service has kept alteration of primitive conditions to the minimum compatible with liberal public enjoyment of the national parks.

The New York Times of to-day, the Washington Post of yesterday have pronounced the retirement of Mr. Mather a great loss to the Nation, and many other publications have joined in paying tribute to his great accomplishments.

So ends the service of Stephen T. Mather as the first Director of the National Park Service. It is fortunate for the cause he has so ably and generously promoted, and it must be a matter of great satisfaction and comfort to him that the flag of leadership goes from his hands to those of one who has been beside him all these years and can be depended on to carry on without change of policy or program.

Nature lovers everywhere, regretting that Mr. Mather has felt obliged to retire, will commend the prompt and wise action of Secretary West in naming as the second Director of the National Park Service Horace M. Albright, for 15 years closely associated with Mr. Mather and for a number of years superintendent of Yellowstone National Park and field director of the service. Mr. Albright has the vision, the experience, the ability, and the personality to make a worthy successor of Stephen T. Mather.

The House will be glad to know that there is a gradual and encouraging improvement in Mr. Mather's condition and will all join in the hope that he may soon be up again and be spared to us yet for many years and permitted to aid in many ways by his advice and his generous leadership the preservation and enjoyment of nature's beauties and wonders. Freed of the routine that attaches to official position, he will, no doubt, accomplish much in his new rôle of private citizen as health comes back to him again.

In the Congress where, from time to time, we find it necessary to criticize the conduct of public officials it is well that we should also for a few moments stop in our work to pay tribute to this outstanding figure in the public service who has sacrificed his money, his health, his time, his opportunity for wealth, in order that he might promote that which will mean so much to the people of this country in the future. [Applause.]

I thank you.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

AMENDMENT OF THE DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have asked for this time in order to direct the attention of the membership of the House to the possibility, if not the probability, of having to consider a material amendment to the deficiency bill which we passed some days ago in this House.

By referring to the RECORD this morning you will see where a bill has been reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and it is proposed to offer this as an amendment to the so-called refund item in the deficiency bill. I want to suggest that you gentlemen get a copy of the hearings and a copy of the report and examine them. The hearings are not in the RECORD this morning, but the report of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate is in the RECORD, and I suggest that each of you get that because it has valuable information, even if you did not have to act on the proposed amendment.

I want to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to an error that they made in reporting the deficiency bill.

As you will recall, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] particularly stressed the point that the amount of taxes collected since 1921, compared with the amount of refund, was equal to 4 to 1, and they said this was a great accomplishment on the part of the Treasury. They secured this information from Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bond, who appeared before the Appropriations Committee and gave them this data. You will observe from the morning paper and you will also observe from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Senate proceedings on the reporting of this bill, a letter sent to Senator MCKELLAR, in which this proportion of 4 to 1 has been changed to the extent of 4 to 2½.

I said to this House at the time we were discussing the deficiency bill that, in my judgment, if we had the facts before the House they would show that not only $1,000,000,000 had been refunded, but that at least that amount had been given in credits and abatements.

I find this letter of the Treasury Department to Senator MCKELLAR reveals the fact that not only has the Treasury Department since 1923—not 1921—refunded $1,000,000,000, but has given credits and abatements that the people knew nothing on earth about, amounting to $1,611,000,000.

I said then that this was astounding, that it was shocking, to think that the Treasury Department had refunded in five years $2,600,000,000. Why, do you know how much money this is? If you had an employee down here at the Treasury Department counting that money at the rate of $1 a second, it would take him 250 years. In other words, it would take six generations, working eight hours per day, to count the money that Mr. Mellon has returned to the taxpayers since he has been in office.

There is another thing, gentlemen. As compared with the amount of money, you will note particularly that the Treasury Department reports to the Congress under compulsion of the law all refunds in excess of $500 and to the joint committee refunds in excess of $75,000. When Mr. Bond wrote Senator MCKELLAR this letter he declined to give him the names of those who had received rebates and credits. No law prohibits him from giving these names. There is no law on the statute books that prohibits the Secretary of the Treasury from giving the names any more than the amount, but the Secretary of the Treasury declines to let the public know to whom he has given these secret rebates and credits to the extent of $1,600,000,000 in five years.

I say now, as I said before, that this Congress has given Secretary Mellon unlimited confidence to the extent of giving him unlimited power to settle these cases, and yet when we come and ask him how he has exercised this power which we placed in his hands he says, "I have not that confidence in you, although you have expressed it in me. I can not let you look in. I decline to give you the information." We have a joint committee. By the way, I have heard some attack the joint committee employees. They are all right. The result of this information is from the activity of the clerks of the joint committee and not the joint committee itself. The employees of the joint committee have functioned well. They are able men; they are doing their duty; they are willing to tell the truth and the whole truth. But that joint committee will not function. You can not get a meeting of the committee. The clerk of that committee wrote Mr. HAWLEY a letter, a copy of which I have on my desk, suggesting that he call a meeting of that committee, but no meeting has been called. His duty is to examine them, and he made the suggestion to the joint committee to have a meeting. But you could not get the committee to meet. The committee has the power. Yes; but the committee does not exercise it. What is the use of giving it power unless it exercises the power?

It was the intention of Congress when this committee was created that it would function, that it would look into the Treasury's activities and report back to Congress whether the laws were properly administered. It has not done it.

The only way we can do it is to make an unequivocal statute, and that is what the Senate proposes to do, requiring them to send it to the Board of Tax Appeals and get their sanction before it is approved.

Now I notify you that when you come back with the bill from the Senate and it has that amendment in it, you need not ask to take it to conference by unanimous consent, for you will not get it. You will either let us vote on that amendment or bring in a rule or go back to the committee under the regular rule; because if the amendment is placed in the bill in the Senate, you will go on record on this proposed statute by which we can examine these stupendous refunds by the Treasury Department. [Applause.]

WALTER D. LOVELL

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5944, for the relief of Walter D. Lovell, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5944, and agree to the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were read and agreed to.

DEFINING CHILD AND CHILDREN IN THE ACTS OF MAY 18, 1920 AND JUNE 10, 1922

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12449, to define the terms child and children as used in the acts of May 18, 1920, and June 10, 1922, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12449, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MORIN, Mr. JAMES, and Mr. MCSWAIN.

INCOME REFUND

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am interested in the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the distinguished minority leader of the Ways and Means Committee, a speech that I would call insinuations regarding tax refunds made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, I also want to ask the House to read his speech carefully to-morrow. He has not in all his speech, unless I misunderstood it, made a single positive statement as to a refund made in any other manner than according to the law which was passed by this body, and I think the RECORD will show that the gentleman from Texas himself did not oppose the law.

I do not think it quite the thing to do to make a speech insinuating that the man in business, let him be big or little, has been able to mulct the Government of the United States out of some money unlawfully through the Secretary of the Treasury. I know a giant concern in this country which was given credit for a million and a half dollars, in round numbers, in the past year, but it was in settlement of a case pending since 1918, and that same concern went through every single agency created by this body and won its case in every agency. Is there anything wrong in rebating what we lawfully provide for in overpayment of taxes collected?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman's information, if I understand it, is that this concern got it through the Board of Tax Appeals, through the courts?

Mr. BEGG. No; they did not get it there. They went through every agency, and then the collector, the head of the revenue, Mr. Blair, was not in a position to say that the Government would accept or reject for a long period of time, but finally decided in favor of the claimant, and refunded the claimant a million and a half dollars.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The courts or the Treasury Department?

Mr. BEGG. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. BEGG. Is the gentleman in favor of the Government of the United States taking money from a big taxpayer or a little one, for that matter, to which the Government is not rightfully entitled?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Certainly not.

Mr. BEGG. In his speech, does the gentleman insinuate that the Secretary of the Treasury has wrongfully settled a single case in the whole history of the Government?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will be glad to answer that if the gentleman will let me.

Mr. BEGG. Yes; answer it yes or no, not in a long speech.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I say this, that with the stupendous amounts being refunded, the Secretary of the Treasury ought to welcome examination by this House as to whether he is settling them rightfully or wrongfully. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BEGG. The Secretary of the Treasury is not concealing any of the facts.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. He does not give anybody any facts.

Mr. BEGG. He gives everybody the facts to which he is entitled, and the gentlemen on the committee can go down to the Secretary of the Treasury—and I have no authority to speak for him—and I know that they can get every bit of information that I can get, and a little more. I have never sought any information on refunds or on taxes due that I was denied.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Then I make the request through the gentleman now for the names of the people who have gotten credits and rebates in the last few years.

Mr. BEGG. What right has the gentleman to the names any more than to the amount and the time.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I have not any more, but he gives the amounts of the rebates, but not the names.

Mr. BEGG. But we ourselves passed a law denying that as public property.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, where is the law?

Mr. BEGG. We repealed the law making it public property, which is the same thing. I think it is not for the best interests of the country at large to make a speech insinuating and by innuendo leaving the interpretation that the Secretary of the Treasury, because he has refunded $2,600,000,000, has done something which is not right. To me we ought to refund $2,600,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 if it does not rightfully belong to the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15712, making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the War Department appropriation bill, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, it is our purpose, if possible, to finish the consideration of this bill by 2 o'clock. The bill was reported to the House on January 3, and off and on has been under consideration during all of the time since then. We have been quite liberal in allowing time for discussion and debate, and I hope all will cooperate and close the discussion and consideration of the bill by 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MUSCLE SHOALS

For operating, maintaining, and keeping in repair the works at Dam No. 2, Tennessee River, including the hydroelectrical development, $270,000, to remain available until June 30, 1930, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I think it is fair to announce that the rule will be adhered to for the remainder of the discussion of this bill, owing to the program for the day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection; and the gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I do not oppose the item in the Army appropriation bill which has just been read appropriating $270,000 for operation and maintaining Dam No. 2 for the next fiscal year, but I take this occasion to call the attention of the House and the country to the situation at Muscle Shoals with the view of showing the very great importance of the enactment of legislation at this session providing for the operation of the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of fertilizer for the relief of the overburdened and distressed farmers of the country. This plant has remained idle, in a stand-by condition, since the war ended. The hydroelectric plant has been operated in part for the past two or three years. During this time the Government has sold to the Alabama Power Co. such an amount of power as it desired at about 2 mills per killowatt-hour under a contract revocable at the will of either party on 30 days' notice. During the year 1928 the United States district engineer, by authority from the Chief of Engineers, furnished the Florence Daily Times-News, published at Florence, Ala., daily reports showing the amount of available power, the amount sold to the power company, and the amount of wasted power. These amounts have been compiled and I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a tabulation, by months, as follows.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to insert the statement indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

[From the Florence Times-News, Florence, Ala., Wednesday, January 2, 1929]

TREMENDOUS LOSSES AT WILSON DAM FOR 1928 SHOWN BY GOVERNMENT FIGURES ON POWER SOLD AND WASTED

Compilations for the year 1928, just closed, assembled from official Government figures at Wilson Dam, reveal that during the 12 months there was a total waste of 1,579,788,041 kilowatt-hours of power, while for the year there was sold to the Alabama Power Co., under the arrangement the Government now has with this company, only 217,115,687 kilowatt-hours, out of a total estimated available for the year of 1,796,903,728 kilowatt-hours. These figures, compiled by the Times-News from the figures now furnished it each day by the Government authorities at Wilson Dam reveal that in 1928 the Alabama Power Co. took only a little over 12 per cent of the total estimated available power.

By figuring the amounts of power taken by the Alabama Power Co. each month in 1928 and the official amounts paid by the company for the first 11 months of the year—the figures for December not being available on amount paid—the approximate average of $0.002115 per kilowatt-hour is reached as the price the Alabama Power Co. pays for the gross power it takes from the Government. Using this figure as a basis, the Times-News thus secures for the year 1928 $3,341,251.70 as the value of the waste power, even at this ridiculously low price.

In connection with to-day's compilations for the year 1928, the following complete table is given, showing the totals for each month of 1928:

Month	Available power	Kilowatt-hours sold at $0.002115	Amount received by United States Government	Wasted power, kilowatt-hours	Amount lost, computed at $0.002115 per kilowatt-hour
January	159,960,000	48,185,765	$104,533.78	111,774,235	$236,402.51
February	149,640,000	52,508,765	111,673.13	97,131,235	205,432.56
March	158,242,128	37,654,510	80,448.42	120,587,618	255,042.81
April	154,800,000	17,493,090	36,830.75	137,306,910	290,404.11
May	159,960,000	3,110,275	6,220.55	156,849,725	331,737.17
June	154,800,000	2,816,415	5,632.83	151,983,585	321,445.28
July	159,960,000	2,836,867	5,673.73	157,123,133	332,315.43
August	152,241,900	14,399,000	28,699.94	137,842,900	291,537.73
September	146,417,500	7,291,000	14,478.21	139,126,500	294,252.55
October	136,625,100	8,409,000	16,810.00	123,216,100	260,602.51
November	129,455,200	7,445,000	13,690.00	122,010,200	258,051.57
December	139,801,900	14,966,000	31,642.00	124,788,900	264,027.92
Grand total	1,796,903,728	217,115,687	456,157.47	1,579,788,041	3,341,251.70

NOTE.—December amount received by Government estimated at $0.002115 per kilowatt.

The distressing part of this is not the two or three million dollars' worth of power that has been running to waste, but the many millions of dollars that would have been saved the farmers in the reduced price of fertilizer had it been used in the operation of the fertilizer plant, as was intended when the power plant was built.

When this item of the expense for the operation of this plant for the next fiscal year was being considered by the Appropriations Committee the representatives of the Engineer Department were asked why more of the power was not sold. The essence of their testimony was to the effect that they could make a more profitable lease of the power if they had the authority from Congress to do so. Congress has refused to give such authority, for a very good reason, at least as far as the House is concerned. The majority of the Members of the House has insisted, and I believe still do, that no lease of the power at Muscle Shoals shall be made without a provision in the lease that will guarantee the operation of the nitrate plant No. 2 for the production of fertilizer. President Coolidge in his various messages has insisted that any lease of the Government's Muscle Shoals property should provide primarily for the production of fertilizer in peace times. When application was presented to him recently for the purchase of this power for a period of five years without any provision for the operation of the fertilizer plant he declined to give it his approval and again said that he was opposed to a sale of the power for a number of years unless at the same time provision was made for the operation of the nitrate plant for the manufacture of fertilizer.

Mr. JAMES. Nobody except Congress has a right to lease for two, three, or five years.

Mr. ALMON. The Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, sold the Gorgas steam plant, which cost the Government about $5,000,000, being a part of the Muscle Shoals development, to the power company without authority from Congress.

Mr. JAMES. But the Judge Advocate General did not concur.

Mr. ALMON. This position of President Coolidge is eminently right and sound, because the nitrate plant and the hydroelectric plant at Muscle Shoals constitute one plant or unit. The hydroelectric plant was constructed to create power to operate the nitrate plant.

Congress authorized and directed this development for two fundamental purposes, viz, to make explosives in times of war and fertilizer in peace times. If the power is disposed of and the plant remains idle in a stand-by condition, as it has since the war ended, the nitrate plant would rust out and become obsolete and of no value for national-defense purposes in the event of war.

All nations learned one very valuable lesson as a result of the World War. That is, that no nation of any standing or respectability can afford to depend upon a foreign market for a supply of nitrogen for explosives in time of war. Germany had the foresight and wisdom before the beginning of the war to prepare, and built great nitrogen plants, and if she had not done so, when her supply of Chilean nitrates was cut off she would have been helpless and could not have prosecuted the war. If the German submarines had destroyed the Panama Canal and cut off our supply of nitrogen from Chile, we would have been helpless to have prosecuted the war had it not been for the erection of the nitrogen plant at Muscle Shoals.

We can only preserve our nitrogen plant at Muscle Shoals for national-defense purposes by operating it in peace times for the manufacture of fertilizer, thereby keeping it in an up-to-date running condition for the manufacture of explosives in the event of war. But this would not be all.

The farmers of the country would be denied the benefits which have been promised them and which they have the right to expect in securing better and cheaper fertilizer. Fertilizer can be made at Muscle Shoals at about one-half or not more than two-thirds the prevailing prices. This has been proved before the committees of Congress and can not be successfully denied. It can be produced there in a concentrated form containing as much as 50 per cent plant food, which would be a saving of millions of dollars to the American farmers in transportation charges. Nitrates can be produced at the Muscle Shoals plant for approximately 5 cents per pound, while nitrates in the form of Chilean nitrate cost about 20 cents per pound.

Much propaganda has been sent out in recent years for the purpose of trying to show that the cyanamide process for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen at the Muscle Shoals plant is obsolete. This was done by interests that desired to see Muscle Shoals converted into a hydroelectric-power development and prevent the operation of the nitrate plant for the manufacture of fertilizer.

No process is obsolete that is being successfully used and on a large scale. The American Cyanamid Co. built Muscle Shoals plant for the Government, owns the patent for the process, and has submitted to Congress an offer to the lease of the entire Muscle Shoals development for 50 years, and is and has been since 1909 successfully operating a plant of this kind with this process at Niagara Falls, Canada.

There are many plants in Germany and other European countries using this cyanamide process successfully, and some such plants have been erected in recent years.

Where there is cheap power and all the raw materials in close proximity and in inexhaustible quantities as exists at Muscle Shoals, I am of the opinion, after making extensive investigation and visiting the cyanamide plant at Niagara Falls, Canada, that the cyanamide process is the best. Much has been said about the advantages of the synthetic process over the cyanamide process, but the fact remains that there is no synthetic plant in the United States that is providing nitrogen for fertilizer purposes, so we must look to the Muscle Shoals plant for cheaper nitrogen for fertilizer purposes.

To allow this great investment by the Government at Muscle Shoals to remain idle when it could be of such great service to the people would be little less than a public calamity. [Applause.]

Germany and other European countries have been utilizing their nitrogen plants since the war in providing fertilizer for the benefit of their farmers and have been so successful that Germany, for instance, no longer imports nitrogen from Chile but has become a large exporter of nitrogen and fertilizer, some of which is being imported into the United States. What Germany has done in this respect can be and should have been done long ago with the Government's plant at Muscle Shoals.

During the first session of this Congress the American Cyanamid Co. submitted to the Congress an offer to lease Muscle Shoals for a term of 50 years, which provided for the operation of the nitrate plant for the manufacture of a highly concentrated fertilizer, and providing for the construction of Dam No. 3 on the Tennessee River about 15 miles above Muscle Shoals, and the Cove Creek Dam located on the Clinch River in east Tennessee, a tributary of the Tennessee River.

Mr. Madden, of Illinois, introduced a bill providing for the acceptance of this offer. His bill was referred to the Military Affairs Committee of the House. This committee held extensive hearings and I am informed that the committee finally approved of every feature of the bill except what is known as the recapture clause.

This question has been before Congress so long and being of such very great national importance, would it not be proper and aid in the settlement for the committee to report the bill to the House, each member of the committee, if he desired, reserving the right to offer amendments and oppose the passage of the bill.

The result of such action on the part of the committee would give the House an opportunity to consider the bill in every aspect. In this way the controverted parts of the bill might be ironed out and a bill in the interest of the Government and agriculture as well worked out and passed. Such a proceeding on the part of the committee would not be without precedent.

I have made these remarks with the view of showing the importance of legislation on this subject without further delay. I urge upon the leaders of the majority who decide what bills shall be considered during the remainder of this session of Congress to take steps to have the Madden bill brought before the House for consideration, which I trust they will do. [Applause.]

We hear much these days about farm-relief legislation. This proposed legislation is real farm relief. I do not know of any thing that the farmers are in greater need of and which will be more helpful to them than to be able to secure a good grade of fertilizer at a reasonable price. That, in my opinion, would be the result of a settlement of the Muscle Shoals question in the right way. In the event this is not done at this session I sincerely hope that the new President, Mr. Hoover, will include in the legislative program of the extra session Muscle Shoals legislation. It is just as important to the farmers as any farm-relief legislation that will be considered at that session. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Alabama Judge ALMON, who is always vigorous and alert in all matters pertaining to Muscle Shoals, has just called your attention to a chart based on figures prepared by the Army engineers, which shows that during the year 1928 the Government of the United States sustained a loss of $3,341,251.70 at Muscle Shoals. I have here a statement which shows that prior to last year, up to June 30, 1927, the Government sustained a loss of $7,379,008 at Muscle Shoals; and, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert this statement and the accompanying figures in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the matter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

Financial losses to the Government at Muscle Shoals to June 30, 1927

All we have to show for the past nine years of delay is a series of losses and unproductive expenses, which, omitting depreciation on our properties, total as follows:

EXPENSE AND LOSS

Dam No. 2:
Maintenance due to cessation of work[1]	$359,593
Construction loss due to failure of appropriations[2]	5,000,000
Operation, maintenance, and repair to June 30, 1927[3]	283,447
		$5,643,040
Nitrate plant No. 1:
Cost of unsuccessful experimentation and maintenance expense to June 30, 1927[4 5]		984,303
Nitrate plant No. 2:
Operating and maintenance expense to June 30, 1927[4 5]		4,092,086
Total maintenance, loss, and unproductive expense, omitting depreciation on nitrate plant No. 2		10,719,429

REVENUE

From lease of steam-power plant, rentals of employees' houses, etc.[3]	1,885,871
From sale of Muscle Shoals power to June 30, 1927, available for payment of operation expenses[3]	1,454,550
Total income	3,340,421
Net loss to June 30, 1927	7,379,008

Experimentation: Our experience account in nitrogen fixation experimentation during and since the war amounts to $14,000,000, the cost of nitrate plant No. 1, an experimental plant, and $2,000,000 for our fixed-nitrogen research laboratory, making a total for experimentation alone of $16,000,000.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, these statements show a total of nearly $11,000,000 which the Government of the United States has lost at Muscle Shoals since the World War. For what purpose, for what reason have we sustained this loss of nearly $11,000,000? A few years ago the National Fertilizer Association told Congress and the country that the great nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals was obsolete, and so we have sustained this loss of some $11,000,000 to protect our farmers from that obsolete plant. In Canada, at Niagara Falls, the American Cyanamid Co. has a great nitrate plant. This plant at Niagara Falls was built by the American Cyanamid Co. just as the Government's plant at Muscle Shoals was built by the American Cyanamid Co. Both of these plants use the same method. Both are fundamentally the same and, of course, both of them are obsolete.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Not right at this minute. I will later. On January 1, 1926, the plant of the American Cyanamid Co. at Niagara Falls, in Canada, had an annual capacity of 120,000 tons of cyanamide. In May of this year that plant will have an annual capacity at the rate of 355,000 tons of cyanamide, a great part of which will be shipped into this country for our farmers. Three hundred and fifty-five thousand tons of cyanamide contains 81,650 tons of pure nitrogen and is more nitrogen than was contained in the Chilean nitrate used by agriculture in this country in 1927, and is approximately 60 per cent more than the annual capacity of the Government's great plant at Muscle Shoals. If the Government has sustained the loss of some $11,000,000 to protect our American farmers from the obsolete plant at Muscle Shoals, I suggest to you gentlemen that what the Committee on Ways and Means should do, particularly in view of the fact that it is now writing a new tariff bill, is to put a tariff high enough to protect our farmers from the obsolete plant in Canada. Since we have spent so many millions of dollars to protect our farmers from the obsolete plant at Muscle Shoals, why not also protect our farmers against the obsolete plant in Canada, particularly when we consider the fact that a great part of the cyanamide made by the plant in Canada is sent to an ammonium phosphate plant at Warners, N. J., and there converted into ammonium phosphate. On January 1, 1926, the plant at Warners, N. J., had an annual capacity of some 30,000 tons of ammonium phosphate. By May of this year that plant will have an annual capacity at the rate of 250,000 tons of ammonium phosphate. Gentlemen will recall that ammonium phosphate is a very high-grade fertilizer containing 61 per cent plant food. Surely in view of the protection we have given our farmers from the plant at Muscle Shoals we should also protect them from the Warners, N. J., ammonium phosphate plant when we consider the following statement of the Secretary of Agriculture to be found on page 80 of his 1928 report. The statement is as follows:

Another important branch of the department's fertilizer studies indicates the economy of concentrated fertilizer mixtures. Fertilizers should be marketed in a high state of concentration. Four or five years ago commercial fertilizer mixtures seldom contained more than 15 per cent plant food. Sale of such mixtures entailed the sacking, transportation, and handling of 85 per cent of materials from which the farmer obtained little, if any, benefit. The freight bill paid annually by the American farmer for the delivery of the 7,000,000 tons of fertilizer which he purchases amounts to approximately $20,000,000. If the concentration of fertilizers should be increased twofold, the freight bill would be cut in two, and the annual bill of $12,000,000 paid for sacks would likewise be halved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit me to have two additional minutes?

Mr. BARBOUR. We must read the bill.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Let me say to the gentleman that this is the first time that I have asked for any time on the floor this year.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have no objection to the gentleman having two additional minutes, but we must read this bill if we are to finish it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Alabama is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Gentlemen of the committee, I am sorry I can not finish my statement. Of course, what I have said to you about these obsolete plants was in levity. If our plant at Muscle Shoals is obsolete, the great plant at Niagara Falls and many of the great plants in Germany and Europe are also obsolete. In all earnestness and in all seriousness let me say to you that what this House ought to do is to pass the Madden bill, which provides for the production of ammonium phosphate, and which, according to the testimony before the Military Affairs Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, should cut the cost of the American farmers' fertilizer in half. This House should pass that bill for the benefit of the farmers and for the welfare of the whole country. I have here a calendar of the House, and I notice that by special order the House has set February 10 for services on the life, character, and public services of the late Hon. Martin B. Madden. Those services, of course, will be most proper and fitting, but, after all, they will be mere words, mere passing speech. I submit to you, gentlemen, that the most fitting tribute that this House could pay to Martin B. Madden would be to take the Madden bill up for consideration on this floor and then rise and pass it by a standing vote. That would, indeed, be a lasting tribute to the statesman and the citizen, Martin B. Madden.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Alabama whether he means that the Madden bill should be passed as introduced or that the Madden bill should be passed with the amendment which was proposed by the subcommittee of the Military Affairs Committee and submitted to the proponents of that bill, but which they would not accept?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Let me say to the gentleman that I am willing to leave that to the judgment of the House. What I am most interested in is to see the bill come here and get consideration and action by the House, for I have no doubt it would be passed by the House.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. In other words, whether we should pass that bill without the recapture clause or with the recapture clause that was proposed by the committee.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Let the House determine that, I will say to the gentleman from New York.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

FLOOD CONTROL

Flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries: For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood control act, approved May 15, 1928 (45 Stat. p. 534), $30,000,000.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee for a moment. I will say to the chairman of the subcommittee that I am seeking a little information and an interpretation of this appropriation and the one on the page preceding pertaining to rivers and harbors. I note that the one for rivers and harbors contains $50,000,000 and this $30,000,000. I remember that last year, when we made the appropriation for rivers and harbors, we had an allocation report which the engineers' department had made for us showing the amounts of money to be expended on each of the rivers on which we had ordered surveys. With respect to that I am seeking information as to whether or not there is in this appropriation for rivers and harbors an allocation for carrying on the work on the rivers on which we have ordered surveys as was the case last year?

Mr. BARBOUR. On the surveys?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. On page 108 of the hearings, Part II, Nonmilitary Activities, all of the allocations are set out.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman for that information. The appropriation for flood control is $30,000,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I call attention to the fact that section 10 of the flood control bill allocated $5,000,000 of the total appropriations for making flood surveys on certain tributaries of the Mississippi. I want to get the interpretation of the committee and the chairman as to whether or not there are funds available in this $30,000,000 to carry on those surveys.

Mr. BARBOUR. That was so testified before the committee, and further it was stated to the committee that this work is being prosecuted as diligently as is possible.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Then, Mr. Chairman, before I withdraw the pro forma amendment I want to call attention to the fact that yesterday we took a very important step when we passed the inland waterways bill. Some of us are hoping that through this great work other inland waterways will be established which will be of great benefit to the people of this Nation, including in this work the Arkansas River in Oklahoma and Arkansas, and my purpose in rising was to make sure that after this measure had passed there could not be any misinterpretation that would in any way delay this great work.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that there are ample funds in the bill to carry on this work and the other work of the Board of Army Engineers.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal; salary of the governor, $10,000; purchase, inspection, delivery, handling, and storing of materials, supplies, and equipment for issue to all departments of the Panama Canal, the Panama Railroad, other branches of the United States Government, and for authorized sales, payment in lump sums of not exceeding the amounts authorized by the injury compensation act approved September 7, 1916 (U. S. C., p. 81, sec. 793), to alien cripples who are now a charge upon the Panama Canal by reason of injuries sustained while employed in the construction of the Panama Canal; in all, $8,000,000, including $1,000,000 for continuing the construction of a dam across the Chagres River at Alhajuela for the storage of water for use in the maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal, together with a hydroelectric plant, roadways, and such other work as in the judgment of the Governor of the Panama Canal may be necessary, to cost in the aggregate not to exceed $12,000,000, together with all moneys arising from the conduct of business operations authorized by the Panama Canal act;

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: On page 88, line 17, following the semicolon, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That in recognition of the exceptionally distinguished services in Congress for nearly 24 years of Martin B. Madden, the late chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and in appreciation of his active and efficient interest in the Panama Canal throughout its entire construction and operation, and in recently causing the commencement of the construction of said dam across the Chagres River at or near Alhajuela, the said dam and the lake created thereby and the entire plant and the road leading thereto shall hereafter be known and designated on the public records as the Madden Dam, Lake, Plant, and Road."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the House, I realize fully that this amendment is subject to a point of order if anyone saw fit to make it, but I can not believe there is one Member of this entire House who will not gladly join in paying this preeminently just and so richly deserved tribute to our former chairman of this Appropriations Committee. For 30 years the Panama Canal was one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of the life works of Martin B. Madden. I understand that in 1896 he wrote the plank in the Republican national platform which definitely committed the McKinley administration to the construction of a canal across the Isthmus at either Nicaragua or Panama; and from that day to his death he gave the best and most earnest work possible to the efficient construction and practical operation of that canal. For 30 years he said that "canal should be built, owned, and operated by the United States"; and he gave more skill, attention, and time to it during all that time than any other Member of this House. He had a natural aptitude for engineering and construction work.

He was instinctively a builder and financier and he always took pride in this gigantic work. A very few of the older Members will remember that in the early days of the work he made many trips to the Canal Zone and spent the days going through the swamps and jungle personally examining the conditions and slept on a ship out in the harbor. There is not a Member of Congress alive to-day who made those investigation trips with him. In recent years, as he watched the rapidly growing business and importance of the canal, he clearly foresaw the necessity of increasing the amount of water available for the use of those locks and he commenced investigating the practicability of building a large dam up on the Chagres River to impound the terrific floods of that stream for use of the locks during the dry season. He brought about that engineering survey and investigation and the location of the dam and the authorization by Congress of the construction of the dam. He was the originator and creator of this monumental engineering enterprise for which we, his colleagues on this committee, are to-day appropriating this money. He is entitled to all this and much more credit than I am able to give him in this limited time. No one can ever deny his authorship.

He is the father of this dam. It will be one of the most important dams in the world to the commerce of every nation on earth. It will enormously enhance the value and the volume of business of the Panama Canal. It will furnish sufficient water so that these marvelous locks may operate 24 hours a day and 365 days in every year, as they have got to do; and Martin B. Madden is the one who conceived and brought about this great plan. To properly appreciate what this service means to our country and to the world, both in business and convenience to the ocean-traveling public and to commerce, both in time of peace and much more in time of war, the Members and the public should study necessity and the dimensions of this dam and the quantity of water it will conserve that is now running to waste. I investigated this matter when I visited the Canal Zone a year ago, and became so profoundly impressed with the great service to humanity of our colleague in this matter that soon after my return I introduced House Joint Resolution No. 250 on March 26, 1928, in the language of the amendment I have just offered. I know the membership of this House would have been more than delighted to have passed that resolution during his lifetime. But we knew he was always opposed to naming anything after a living person, and for that reason I did not press the consideration of the resolution. But alas, how soon after that was that objection of his overruled.

My thought is that instead of passing that resolution it would now be more appropriate and fitting for this committee, his committee, to insert this provision in this Army appropriation bill dealing with that canal and that dam. I feel very strongly that this action would be the highest honor that the American Congress could pay to our late honored and beloved chairman. It would be the most suitable monument that could ever be erected to his memory and to his life work. It would be a permanent governmental memorial and tribute to his great service to his country as long as the Isthmus of Panama is inhabited by human beings. It would perpetuate forever his great life work for the success of the Panama Canal. I know our action would be very highly appreciated by the splendid woman who was his life's companion, and his estimable daughter and son-in-law, and by every Member of Congress and his many thousands of friends. The word "Alhajuela" has no meaning or special signification whatever, while there is every reason that this great dam should bear the name of its creator. Martin B. Madden was an honor to Congress and to our country and a benefactor to the human race. Having served with him nearly 20 years in Congress and 8 years with him on this Appropriations Committee, I know that by the creation of this memorial to our distinguished colleague and departed friend Congress will honor itself and our country, and our act will be a perpetual inspiration to the youth of America as long as the Stars and Stripes float over our Nation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the action of the committee on January 4, 1929, relating to the change in reference to the Code of Laws throughout the bill be vacated, so that the citation will remain in the bill as originally reported.

Mr. BARBOUR. That will include unanimous consent that I obtained that all the other citations be made in accordance with that change of reference.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the action of the committee in changing the reference to the Code of Laws in the bill and the unanimous consent given to the gentleman from California in connection therewith be vacated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15712, the Army appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL JUDGES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, House Resolution 273.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 273

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of each of the following bills, to be called up in the following order:

H. R. 9200, to provide for the appointment of three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

H. R. 14659, to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

S. 1976, to provide for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit.

S. 1275, to provide for an additional judge for the southern district of Florida.

That after general debate on each bill, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, each bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of each bill for amendment the committee shall arise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on each bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the rule under consideration is practically the same rule that is presented for the consideration of all bills except that this provides for four separate measures to be presented by the Judiciary Committee and gives the order in which they shall be called up in the House. Each one when called up is to be considered under the general rules of the House. The reason why we have more New York judges in these bills is this: Practically all the bills that have been presented for creating additional judges when properly sponsored by the Judiciary Committee and the council of judges have gone through by unanimous consent. But for one reason or another the New York bills have been held up for the last four years, and I think it is time that they should be considered by the House, and I do not propose to take any more chances by the unanimous-consent route.

I do not know of any stronger statement that I can make in setting forth the necessity for the appointment of these judges than to read to you a part of the report of the council of judges held in Washington, September 28, last year.

As Members will recall at the time we passed the omnibus judges' bill in 1922, creating 20 or 21 Federal judges, there was some criticism and a little doubt on the part of some as to whether we should create as many new judges as was carried in that bill. I was one of those Members that led to providing for a council of judges, comprised of the senior circuit judges of the nine Federal judicial districts of the United States, which should come together each year in the city of Washington as a council and should be presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States. That council has gone over very carefully the work in the several judicial districts and made recommendations to Congress relative to the condition of the work in the several districts and also the need of certain additional judges.

The report says, in part:

> Each circuit judge produced a report from the senior district judge of his circuit, with the statistics and an explanation of the condition of each district in his circuit, and much of the conference was taken up in considering the progressive changes in the reduction of dead cases and in the normal growth of business.
>
> Speaking generally, it was clear to the conference that the condition of business in all the courts was satisfactory and showed that there were enough judges to do the business, and that the business would all be done, except that in the second circuit, the two districts, which are the southern and eastern districts of New York, including New York and Brooklyn, are in a hopeless situation, and can not be bettered unless at least three district judges are permanently added to the southern district of New York and two in the eastern district of New York. This deficiency has been brought to the attention of Congress for several years and the present need is greater than ever. It is respectfully urged that there may be no further delay in the creation of these five new district judgeships.
> In addition to the New York district judges, only one more seems to be required, and that is for the southern district of Florida. In this very extended district it is proposed that there should be district judges enough so that there may be one sitting at Jacksonville, another at Tampa, and a third at Miami.

I think that is the main part of the report in connection with the need of these judges. They go on to say that during the past year, up to September 28 of last year, there were 15 judges called in from various parts of the country to help out the New York situation.

As the Members here know who are lawyers, the Federal procedure follows the State procedure in each one of the States, and there are nearly as many different kinds of State procedures as there are different States in the Union. When you bring in an outside judge he is not familiar with the situation that exists in New York, and it is equally hard for him as well as for the litigants themselves. It is very unsatisfactory, especially considering the large number of cases that deal with admiralty. Very few of the judges brought in from the central part of the United States are at all familiar with that kind of law or would know how to handle those cases. As a result the admiralty cases are piling up year by year.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. COLLINS. What about the additional judge for Mississippi?

Mr. SNELL. At the time we reported out this rule there was no bill on the calendar providing for an additional judge for Mississippi, and up to the present time an additional judge for the State of Mississippi has not been recommended by the council of circuit judges. While that is not an all-prevailing argument, nevertheless it was important enough to have their recommendation so that the Congress itself, when it passed the omnibus judges' bill, created this council of judges for the special purpose of keeping in close touch with the Federal courts and the work in each, and also to report to Congress not only the conditions but the need of additional judges.

Mr. COLLINS. Does the gentleman know the action of the the Judiciary Committee upon the question of the additional judge for Mississippi?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I am familiar with the action of the Committee on the Judiciary; but, as I said before, at the time this rule was reported out that bill was not on the calendar; and I have been unable to get any hearings from the Judiciary Committee up to this time relative to the actual need of a judge in that district; and I doubt if such information is available or if the committee has held proper hearings to determine it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. The committee has filed its report upon the Mississippi judgeship, recommending it, and urging it be passed, because in that district there are two sets of machinery in operation, fully equipped, two districts, and all we want to do is to appoint an additional judge, and the two districts could then function, each having a judge. Our committee reported the bill out favorably and the bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. When you consider the fact that the Mississippi judge has been called up to New York to help out in that situation, I think twice in the last year, it does not seem to me that there can be any extra demand for a new judge in that district under those circumstances. He has been one of the judges who has always been called to help out the New York situation.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think, without knowing all of the circumstances, that the conclusion which the gentleman draws is justifiable.

Mr. SNELL. That perhaps is true, but I am stating the case as it has come to me, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not presented any evidence yet to change my mind.

Mr. GRAHAM. The congestion in New York made it necessary to bring to New York those whom they could summon and use in New York to expedite the business there. It is true that an act of Congress was passed creating this board of senior judges, but I do not hold, and will never consent to it, so far as I am concerned, that it is necessary to get the imprimatur of that board upon every appointment that Congress chooses to make. We did not surrender our legislative function when we created this board. It was not for the appointment of judges but for getting a full and complete view of the situation so that they might consider these matters from every viewpoint, and make such recommendations to Congress as they might deem proper.

Mr. SNELL. I admit that that is not the all-controlling element in the situation, but I do contend that one of the main purposes this convention was called for was to look over the situation and recommend to Congress the need of additional judges.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. And is it not further true that we are adopting extraordinary means here by bringing in a special rule to put these bills ahead of other bills, and because of this, should we not use extraordinary precaution as to the bills thus considered? And is not one means of precaution to have the advice of this senior counsel of judges?

Mr. SNELL. That is one of the yardsticks that the Rules Committee has gone by, and I think we are right in taking that position. In addition to the need for judges in New York, this conference of judges recommends an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit and also one additional Federal judge for the State of Florida. We have included in this special rule every one of the judges recommended by the council of judges, and I think we have done well in not going any further at the present time, although I do not say a case can not be made out in regard to additional judges elsewhere, and I would not want to go on record as being against them, as I do not know the conditions, but am reporting on the ones that have proven their case.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not want my position misunderstood. I acquiesce in the action of the Committee on Rules, but I wish that the House might know my views and the views of our committee with reference to the necessity for action on the part of the council of judges before we determine to recommend the appointment of a new judge.

Mr. SNELL. I am trying to explain the situation as presented to our committee, and the reason we are proceeding in this manner at this time. From any information that I have these judgships should be created, and I am firmly convinced that the House should adopt this rule and pass these bills.

Does the gentleman from Alabama desire any time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like a few moments.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama such time as he may need.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, for some time my information was that there was considerable opposition on the part of some to the passage of these bills providing for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges in New York and elsewhere, but it is now my information that there will be no substantial opposition to the passage of the bills as they are called up in order. In view of that fact I can state to the chairman of the committee that I shall concur in the adoption of the rule at this time, although I opposed it in the committee. I realize, of course, that the full administration of justice is a very important matter, and whenever it is shown there is actual necessity for the appointment of additional judges, I think it is not only the part of wisdom but the duty of Congress to provide the necessary machinery for the enforcement of the law.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9200.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman, does he desire to make any suggestion as to how the time shall be controlled?

Mr. GRAHAM. Is there any opposition?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania so far as I know there is no opposition to these bills—I answered the inquiry somewhat out of order, making reference to the four bills incorporated in this rule—I know of no opposition on this side. I am not myself opposed to the bills.

Mr. SNELL. Then we can get through with them very quickly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want a little time. I make this suggestion, that discussion on this bill be limited to 40 minutes——

Mr. SNELL. Discussion is limited to one hour, but that hour need not be used——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We will expedite as rapidly as possible. I make the suggestion that I control half the time with which to yield to gentlemen who desire to discuss the measure.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that one half the time be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that he control one half the time and the gentleman from Texas control the other half. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9200, with Mr. BACON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9200, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9200) to provide for the appointment of three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judges of said district.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, in view of the full explanation by the chairman of the Committee on Rules and the fact that these measures have been before Congress for several years and the various reports which have been submitted show the necessity for the passage of this bill, I therefore reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes. Mr. Chairman, I have opposed greatly increasing the number of Federal judges hoping that some plan might be worked out under which such increases would not be necessary. But that plan has not been worked out. Congestion in the courts has continued to increase until it has reached the point in some of the districts, particularly in those districts provided for in these bills, at which there is to a definite degree a denial of justice, and the proper administration of the criminal laws is not possible. For those reasons I feel this bill and the other bills included in the rule ought to be passed. I yield back the remainder of my time, and if I may be permitted I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it will take but a very little time to justify my voting in favor of the bill for the two extra judges in the United States District Court in Brooklyn. In the last Congress I was inclined to oppose the bill, but upon closer examination of the situation as far as the United States District Court of the Eastern District of New York is concerned, and after reviewing certain tabulations which were given to me by the clerk of that court, which I intend to put in the RECORD for the information of the Members of the House, I am inclined now to the view that there should be an increased number of judges to take care of the increasing number of cases now pouring into the eastern district—the eastern district covering Brooklyn, the rest of Long Island, and Richmond Borough. There are now three judges presiding in that court, Judge Inch, Judge Moskowitz, and Judge Campbell, and upon a careful examination of their work I willingly testify to the distinguished service they are rendering. In spite of their unremitting toil, in spite of their burning of midnight oil, they can not keep up with the cases. In addition to the cases in admiralty and common law and equity, and cases on the criminal side, they have literally an avalanche of bankruptcy and naturalization cases, which occupy a great deal of their attention.

Now, we tried to solve the situation, so far as the eastern district is concerned, by importing judges from other jurisdictions. But that does not work satisfactorily, and I will tell you why, gentlemen. An outside judge coming into New York sometimes does not understand or appreciate the point of view of members of the petit jury, and we have had many cases of miscarriages of justice in the eastern district in Brooklyn, only because the judge who had been brought in from another jurisdiction did not understand the psychology or temper or attitude of the membership of that petit jury. In addition, we have different reactions to the same states of facts by different judges brought in from outside jurisdictions. I need only point out one illustration, a clear illustration, with reference to the different reactions noticeable in prohibition cases. For instance, a judge from Texas was brought in to try some prohibition cases, and in all cases he could he inflicted imprisonment. That was Judge Atwell. Another judge rarely inflicted imprisonment as punishment on the same state of facts. He was Judge Howe, of Vermont. Therefore there is generated a feeling of inequality and unfairness—a lack of impartiality upon the citizenry. Similar violations should earn similar punishments. One man is sent to jail, and another man is fined for doing the same thing. That causes disrespect for our courts.

Therefore to secure uniformity in action these outside judges should not be brought in. But we need these additional judges unless you pass this bill. It takes almost two and a half years for a case to be tried—a common-law case—in the eastern district, and even with those two additional judges it will take a long time for the court to catch up with its work in equity, in admiralty, and patent cases.

Percy G. Gilkes, the very able and painstaking clerk of that court, has submitted to me the following data:

The calendars do not indicate accurately all of the cases that can be tried. Because of the fact that it will take three years at least to clear up the present admiralty calendar and dispose of every case on it, few new cases are being added. This is true also of common law.

In regard to the common-law calendar, there have been several additional terms held during the year. Judge Bryant from the northern district of New York, Judge Johnson from Pennsylvania, and Judge Cooper, also from the northern district of New York, have assisted in getting down the common-law calendar, as the terms they held were in addition to the regular terms held by our own judges.

There are three judges. One of the three holds criminal continuously. The second judge holds the motions, naturalizations, ex parte, and miscellaneous business. Monday is devoted to miscellaneous business generally. Often there is a calendar of so-called padlock cases, taking most of the day. Tuesday is naturalization day, Wednesday general motions; it being no uncommon thing to find 60 or more motions on the calendar. This takes always the whole morning and generally the afternoon as well. Thursday is naturalizations again, and Friday is bankruptcy calendar day, with from 50 to 65 or 70 motions. Yesterday, for example, there was a continuous performance from the opening of the court until half-past 1 and from 2 o'clock until 4, all of bankruptcy motions. Many of these are contested and decisions needed to be written in.

This leaves one judge to try admiralty, equity, and common law, three items. There are only nine months in which it is practicable to try cases. That means that three classes of cases get three months each for settlement. It is no wonder that the admiralty calendar, when 100 cases are disposed of during a term, will take three years to get rid of the present cases thereon.

The decisions in the patent and other equity cases and admiralty cases must be worked on and rendered. The only time available is when a judge is holding the motion term. As he is busy pretty nearly all day long, it would seem that the only time left is Saturday afternoons, Sundays, and at nights.

As clerk I take in the orders for the judge to sign. It is very distressing for me to go into the chambers with a bundle of from 20 to 50 orders and ask a judge to sign them when he is absorbed in dictation of opinions or busily engaged in other work. However, he must be interrupted, as the lawyers insist that orders they present must be handed to the judge and signed. The figures given for orders signed is conservative.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOMERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one minute.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to vote for this bill. At the same time I would like to remind this committee that at the present time there is an investigation going on in this court. It is an investigation that promises to be very sensational, and it is too bad that before passing this legislation we can not be guided by the facts that these investigators will bring forth. However, that is impossible now, but may I suggest to the Judiciary Committee that the greatest possible attention be given to this investigation in the hope that we may so amend our bankruptcy laws, that these judges, after they are appointed, will be backed by sound, proper, and careful legislation so as to be in a better position to properly discharge their duties in the interests of the people of these districts.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one minute.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we should cut off debate in that way. We have an hour for debate.

Mr. FISH. I should like to have at least two minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Then, Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman's request, I yield to him two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say in regard to the statement made by the gentleman who just spoke [Mr. SOMERS] that possibly the trouble he refers to in connection with bankruptcy cases has been caused by not having enough Federal judges in the southern district. The pressure on the present judges is so exacting that they have no time to check up the work of the referees appointed by them to handle bankruptcy cases. I suggest that the Committee on the Judiciary should draw up legislation either turning over these bankruptcy cases to banks and trust companies to act as referees or to provide for the appointment of permanent referees at a salary of $10,000 to handle all bankruptcy cases.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Something ought to be done.

Mr. FISH. I agree with the gentleman, and it is the duty of the Committee on the Judiciary to report back to this House without delay some method of properly protecting the assets in bankrupt firms which are apt to belong to needy people. Such men as Steinhardt, who would swindle bankrupt firms, is about as contemptible a human being as can be imagined. Our Federal judges in the southern district are honest and honorable men and are not responsible for the shameful conditions exposed by the Steinhardt swindle. We have heaped too much work on their backs, and one method of affording partial relief is to pass the bill before the House providing for three additional judges. I see no reason why it should not go through the present Congress and be enacted into law before March 4. All the judges and prominent lawyers in New York are for it, and there is no politics in it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not necessary under the rule. Under the rule the committee will now rise and report the bill back to the House.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BACON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9200) to provide for the appointment of three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, reported that that committee had directed him to report the bill back without amendment, pursuant to the rule House Resolution 273.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES OF THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14659) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14659, with Mr. HOOPER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14659, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judges of said district.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, general debate will continue for one hour, to be divided equally between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in favor of this bill and to include therein certain official statements from official records.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the condition of the business in the Federal court for the eastern district of New York is in a hopeless situation, and the delays in this court are well-nigh intolerable to the litigants. That is very frank language, gentlemen, and the authority for it is Chief Justice Taft, of the United States Supreme Court, speaking on behalf of the Judicial Conference of Senior Circuit Judges, which met last September. It is a rather startling commentary, especially when taken in connection with his earnest plea, made at the same time and on behalf of the same conference, that there be no further delay in creating two additional judgeships for the eastern district of New York to help relieve the congestion in that court.

While no rebuke to Congress was intended, and it was merely an earnest suggestion in the interest of the administration of justice, the forceful earnestness of the Chief Justice's plea should certainly leave its impression and its influence. In surveying the business of the district and circuit courts throughout the country, I can not help feel a sense of genuine concern that the deficiency in the consummation of court business, and, therefore, in the administration of justice, should be so glaring as it is in the eastern district of New York, and also in the southern district.

We can not give too much weight to the recommendation of Chief Justice Taft and the judicial conference. By law we have invited his recommendations; no, we have gone still further, and we have commanded his recommendations. The act creating the Conference of Circuit Judges reads:

It shall be the duty of the Chief Justice of the United States * * * to summon to a conference * * * the senior circuit judge of each judicial circuit. * * * It shall be the duty of every judge thus summoned * * * to advise as to the needs of his circuit and as to any matters in respect of which the administration of justice in the courts of the United States may be improved.

And it was under that duty, specifically commanded of him, that Chief Justice Taft has made his recommendations for the improvement of the judicial machinery. And part of them was his plea that two additional judges be authorized for the eastern judicial district of New York.

Not only does the Chief Justice's conference feel the sting of the intolerable conditions in the eastern district, but the resentment against present conditions is universal throughout that district. I know of no body of lawyers, no association of business men, no representatives of the press, and no civic associations who feel differently.

Gentlemen, I feel much concern at the conditions that are portrayed. Not only are the interests of business and private citizen alike being jeopardized by the congestion in this court, but the interests of the Government are likewise being neglected.

The situation in the eastern district of New York is not only unjust but improper. There can no longer be an excuse for its continuance. It is imperative that relief be afforded to those who have intrusted their pleas to this court and that they not be made to wait for decisions in their cases until all hope is fled. It is imperative, unless we are to pile high injustice on injustice, that this bill be passed. For Congress to suffer the present conditions would not only be a grevious mistake but, in my humble estimation, would show a callous disregard for the rights and the expectations of over three and three-quarters million people who comprise the population of the eastern district of New York. To-day, for many purposes, in many of the cases before this court, a practical denial of justice will be worked. Too true is the saying that justice delayed can be justice denied. There are some, of course, who profit from these conditions. For these the wheels of justice can never grind too slowly. But we are not influenced by this type or class, although the people as a whole, through the Government's prosecution, are directly affected.

As long as I have been in Congress I have never seen a more united, a more vigorous, and a more intelligent sponsorship of any proposal that has come before the House. Public opinion, the bar, and the interests of business are strongly behind this measure, and they are looking forward to and expecting its enactment. Let me read to you an editorial over the signature of Mr. Paul Block, appearing in the Brooklyn Standard Union for December 28, 1928, which temperately states the public will on the need for improvement in the administration of justice in the eastern district of New York:

MORE UNITED STATES JUDGES A VITAL NEED FOR OUR DISTRICT

Congress ought to provide two additional United States district judges for the eastern district of New York, which includes Brooklyn, Queens, Nassau, Suffolk, and Richmond Counties, without further delay.

The House Judiciary Committee has reported the Bacon bill. It provides for two judges. More, in fact, are needed, but two additional jurists would aid an aggravated situation, insuring litigants prompt action in court. Chief Justice William Howard Taft has stressed the need of relief.

Under existing conditions it is possible to hold only one equity, admiralty, and common-law term every three months. Lawyers and litigants alike agree such terms ought to be held every month. Three judges, with a widely known reputation for industry and painstaking devotion to duty, now conduct five terms at the main post-office building in Washington Street.

Obviously there are delays which amount to injustice. There are more than 1,100 admiralty cases now pending that will take more than two years to try unless added judges are provided. The common-law calendar is more than a year behind.

The southern district of New York now has six United States district court judges and is asking for three more. Brooklyn and Long Island, in spite of its vast growth in population, has only three judges, who are now heavily burdened.

We trust Congress will pass the Bacon bill and do it speedily.

PAUL BLOCK, Publisher.

As you gentlemen know, there are at present only three judges in this district, and this bill provides for two additional. In order to survey the need for these judges as best I could, in response to the striking demand for relief, I went direct to the court itself for information as to its present business condition. I was told that it will take three years at least to clear up the present admiralty calendar and dispose of every case on it. Of course, this is a condition peculiar to New York. Brooklyn vies with New York as the steamship center of the world, and more admiralty cases originate there than in any other part of the United States. Due to the inability to secure outside judges to help with the admiralty calendar, few having had experience in this special branch of law, there has been little hope or expectation for relief here. The result has been that few new cases are being added.

And I am told that what is true of the admiralty calendar is also true of common law. I quote from a résumé of the conditions at this court, prepared by its clerk:

In regard to the common-law calendar, there have been several additional terms held during the year. Judge Bryant from the northern district of New York, Judge Johnson from Pennsylvania, and Judge Cooper, also from the northern district of New York, have assisted in getting down the common-law calendar, as the terms they held were in addition to the regular terms held by our own judges.

There are three judges. One of the three holds criminal continuously. The second judge holds the motions, naturalizations, ex parte, and miscellaneous business. Monday is devoted to miscellaneous business generally. Often there is a calendar of so-called padlock cases, taking most of the day. Tuesday is naturalization day, Wednesday, general motions, it being no uncommon thing to find 60 or more motions on the calendar. This takes always the whole morning and generally the afternoon as well. Thursday is naturalization again, and Friday is bankruptcy calendar day with from 50 to 65 or 70 motions. Yesterday, for example, there was a continuous performance from the opening of the court until half-past 1 and from 2 o'clock until 4, all of bankruptcy motions. Many of these are contested and decisions needed to be written in.

This leaves one judge to try admiralty, equity, and common law, three items. There are only nine months in which it is practicable to try cases. That means that three classes of cases get three months each for settlement. It is no wonder that the admiralty calendar, when 100 cases are disposed of during a term, will take three years to get rid of the present cases thereon.

The decisions in the patent and other equity cases and admiralty cases must be worked on and rendered. The only time available is when a judge is holding the motion term. As he is busy pretty nearly all day long it would seem that the only time left is Saturday afternoons, Sundays, and at nights.

As clerk I take in the orders for the judge to sign. It is very distressing for me to go into the chambers with a bundle of from 20 to 50 orders and ask a judge to sign them when he is absorbed in dictation of opinions or busily engaged in other work. However, he must be interrupted, as the lawyers insist that orders they present must be handed to the judge and signed. The figures given for orders signed is conservative.

The factors working to bring about this very heavy court business in the eastern district of New York is due principally to the great population comprising the territory making up the district and the great commercial, industrial, and financial interests centered there. The population in the eastern district of New York is greater than that in any other Federal court district in the entire Union, the southern district of New York not excepted. Five counties make up its area. I shall give them and also their population in 1925 and in 1928, together with the rate of increase from 1920 to 1928. They will help make clear to you the peculiar conditions that are confronting this Federal court.

	Population, 1925	Population, 1928	Per cent of increase, 1920–1928
Richmond County	138,277	150,091	28.8
Kings County	2,203,991	2,308,999	14.4
Queens County	713,891	859,284	83.2
Nassau County	207,640	256,275	103.2
Suffolk County	143,208	163,164	48.0
	3,407,007	3,737,813

The southern district of New York, comprising 11 counties, including the populous county of New York, has a population of 3,650,881. The eastern district has overtaken the southern and there will ever be a widening gap, as the movement of the population is definitely toward Long Island.

I have no particular faith in bald figures—they can be made to misshape situations too easily—and those that I will give I can assure you are as fair as I could get them. But it is an interesting sidelight that the population of the eastern district of New York is greater than that for 36 States of the Union, as follows:

	Population
Eastern district of New York (1920 census)	2,840,295
Alabama	2,348,174
Arizona	334,162
Arkansas	1,752,204
Colorado	939,622
Connecticut	1,380,631
Delaware	223,003
Florida	968,470
Idaho	431,866
Iowa	2,404,021
Kansas	1,769,257
Kentucky	2,416,630
Louisiana	1,798,509
Maine	768,014
Maryland	1,449,661
Minnesota	2,387,125
Mississippi	1,790,618
Montana	548,889
Nebraska	1,296,372
Nevada	77,407
New Hampshire	443,083
New Mexico	360,350
North Carolina	2,559,123
North Dakota	646,872
Oklahoma	2,028,283
Oregon	783,389
Rhode Island	604,397
South Carolina	1,683,724
South Dakota	636,547
Tennessee	2,337,885
Utah	449,396
Vermont	352,428
Virginia	2,309,187
Washington	1,356,621
West Virginia	1,463,701
Wisconsin	2,632,067
Wyoming	194,402

While these figures are based on the 1920 census a check discloses that the advantage would run to the eastern district of New York if the rate of increase from 1920 to 1928 were applied in both instances.

So much for the population in this great judicial district.

The assessed valuation of the eastern district of New York totals the tremendous sum of $7,899,028,767, an amount which is practically double that in the States of Arizona, Delaware, Idaho, Maine, Montana, New Hampshire, and Wyoming all combined. And interesting, too, is the fact that the eastern district outranks in population this group of seven States, which I shall list, together with their estimated population in 1928:

	Population
Eastern district of New York, 1928	3,737,813
Arizona	501,243
Delaware	240,843
Idaho	544,151
Maine	789,418
Montana	751,977
New Hampshire	453,716
Wyoming	246,890
Total	3,528,238

And, mind you, these seven States have nine district judges, against the three in the eastern district of New York. While I place no especial value on these figures, and while I concede that the breadth of territory in this group of States makes it essential that an adequate number of district judges be available, nevertheless the business done in the district courts of these seven States and that done in the eastern district of New York is not in the disfavor of the latter district.

The population and the business interests of the eastern district furnish, naturally, the impulse for the increasing business of the court. And that swing forward is concededly a fact, and in future years these figures will show but additions and multiplications.

To-day, Brooklyn exceeds Philadelphia and Manhattan alike and is the second largest city in the United States. Long Island itself, excluding Richmond County, which is also part of the eastern district, ranks with four of the great States of the Union. The following data concerning the importance of Brooklyn alone—and it must be borne in mind that Brooklyn is only one part of the eastern judicial district—is impressive:

Brooklyn's population exceeds that of seven States of the Union.

Brooklyn's manufactured products amount to more than $1,000,000,000 annually.

Brooklyn ranks fourth in industry in the United States.

Brooklyn ranks sixth in industry in the world.

Brooklyn leads the world in the importation, distribution, and refining of sugar.

Brooklyn ranks first as a coffee importing and distributing center.

Brooklyn ships approximately 55 per cent of the freight from the combined ports of New York, Newark, Hoboken, and Jersey City, the sailings from Brooklyn visiting 119 foreign cities.

Brooklyn has 187 piers, accommodating more than 700 ocean liners.

Brooklyn has the second largest public-school enrollment in the United States, exceeded only by Chicago.

And I shall also give the measure of Brooklyn's startling progress in the last 10 years:

	1916	1926
Population	1,870,000	2,240,000
Telephones	138,000	356,000
Building permits	$35,300,000	$280,000,000
Electric meters in service	87,000	684,454
Realty, assessed valuation	$1,750,000,000	$3,230,856,000

And this great city is taking greater strides every year in the march of progress.

I do not want to bore you with a multiplication of these facts, but I shall merely say that in Queens, Richmond, Suffolk, and Nassau there is a proportionate increase and proportionate progress in business and industrial life.

This tremendous activity must of necessity, through its very force, result in increased litigation before the Federal courts in the eastern district. There is no stemming this tide of litigation and the only influence we can exert on it is that we shall keep the judiciary abreast of it.

And startling as has been the progress in the population and business activities of the eastern judicial district, the increase in the demands on the court has been astonishing. In 1906 there were a total of 655 cases before the court for adjudication, in 1911 there were 1,009, in 1921 there were 3,271, and in 1927 there were 6,379. Separating them according to types of actions they are:

	1906	1911	1921	1927
Admiralty	185	224	863	1,164
Law and equity	126	121	321	932
Bankruptcy	256	490	583	1,031
Criminal	74	129	1,328	2,349
Civil, United States	14	45	176	903
Total	655	1,009	3,271	6,379

Viewed in the form of percentages, these figures indicate that from 1906 to 1921, the increase was over 650 per cent; for the period from 1911 to 1921, the activities of the court more than trebled, and notwithstanding the appointment of an additional judge in 1923, the business from 1921 to 1927 has doubled.

A comparison of the business of the eastern district court, with its present three judges, with that of the southern district, with its present six judges, is persuasive as showing the tremendous amount of work shouldered by each of the three judges in the eastern district at this time.

That the judges in the eastern district are doing far more than their share, and are obliged to carry even a much heavier burden than their brother judges in the adjoining southern district, can be readily seen from the table given below, covering the year 1927, and showing the number of all cases before both courts, divided among the individual judges in the respective courts:

Division of total cases before court by number of judges

IN THE EASTERN DISTRICT	Per judge
Admiralty cases	386
Law and equity	310
Bankruptcy	343
Criminal	783
Trials	40
Civil	301
IN THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT
Admiralty cases	152
Law and equity	221
Bankruptcy	280
Criminal	343
Trials	26
Civil	330

As part of my remarks, I am appending a table giving the detailed business of this court up to December 1, 1928. These are the latest figures available.

We have 91 district courts and 132 district judges to handle all of the business of the United States district courts throughout the country and in the Territories. In the report of the Attorney General for 1928, on pages 88 and 89, the total business before all the district courts of the United States is given. It is divided into three groups, civil, criminal, and private cases. While the report naturally does not attempt to allot to each district court its percentage of all the court business before the district courts, I completed this percentage for the eastern district of New York. And the result was rather a startling one.

It shows that of the civil cases, the eastern district had in 1927, 8 per cent of the total in the United States; of the criminal cases, it had 10½ per cent; and of the private cases, it had 20 per cent.

The figures for 1928 are substantially similar, with a marked reduction, however, in the criminal cases, due, probably, to throwing into the discard a great number of old prohibition cases. An increase of 4 per cent in the private cases before the court is indicated. The percentages for 1928 show that the eastern district of New York has before it 7 per cent of the total number of civil cases in all the country; 4 per cent of the criminal cases, and 24 per cent of the private cases.

While I do not show the percentage of business of the total for each district court in the United States, it is very patent that the eastern district of New York has many, many more times its share, distributed as it must be among three judges.

To keep even fair pace with their steadily mounting calendars has exacted of these judges in the eastern district of New York labor and attention to duty and a denial of leisure time that to my mind is most unfair. They have shown a spirit of self-sacrifice and an unflagging devotion to duty that is really inspiring. They are laboring under a terrific strain. The work of the court engages their attention from early morning until late in the evening, and from the information available it is known that it is the common rule for them to come back to their chambers at night or to bring work to their homes.

To help lessen the congestion in this court—and not to lessen the labor of the home judges—assignment of judges from all over the United States have been made to the eastern district. They have come from New Jersey, Nebraska, Texas, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, and from many other States. These assignments since 1923 have averaged the full time of one outside judge every day for approximately six months of a year. In 1928 these assignments averaged one judge for a little under seven full months. These outside judges, new to the district and new to the members of the bar, receive $10 per diem, together with their railroad fare and necessary clerical hire.

Here is the list of the names of the judges and the States from which assigned, together with the period of their service in the court of the eastern judicial district of New York:

Judge	District	From—	To—
Charles F. Lynch	New Jersey	Mar. 5, 1923	Mar. 23, 1923
D. Lawrence Groner	Eastern district of Virginia	Jule 18, 1923	July 7, 1923
Wm. B. Sheppard	Northern district of Florida	June 1, 1923	July 31, 1923
Do	do	Sept. 3, 1923	Sept. 30, 1923
Jos. W. Woodrough	Nebraska	July 2, 1923	Aug. 31, 1923
W. Lee Estes	Eastern district of Texas	Sept. 17, 1923	Oct. 15, 1923
Robert T. Erwin	Southern district of Alabama	do	4 weeks.
Wm. B. Sheppard	Northern district of Florida	June 9, 1924	Sept. 30, 1924
Harland B. Howe	Vermont	Feb. 2, 1925	Feb. 7, 1925
Benj. C. Dawkins	Western district of Louisiana	June 1, 1925	Sept. 30, 1925
Lake Jones	Southern district of Florida	July 7, 1925	July 21, 1925
Robert T. Erwin	Southern district of Alabama	Sept. 1, 1925	4 weeks.
Wm. B. Sheppard	Northern district of Florida	July 1, 1926	Sept. 30, 1926
Do	do	July 1, 1927	Sept. 30, 1927
Fred. H. Bryant	Northern district of New York	Nov. 7, 1927	Dec. 3, 1927
Warren B. Burrows	Connecticut	Mar. 7, 1928	Apr. 7, 1928
Fred H. Bryant	Northern district of New York	Apr. 301, 928	May 31, 1928
Albert H. Johnson	Middle district of Pennsylvania.	Apr. 23, 1928	May 5, 1928
Wm. H. Atwell	Northern district of Texas	July 17, 1928	Aug. 31, 1928
Henry D. Clayton	Northern district of Alabama	Sept. 1, 1928	Sept. 30, 1928
Frank Cooper	Northern district of New York	Nov. 7, 1928	Nov. 30, 1928
Do	do	Dec. 1, 1928	Dec. 21, 1928

A recapitulation of the above shows that the judges named served 877 days in the eastern district, or a total period of 2 years 4 months 27 days.

But even with the aid furnished by these outside judges there has been no marked improvement in the condition of the business at this court. And to obtain these jurists has been a difficult task. The senior judge in the eastern district court has found it a hard and often an embarrassing task to secure outside judges. My information is that at one time he was forced to write to 18 different judges before he succeeded in persuading one to hold a term of court. This was a very recent occasion.

In the criminal cases their service was invaluable, but in admiralty and common law the resident judges had to be depended upon. Then, too, these outside judges, not having the wide acquaintanceship with the local bar, are at a disadvantage in pushing cases to trial.

So much for the justification of this bill. I will only take a few more moments of your time to tell you the influences that are earnestly back of this measure and that demand and expect its enactment.

Back of this bill is the editorial prestige of all the important newspapers in the eastern judicial district. Not one paper, to my knowledge, has ever printed a word of opposition, or of indifference, to the bill. Rather, the press has been most insistent on its passage.

This measure has the support of every bar association in the eastern judicial district and also of the New York Bar Association and the New York Patent Bar Association. The resolution of the Brooklyn Bar Association, directed to a previous bill introduced by me, is particularly pointed, and I give it in full:

Whereas the amount of business in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York has increased so largely that from 1911 until 1922 there was an increase of about 500 per cent in admiralty, 250 per cent in law and equity, 200 per cent in bankruptcy, and an increase of 500 per cent in criminal cases; and

Whereas the percentage of increases has continued from that period down to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927; and

Whereas there are now only three district judges appointed from this district; and

Whereas under the present condition one judge is continually occupied with criminal cases, one judge is occupied with all the ex parte and litigated motions, and naturalization; that only one judge is therefore available to try the litigated causes in equity, law, and admiralty, so that each class of causes has but three months of each year for the transaction of its business unless judges are brought from out of town; and

Whereas there has been increasing difficulty in obtaining judges from other districts to sit in the eastern district of New York and relieve the pressure: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Brooklyn Bar Association at a regular meeting thereof held on the 8th day of March, 1928, places itself on record as being unanimously in favor of there being an increase in the number of judges for the eastern district of New York by at least one; and be it further

Resolved, That the Brooklyn Bar Association place itself on record as being in favor of the bill H. R. 5774 now pending before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Congressman representing a congressional district within the eastern district of New York, and to each of the United States Senators from the State of New York; and be it further

Resolved, That the president of the Brooklyn Bar Association be empowered and directed to appoint a committee of 10, two members of which shall wait upon each Congressman representing a congressional district within the confines of the eastern district of New York and each United States Senator from the State of New York to obtain from such Congressmen and Senators a definite stand upon the following propositions and report the same back to the Brooklyn Bar Association at its next regular meeting, whether the said bill for the additional judge shall have been acted upon or not; and be it further

Resolved, That the questions to be asked by the committee of these Congressmen and Senators, as follows:

1. Are you persuaded that an additional United States district judge is necessary in the eastern district of New York at the present time?

2. Are you in favor of the present bill H. R. 5774, providing for the appointment of an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York?

3. If not, why?

This measure has the support of every chamber of commerce and business organization in the eastern district of New York, as well as merchant and commercial bodies in the city of New York proper.

But forming the fundamental background for the support of this proposal to improve the judicial machinery are the private citizens and business interests for whose sole benefit it is intended. This morning's mail brought me a letter from one of the largest surety companies in the world which succinctly states the need for this measure. In urging the enactment of the bill it stated:

As you know, one of the greatest handicaps that business in our city labors under is the delay in obtaining justice in the Federal courts, due to the inadequate number of judges.

Under present conditions existing at this court, all arising from the inadequate judicial personnel, these citizens and business interests are denied that measure of justice to which they are entitled.

I think I am as much against authorizing unnecessary additional judicial personnel as any Member of this House. Before voting for an increase anywhere I would want the justification. I would want to know that there was a real need for the creation of additional judgeships in any district. But the assignment practice, at least as far as the eastern district is concerned, has broken down. It offers no real relief. Not only has it been practically impossible to bring in outside judges but those who have favored our district were available only, for all practical purposes, for the criminal part, not having special admiralty experience, or being experienced with the common law as practiced in New York.

Every expedient to aid the eastern district with the present machinery has failed, and therefore there is only one solution, and that is the appointment of two additional permanent judges. It becomes our duty, our patriotic duty, to offer every help possible in the administration of justice, and therefore, gentlemen, I earnestly hope that you will support this measure and aid in curing the "hopeless situation" in our district pictured by Chief Justice Taft.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If no one desires to propose amendments the committee will now rise, pursuant to the rule, and report the bill back to the House without amendment.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. SNELL having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HOOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14659) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, pursuant to House Resolution 273.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the resolution the previous question is ordered. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE SECOND JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 1976, for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 1976, with Mr. HOOPER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 1976, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule there is one hour of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to use any time, and I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to use any time?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman from Texas does not desire to use any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the committee will now rise and report the bill back to the House without amendment.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1976) for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, pursuant to House Resolution 273.

The SPEAKER. Under the resolution the previous question is ordered. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 1275, to create an additional judge in the southern district of Florida.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 1275, with Mr. HOOPER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 1275, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to create an additional judge for the southern district of Florida

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida, who shall reside in said district, and whose compensation, duties, and powers shall be the same as now provided by law for the judge of said district.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Passed the Senate April 4, 1928.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. I desire to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee if these various bills, including the one now under consideration, authorize a continuing exercise of the power granted in the bills, or does the President exhaust his power when he appoints the first additional judge?

Mr. GRAHAM. These are to be permanent judgeships. When the President appoints the judge, of course, he has exhausted his power of appointment.

Mr. DENISON. Then when that judge dies the President can not again exercise the power?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not unless by something in the bill requiring him to be authorized by the Congress.

Mr. DENISON. That is what I wanted to know. In other words, this is not the creation of a permanent judgeship, but merely an authorization for the appointment of another judge.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is the creation of a permanent judgeship.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman just stated the contrary.

Mr. GRAHAM. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. DENISON. I did not misunderstand the gentleman. I think the chairman stated very clearly that when this judge dies the power of appointment can not again be exercised.

Mr. GRAHAM. A new judge would not have to be authorized by the Congress each time.

Mr. DENISON. There is apparently a difference of opinion.

Mr. DYER. That only applied to the act which we passed some years ago.

Mr. SNELL. May I ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee a question?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I have always understood that we were creating an additional judgeship, and when this judge died it would be within the power of the President of the United States to appoint the judge.

Mr. GRAHAM. The gentleman is quite right. That is true.

Mr. MICHENER. The Congress has nothing more to do with it, only as the Senate confirms.

Mr. DENISON. I have no opposition to these bills; but I made the inquiry because it seemed to me the language used was not sufficient to provide for a permanent, additional judgeship, and that the power of the President to appoint the judge in this district is exhausted when he appoints this additional judge.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is the usual language used both by the Senate and the House.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman probably confuses himself by having in mind in connection with this legislation some legislation which the Congress passed some years ago which provided that successors should not be appointed unless they were recommended by the council of judges.

Mr. SNELL. And when it is not to be a continuing judgeship, it definitely states that in the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to use any time.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee automatically rises.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1275) to create an additional judge for the southern district of Florida, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—WORLD'S POULTRY CONGRESS (H. DOC. NO 509)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending that Congress be requested to authorize an appropriation of $40,000 for the participation of the United States by official delegates and a national exhibit in the Fourth World's Poultry Congress, to be held in England in 1930.

The recommendation has my approval and I request of Congress legislation authorizing an appropriation of $40,000 for the purpose of participation by the United States by official delegates and a national exhibit in the Fourth World's Poultry Congress, to be held in England, probably in the second half of the month of July, 1930.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, January 16, 1929

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, from whose bosom we dropped into light, we know so little of the path we tread or where it leads, but Thou knowest all things, and in Thee is our trust.

Put to silence now our clamorous thoughts that we may be still and know that Thou art God, that Thy sheltering love enfolds us, wooing us to better things. Give us strength for our burdens, wisdom for our responsibilities, insight for our times, and faith sufficient for the larger claims, that in all our striving for the Nation's weal we may be conscious of our fellowship with Thee.

Help us thus to bear the fret of care and to keep unbroken vigil of the soul lest we trifle with life's golden opportunities or scorn its swiftly ebbing day. All of which we ask through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1275. An act to create an additional judge for the southern district of Florida; and

S. 1976. An act for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9200. A bill to provide for the appointment of three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York; and

H. R. 14659. A bill to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire, if I may at this time, to make a short personal statement. I was unable to be present at the session of the Senate yesterday when the final vote was taken on the ratification of the Briand-Kellogg treaty and therefore, of course, am not recorded as voting. The fact is that we were inaugurating a governor in the State of New Jersey yesterday and I felt that event of sufficient importance to demand my presence. I desire to state that if I had been in the Senate yesterday I would have voted for the ratification of the treaty with or without a committee report.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 9200. An act to provide for the appointment of three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York; and

H. R. 14659. An act to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. BRUCE presented letters in the nature of memorials, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITIZENS CONFERENCE ON CRUISERS,
Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: It is with regret that I am compelled by press of business connected with the company of which I have been an officer for near 40 years to decline your invitation to attend your meetings tomorrow, but as evidence of my deep interest in the splendid work you are doing I inclose check for a seat at the dinner table.

May your efforts be crowned with success and the cruiser bill be defeated, postponed, or at least amended. It would show the world that America has lost not only her spiritual leadership among nations but all sense of humor if she should accompany a pact for the renunciation of war by starting to building a new lot of war vessels.

Very truly yours,

ALLAN FARQUHAR.

CONFERENCE ON THE CRUISER BILL,
Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIENDS: On account of illness I shall not be able to meet in the conference on the cruiser bill on January 8.

I heartily indorse the purpose of the meeting. I am opposed to the cruiser bill and believe that the pact for renunciation of war should be ratified at once and given all possible moral support.

Sincerely,

M. J. SHROYER.

SANDY SPRINGS, MD., January 6, 1929.

CITIZENS CONFERENCE ON CRUISERS,
Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I should like to express my interest in this conference and heartily indorse the purpose of it, believing that out of honest discussion we can become keenly alive to the world's ills and realize that it is not battleships that we need but warm friendliness with all nations, which can come about through education.

Sincerely,

MARY M. MILLER.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the Council of the New York Commandery of the Naval Order of the United States, favoring the prompt passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented numerous memorials and letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials, of citizens and civic and religious organizations in the State of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FESS presented numerous resolutions adopted by women's clubs and civic and religious organizations in the State of Ohio, indorsing the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of members of the Phi Gamma Mu Society of the Texas Technological College, indorsing the so-called general pact for the renunciation of war, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EDGE presented memorials and letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials of sundry citizens and organizations in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GILLETT presented letters and papers in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens and organizations in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented numerous resolutions of women's clubs and civic and religious organizations in the State of Massachusetts, indorsing the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table resolutions received by me from the Chamber of Commerce of the Bronx, New York City, in favor of the passage of the cruiser bill.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Bronx Chamber of Commerce represents the business interests of a borough of 1,000,000 people, which is one of the great seaports of the world; and

Whereas prosperity and business of the Bronx is dependent to a large degree on the commerce which enters this borough under the protection of the American flag; and

Whereas the Bronx Chamber of Commerce feels that the commercial seafaring traffic of the United States needs the most adequate protection in order that traffic may never be interrupted and may be maintained in the face of any world emergency; and

Whereas there is pending before the United States Senate at the present time a bill authorizing the addition of 16 ships to the United States Navy: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Bronx Chamber of Commerce, representing a borough of 1,000,000 people, That every effort be made to pass this pending bill, authorizing 15 new cruisers and one airplane carrier to be added to the United States Navy; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to our Representatives in Washington, both in the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the public press.

THE MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a communication from the Service Club, of Indianapolis, Ind., composed of 162 members, each of whom served in the World War. I also ask that the communication may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SERVICE CLUB OF INDIANAPOLIS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
January 8, 1929.

Hon. ARTHUR ROBINSON,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ROBINSON: The Service Club of Indianapolis, composed of 162 members each of whom saw service in the World War, wishes to invite your especial interest in the following matters affecting our present military affairs:

On December 5, 1928, the other branches of the Army (already too small for effective use for chessmen for reserve training and already reduced last year by about 500 enlisted men) are reduced by 536 men in order to provide for the second annual increment of the 5-year Air Corps program. The American Legion insisted at both the last two national conventions that these increments be provided without reducing the rest of the Army, already too small.

The Budget provides for 1929 summer training for 16,000 reserves. Last summer we trained 20,000, and the reserve association insists that we should train 26,000. The Budget also provides that only 40 per cent of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps students trained at summer camp last year be trained next summer. Though the number to be trained at schools is left the same, this reduction in those to be trained at summer camp reduces the number that will be fit for reserve commissions to 40 per cent of last summer's output, as the camp training is absolutely essential. This is, therefore, a serious blow at the entire reserve project and would, in the course of a number of years, result in a great decrease in the present strength of the reserve unless the appropriation is increased.

We understand that the commanding officer at Schoen Field, Indianapolis, has an order restricting the flying to be done by reserve officers there to a total of 200 flying hours for the entire fiscal year of 12 months. Each reserve officer of the Air Corps is supposed, under present Army training regulations, to fly at least 48 hours a year. There are more than 35 air reserve officers to be served by Schoen Field. They should have an allowance of 1,680 flying hours, instead of 200 hours. This inadequate number of flying hours is due to reduced appropriations and means a direct and vital blow at the strength and efficiency of our air-reserve system, and creates danger of needless deaths among reserve flying personnel through lack of sufficient flying hours to keep them in flying trim.

The Service Club vigorously protests against the continuing let down in our vital provisions for military instruction. We urge you to make every effort along the following lines:

(a) To secure appropriations for the 5-year increment of the Air Service without decreasing either the officer or enlisted personnel now assigned to other branches of the service.

(b) To increase the Budget so that next summer 26,000 reserve officers will receive summer field training.

(c) To increase the Budget so that there will be trained next summer as many Reserve Officers' Training Corps advanced students as were trained last summer.

(d) To increase appropriations so that the Air Service reserve officers throughout the country will have enough ships, gasoline, and maintenance allowances to permit every reserve officer to fly not less than 48 hours each year. This would mean for Schoen Field, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indianapolis, that the allowance would have to be increased from 200 hours for the fiscal year to a minimum of 1,680 hours.

The Service Club will greatly appreciate it if you will communicate these views to the various committees of the Congress concerned and hope you can support the requests we make.

Respectfully yours,

THE SERVICE CLUB OF INDIANAPOLIS,
MARK E. HAMER, President.

DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIEN SEAMEN

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill (S. 717) providing for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes, has been before the Senate for some time. It passed the Senate at one time, as I recall. Since it has been on the calendar at the present session objections have been made repeatedly to its consideration.

I have here a letter from Mr. Furuseth, president and chairman of the legislative committee of the International Seamen's Union of America, which explains very clearly the provisions of the bill and the object of the measure. I think it is very instructive and will be enlightening to all Senators as well as to those who read the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

Petition and memorial

To the honorable the Members of Congress in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

On behalf of the seamen of the United States I hereby humbly submit this our petition and memorial that S. 717, "A bill to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes," introduced by Mr. KING, of Utah, be passed for the following reasons:

(a) The Chinese exclusion act passed in 1891 has been steadily, and in a constantly increasing number of instances, violated by means of substitution by young Chinese coming and aged ones desiring to return to China departing as seamen on ships.

(b) Through the smuggling into the United States of Chinese excluded by law.

(c) By smuggling narcotics into the United States in violation of law, all made profitable through the exclusion of the Chinese and the high duty on narcotics, and accomplished through the vessels, American and foreign, being permitted to come to our ports with men serving as seamen who could not under the law be admitted as immigrants for permanent residence in the United States.

Since 1917, when the act forbidding certain persons to come to the United States was passed, such excluded persons came in an increasingly large number into the United States in violation of law. They could not come as immigrants and therefore came and are coming as seamen on vessels that often carry a very much more numerous crew coming to the United States than they carry leaving the United States; because

(a) There was no distinction made between bona fide and mala fide seamen;

(b) Because there was no law of the United States providing that vessels leaving the United States should carry the same number of men in their crew as they had on arrival;

(c) Because it is possible for somebody to obtain large sums of money in a way that is easy and comparatively safe.

Chinese have paid from $1,000 to $1,100 for being landed in the United States, and excluded Europeans and South Americans paid from $200 to $400 each. As exclusion became more extensive the sums of money to be gathered by the smugglers became greater. As the quota laws reduced the number of men who could come and as the supervision became stricter the number of Europeans and South Americans smuggled in became greater and the business more profitable. These violations of law are still continuing and increasing. American consuls in Europe maintain that nothing can stop this smuggling except a thorough examination of the crews of vessels as they arrive in American ports, together with the deportation of mala fide seamen and excluded persons coming as seamen on vessels under whose flag they were not specifically born, at the expense of the vessel by which they were brought.

The purpose of this bill is to stop the violations of our immigration laws and, incidentally, to remove unfair competition from American ships and American seamen.

The evils above mentioned and the remedies which we seamen have from time to time respectfully submitted have been brought to the attention of the departments and Congress. Hearings before congressional committees on this matter date back to 1923. We made an effort to have the remedies included in the immigration bill of 1924, but on being told that this might endanger the immigration bill we ceased our efforts.

The first objection to the bill in its present form was that it would be impossible to distinguish between a bona fide and a mala fide seaman. This contention was disposed of when Captain Petersen, who represented the shipowners and who was and is serving as their employment agent on the Pacific coast, had to admit that he and his office staff were constantly engaged in determining who is a seaman in fact and who is a pretender claiming to be one; and when Mr. Hurley, representing the department and having in charge the question of seamen in the Bureau of Immigration, stated that he could see no serious difficulties in the administration of that particular phase of the bill.

The second objection was the provision that vessels must carry away as many persons in their crews as they had on arrival and that this provision would be sure to delay the sailing of vessels. Some of the crew of a vessel might conspire to that end by leaving her lying ready to go with passengers and mail on board. The answer to that was and is that vessels which have any expectation of men leaving in the last moment always provide for men in readiness to fill the places of those who might leave. But aside from that, the present laws provide that seamen are not to leave their vessels except under order or by permission within 24 hours of the time of sailing.

The third objection was that it was contrary to treaties with foreign nations. This was answered from the State Department, stating that there were no treaties directly bearing upon it, but that the bill might for the sake of safety be amended so as not to make it compulsory to hire men in lieu of those who might be dead or in the hospital. This suggestion was taken care of by an amendment.

The fourth objection was that Americans were not willing to serve in the steward's department. The answer to this was and is that they are serving in the same kind of work in hotels, restaurants, and lodging houses throughout the country, and that what the Americans objected to was not to serve in the steward's department of vessels but to serve in the steward's department together with Asiatics doing the same kind of work, sleeping in the same room, and eating in the company of and living on equality with Asiatics.

The bill was reported to the Senate in the Sixty-ninth Congress, together with a favorable report shortly analyzing the testimony that had been given. The bill passed the Senate by unanimous consent. In the House it was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, where it was brought up for a hearing on February 23, 1927, in which new objections were raised. The objections came from the Pacific coast in the shape of telegrams from the Dollar Steamship Co., which employs Chinese, and from the Shipowners' Association, of which Dollar is a member. The first telegram presented was addressed to the Hon. FLORENCE P. KAHN and signed by R. Stanley Dollar, and reads as follows:

"Was very much surprised to learn the other day that Senate bill 3574, known as King bill, had passed Senate. This is a very vicious piece of legislation and extremely detrimental to everybody in the foreign trade. Sincerely hope we can count on your support to defeat this bill in the House. Kindest regards."

It will be noted that the objection to the bill on the part of Mr. Dollar is general. He says: "This is a very vicious piece of legislation and extremely detrimental to everybody in the foreign trade." Mr. Dollar is here evidently speaking for foreign as well as American vessels, and he admits that it applies equally to all nations' vessels.

The second telegram from the Pacific coast was also addressed to the Hon. FLORENCE P. KAHN and signed Pacific-American Steamship Association. It reads as follows:

"Advised that King bill, Senate 3574, will be heard by House Immigration Committee 10 o'clock a. m., February 23. This bill would considerably cripple operations of American vessels engaged in offshore trades and give Japanese vessels opportunity to monopolize Pacific trade. In view of the vital importance to American shipping and commerce, we respectfully ask that you oppose this bill before House Immigration Committee."

Here you will note the expression, "This bill would considerably cripple operations of American vessels engaged in offshore trades and give Japanese vessels opportunity to monopolize Pacific trade." Here the suggestion is made that the passage of the bill would be of great advantage to the Japanese. One member of the committee from the Pacific and one from the Atlantic opposed the bill in the committee, Mr. BACON, of New York, suggesting that it would be very detrimental to Japanese, because it might seriously delay some of their vessels. It was on the principle that no white seaman would sail together with Japanese. It might well be that this bill would hit the Japanese vessels hard if their seamen should desert, but in that case, how could it possibly assist the Japanese in monopolizing the Pacific trade, as the objection runs in the telegram from the Pacific-American Steamship Association quoted above?

Japanese steamship companies, however, have consented to increase the wages of their seamen for the third time, so that now the Japanese pay more wages than the general wages paid by the French or Italians, and aside from that they are paying premiums for continuous service, specifically with a view of diminishing desertions, which during the last fiscal year, according to the report, amounted to only 70 persons.

The contention that the Japanese will have the advantage over English, Dutch, and other vessels coming to ports of the United States by being permitted to bring Orientals when other ships could not, is an idea sponsored by the Pacific-American Steamship Association, and the answer is that Japanese can bring Japanese—to prevent that would constitute an embargo—but they can not bring persons excluded for racial or other causes, and in this they are on an equality with all other nations.

Mr. Coert Du Bois, chief of the visa section of the Department of State, was present. Part of his testimony is as follows:

"From the viewpoint of our foreign relations, the worst feature is the apparent departure from the time-honored practice of considering a foreign ship in our ports as a bit of the territory of its flag. Under existing international practice, any undesirable alien arriving in a foreign port is detained aboard the ship and leaves with the ship if the government of the country considers he can not be landed under its laws. This bill violates international comity in that it proposes to enforce a domestic law by taking seamen off foreign ships in our ports—presumably by force if necessary—and sending them home on another ship. There is no doubt that this would lead to complications no matter how carefully and discreetly the provisions were enforced.

"The bill is not on its face discriminatory against any country, but since certain practices have grown up in the merchant marines of various countries its effect can not fail to be discriminatory. Take the British tramp trader, for example, which may touch its home port once in four years. Those which trade in the Indian Ocean or the Orient habitually carry Lascars or orientals in their crews. In the course of their voyaging they may get a cargo, jute, for example, for the United States. The master's alternative is to ship a new crew of white sailors, charging the difference in cost on the freight, or to refuse to accept a cargo for an American port. Multiply this instance by several hundred each year and the accumulated effect on our relations with other maritime nations is obvious. * * * It is going to be difficult to convince the British, French, or the Netherlands Governments that such a wide difference in practical effect is not discrimination in favor of the Japanese."

It will be seen that Mr. Du Bois's testimony may be divided into two aspects: First, the "international relations" in which he pleads for the continuation, or rather the restoration, of a condition gradually brought about by treaties under which a vessel visiting another sovereignty carried with her the laws of the sovereignty of the flag under which she sailed. So far as the United States is concerned, that international arrangement was abrogated on the part of the United States when the seamen's act was passed and the treaties standing in the way were abrogated. The idea that vessels might go everywhere under the law of their own sovereignty had been set aside at an earlier date by Great Britain, when laws dealing with load line, seaworthiness, and minimum manning were passed for vessels under the British flag and made applicable to all nations' vessels coming to or sailing from British ports. The international arrangement had likewise been set aside when Australia insisted that the loading and discharging of vessels in her ports was to be done according to decisions handed down by the court of arbitration under the arbitration law of Australia. Second, he says, "This bill violates international comity in that it proposes to enforce a domestic law by taking seamen off foreign ships in our ports. * * * There is no doubt that this would lead to complications, no matter how carefully and discretely the provision were enforced."

Very serious offenses against domestic law taking place in the port of another sovereignty have always come under the law of the place. It was not held that the British laws enforced upon foreign nations' vessels, either in Australia or in any other British ports, were in violation of comity, and it would be highly remarkable if domestic laws passed by the United States in order to make previous domestic laws more effective should be held to be in violation of comity.

The second aspect is a purely commercial one dealing with the disadvantages that might accrue to a foreign tramp steamer if it were to obey the laws imposed upon the like vessels carrying the flag of the United States.

When an effort is made to compel the shipping of the United States to obey domestic law, we are met by the statement that such laws are discriminatory against the United States and unpatriotic. If the laws be made applicable to all nations' vessels, American and foreign alike, we are met by the assertion that it is contrary to comity and will result in foreign complications. Nothing is done, and as a result year after year passes, the evils grow, the violations of law become more flagrant, and the disadvantages to the United States become more pronounced, yet nothing can be done because we are impaled upon one of the two horns of this dilemma.

The report of the Commissioner of Immigration for 1928 says that 12,357 seamen deserted their vessels in ports of the United States during the fiscal year. That is the report which foreign shipmasters have submitted to the Immigration Service in our different seaports. When such reports were checked by examining the reports made by the same master to their own consulates in New York it was found that the number of desertions was very much greater than was reported to our Immigration Commissioner, in some instances up to 40 per cent greater. During the same fiscal year 17,272 were held on board their vessels, which, if they were bona fide seamen, was contrary to law and the Constitution of the United States (thirteenth amendment); 3,295 were not on the crew lists (evidently stowaways); and 448 were placed in immigration stations, to be placed again on the vessels, also against law; and if they were in fact seamen, they could, if they had any friends, have been released on habeas corpus. Thus the innocent are punished in place of the guilty.

If this open side door is permitted to stand open, the number of excluded aliens coming as seamen, when they are in fact immigrants, together with the number of those smuggled in by the vessels coming from foreign ports to ports of the United States, will ultimately grow to be greater than the number that may come legally according to the immigration law of 1924.

The Annual Report of the Commissioner General of Immigration for 1928 contains the following warning about the situation into which this country at present is drifting. It reads as follows:

"Seamen: As indicated in the last annual report, the trouble confronting the service in the control of alien seamen is the most difficult and vexatious with which it has to deal. As the immigration laws have been tightened up from time to time, the problem has been correspondingly accentuated. Particularly is this true since the adoption of the numerical limitation policy as expressed by the acts of 1921 and 1924. As has been previously pointed out, seamen occupy a privileged position in the scheme of things; commerce must not be unduly hampered; seamen come and go largely at will; and the crux of the problem is to prevent aliens gaining a foothold in this country in the guise of seamen."

The report on the King bill (S. 717), "A bill to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes," is No. 1037, first session Seventieth Congress. There is no minority report. The bill is on the calendar.

Your petitioners humbly pray that the bill may be given consideration by the Senate at the earliest possible time, in order that, if it shall pass, the House may have an opportunity to act on it during this session.

On behalf of all the seamen.

Most respectfully submitted.

ANDREW FURUSETH,
President and Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the International Seamen's Union of America.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I desire to report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 15386) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1449) thereon. I ask that the report be printed and the bill go to the calendar. At an early opportunity I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar and the report will be printed under the rule.

TUBERCULAR INFECTION OF ANIMALS

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate Resolution 290, submitted by Mr. MOSES on the 7th instant, reported it favorably without amendment and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 25,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 85, Seventieth Congress, entitled "Tubercular Infection of Animals," be printed for the use of the Joint Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that to-day that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1275. An act to create an additional judge for the southern district of Florida; and

S. 1976. An act for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the second judicial circuit.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 5379) to authorize the disposition of certain public lands in the State of Nevada; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. KENDRICK:

A bill (S. 5383) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Brones (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5384) granting an increase of pension to Cassie E. Ramsey (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 5385) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ockel; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BLACK:

A bill (S. 5386) extending benefits of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, to John J. Helms; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. ODDIE:

A bill (S. 5387) granting a pension to Joseph I. Earl; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 5388) granting an increase of pension to Peter E. Cleary; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 5389) for the relief of Charles G. Eldredge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 5390) granting an increase of pension to Minnie D. Fogg (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DALE:

A bill (S. 5391) granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. Hooker (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 5392) for the relief of William H. Startup; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED of Missouri:

A bill (S. 5393) granting an increase of pension to Caroline B. Bauduy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BAYARD:

A bill (S. 5394) to provide for the erection of a monument at the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., in commemoration of the life and services of the late Gen. James Harrison Wilson, a veteran of the Civil War, Spanish War, and the Boxer rebellion; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BINGHAM:

A bill (S. 5395) to authorize enlisted men of the Coast Guard to count service in the Marine Corps for the purposes of longevity pay (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 5396) authorizing the construction of a canal for the diversion within the city of Klamath Falls, Oreg., of the main canal of the Klamath project; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 5397) to credit certain officers of the Army with service at the United States Military Academy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FESS:

A bill (S. 5398) for the relief of Hans Roehl; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 198) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inauguration ceremonies in 1929; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT OF CENSUS BILL

Mr. WAGNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 393) to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith for the information of the Congress a manuscript entitled "Origin and Development of the Office of Attorney General, the Establishment of the Department of Justice, and Their Relation to the Judicial System of the United States," which has been prepared in the office of the Attorney General.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 16, 1929.

CASUALTIES IN ARMY AND NAVY AVIATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the resolution (S. Res. 296) submitted by Mr. COPELAND on the 14th instant, coming over from a previous day, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be requested to transmit to the Senate a list of fatalities in the aviation service of the Army and Navy during the past five years, the causes for each accident, and what, if anything, is needed in the way of legislation or appropriation to make safe and more efficient this important arm of the naval and military service.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I trust there will be no opposition to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

LEASING OF CUMBERLAND FALLS FOR POWER PURPOSES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the resolution (S. Res. 297) submitted by Mr. NYE on the 14th instant, coming over from a previous day.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the preamble being stricken out.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the preamble is eliminated I believe there is no objection to the resolution.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Power Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate all protests of individuals, organizations, and public officials which it may have received in opposition to the leasing of Cumberland Falls for power development or to the participation of the Hon. Roy O. West in the consideration of this and other leases.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the preamble is stricken out.

PRINTING OF BRIEFS IN RAILROAD VALUATION CASE

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] made a request for the immediate consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 31, reported by him from the Committee on Printing on the 12th instant. The Senator is not in the Chamber now. Consideration of the resolution was objected to at the time. I have been told that the objection will not be made this morning.

Mr. MOSES. That is the resolution providing for the printing of briefs in the O'Fallon case?

Mr. NORRIS. It is.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection if the words "and bound" are stricken out.

Mr. MOSES. In view of the fact that it is the purpose to sell copies from the Government Printing Office I inquire whether some provision ought not to be made for bound copies?

Mr. SMOOT. That is already provided for.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; under the general statute.

Mr. SMOOT. They can do it without a special authorization.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object, because when the request was submitted yesterday there was only one objection. I do not know whether the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] is going to object to-day or not. However, if the resolution is to lead to any debate whatever, I certainly can not consent to its consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think it will.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution, but I certainly hope there will be no discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Con. Res. 31), and it was read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the provision requiring that the briefs shall be bound is still in the resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. That is to be stricken out. I move that those words be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 8, strike out the words "and bound," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the briefs of counsel and the transcript of record filed with the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the St. Louis & O'Fallon Railway Co. and Manufacturers' Railway Co., appellants, v. The United States of America and the Interstate Commerce Commission, be printed as a Senate document, and that 700 additional copies shall be printed, of which 100 shall be for the use of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, 100 copies for the use of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 16, 17, 19, 22, 23, and 26.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 14, 18, 21, 25, 27, 32, 34, and 38, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment after the word "Service" insert the following: "to be equipped and maintained by the State of Arizona"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$297,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,889,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,658,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,520,100"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,437,550"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "for the purchase of a proportionate interest in the existing storage reservoir of the Warm Springs project, $230,000; in all, $236,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For operation and maintenance, $20,000; for continuation of construction, $1,112,000: Provided, That the unexpended balance of $138,000 of the appropriation of $1,500,000 contained in the act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1929 (45 Stat. 277) shall remain available during the fiscal year 1930 for such continuation of construction; in all, $1,132,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,978,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$157,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$36,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$219,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 1, 4, 20, 30, 39, 40, and 41.

REED SMOOT,
HENRY W. KEYES,
WM. J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
FRANK MURPHY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, both Senators from Montana desire to speak upon two of the amendments that are in disagreement. I ask that they be given an opportunity to do so before action is taken on the conference report.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT NATCHEZ, MISS.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 1458, being the bill (S. 5240) to extend the time for completing the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Natchez, Miss.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask if the bill is in the regular form?

Mr. STEPHENS. There are two letters set forth in the report, one from the Secretary of War and one from some other authority, both sustaining the measure. The bill has been amended in accordance with the suggestion of the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Congress," to insert the words "approved May 3, 1926"; on page 2, line 1, to strike out the words "approved May 3, 1926"; and on page 2, line 2, to strike out the words "three years from the date of approval hereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to May 3, 1931," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Natchez, Miss., authorized by the act of Congress approved May 3, 1926, entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Natchez, Miss.," be, and the same is hereby, extended to May 3, 1931.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RATING AIR SCHOOLS

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Des Moines Register entitled "Rating Air Schools." I ask that the editorial may be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Des Moines (Iowa) Register, January 14, 1929]

RATING AIR SCHOOLS

Senator BINGHAM, of Connecticut, has introduced a bill behind which it can be assumed the National Aeronautic Association stands, since the Senator is president of the association, which would put aeronautic schools under a rating system, with the Federal Department of Commerce doing the rating. His bill is in the form of an amendment to the air commerce act of 1926, and would provide simply for annual examination of all civilian flying schools and rating as to (1) the adequacy of the course of instruction; (2) the suitability and airworthiness of planes and other equipment used; and (3) the competency of instructors.

The bill ought to pass. Throughout the whole country there are thousands of young people who within a year or two will take flying courses. Some of them have already determined upon that. Others may not yet have seriously considered it. Many are too young now at least to get parental consent but will be old enough in a year or two.

These thousands of young people, not to mention some of their elders, for the most part know little yet about what a flying school ought to be. Since poor or inadequate instruction is in itself dangerous and leads to danger, and since that kind of instruction is no preparation at all for a vocation, which is what many will be heading toward, there should be some kind of reliable rating provided in their legitimate interest. Under existing law certain steps have already been taken, but an actual rating of schools is not explicitly authorized.

The public should understand that up to now there have been a few good civilian schools, a good many fair ones, many others that want to raise standards, and some, unfortunately, that can only be compared with the rankest kind of "diploma mills" that used to turn out pseudo doctors and other professional men—with the additional factor now of danger to the graduates turned out.

Official rating of aeronautic schools would not at all need to eliminate the revenue of the lone, competent aviator with an airworthy ship who wished to teach flying; but it would, of course, direct to the large and well-equipped schools, with very comprehensive courses, most of those who definitely want to be trained for flying as a vocation. It doubtless would mean a good deal to the elaborately equipped and financed high-grade schools; but that is precisely the effect of prestige in every educational field. It would compel many fairly good but small or beginning schools, to build better courses, hire better instructors, and own better equipment if they wished to grow.

Ten years hence rating of air schools might be superfluous. By then people will be pretty well educated to what is essential. People are not yet so educated. And the lives and money of those going into aviation are fairly entitled to the governmental protection that Senator BINGHAM'S bill proposes.

UNITED STATES COURT OF ADMINISTRATIVE JUSTICE (S. DOC. NO. 204)

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on January 3 I introduced a bill providing for the establishment of a new court, and I then made some remarks in reference to it. I have here two articles which have been printed in the Georgetown Law Journal, written by Mr. O. R. McGuire, that bear very materially on that bill; and in order to carry out the purpose that I then noted I had in view, I ask unanimous consent that these articles may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Nebraska change his request and ask that the article which he has presented may be printed as a public document instead of being printed in the RECORD? My reason for asking him to do so is that if the articles be printed in the RECORD the type will be so small that it will be very difficult to read them; indeed, very few people will read the articles if printed in the RECORD; but if printed as a public document they may be easily read by anyone interested. If the articles be printed as a public document, the Senator from Nebraska can obtain whatever copies he may need, and to print them in that shape will cost less.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection that I am aware of to the Senator's suggestion, except that when an article is printed only as a public document it is soon exhausted, and many of those who make inquiries and desire to obtain copies of it are not able to do so. However, I will yield to the Senator's suggestion, and ask that the articles may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONSTRUCTION OF CRUISERS

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I purpose, in accordance with the notice I gave on yesterday, to deliver an address in behalf of the cruiser bill now pending in the Senate, which has been reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which I am a member. I hope I may be permitted to proceed at first without interruption, as I desire to make my address in as logical and connected form as possible. After I shall have concluded my remarks, I shall be very glad and pleased, indeed, to reply to any inquiries or suggestions that may be made by any Senator.

Mr. President, the necessity for an increase of our Navy is greater at this time than ever before in our history. The United States has become the greatest economic, commercial, financial, and political unit in the world. Her wealth far exceeds that of any other nation. We have become the world's greatest creditor nation. Our public and private loans have been extended to almost every continent and country.

The foreign trade of the United States in 1927 amounted to $9,000,000,000, of which about $8,000,000,000 were transported across the seas. In addition to this, the coastal, water-borne trade of the United States for the same year amounted to over $6,000,000,000. Thus, Mr. President, there are $14,000,000,000 annually of trade upon the seas for the proper protection of which this Government is responsible; it is an obligation which this Government can not shirk. The prosperity, the high standard of living, the contentment and betterment of the people of the United States are dependent upon the continuance and further development of this immense sea-borne trade and commerce. Any interruption would bring financial distress, business stagnation, and hardship to every section and industry in this great country.

The mines, the factories, the farms in the interior of our country are as much interested in and as much dependent upon the continuance and further growth of this great commerce upon the seas as are those who live on the seacoast. The cessation of this vast commerce would be as disastrous to the cotton-growing sections of the South and the wheat and corn growing sections of the Middle West and Northwest, the mining sections of the West, and the manufacturing establishments of the East as it would be to the port cities of the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific. The security and further development of this commerce are inseparably interwoven with the progress and prosperity of every section of the United States. In tonnage this commerce amounts to 2½ tons of goods for every man, woman, and child in this country. Nothing is more worthy of our serious thought than the security and development of this commerce.

The security and development of our commerce is dependent upon ships. The ships of which I speak are of two general classes—merchant ships and naval ships. Before discussing the necessity for naval ships as provided for in the pending bill, I wish to give some consideration to our need for merchant ships.

Mr. President, some maintain we need not worry about the transportation of our goods upon the seas so long as foreign ships are willing to carry them. I can not agree as to the wisdom of this policy. Our foreign commerce will be seriously handicapped and injured if we are left dependent upon our competitors for the delivery of our goods. How long would a department store in a city survive competition if it should rely upon a competitor department store to make the delivery of its goods sold to customers? The department store that made the delivery of the goods to the customers of both would very soon drive the nondelivering store out of business. This will inevitably be our situation if we do not provide merchant ships ample to transport our goods across the seas.

Under our law all the coastal trade is confined to American ships, and about 36 per cent of our foreign commerce is carried by American ships. We must develop our merchant marine until it is sufficient to furnish transportation for 50 per cent of our foreign commerce, which is as large a percentage, perhaps, as any nation could really develop in carrying its own goods. It is a prime necessity that we possess an adequate merchant marine in order to further our interests in foreign ports and push our goods as no foreign carrier can or will do.

In 1914 our total trade with South America was $347,000,000. Since that date we have established lines of American-flag ships to South America, with the result that in 1927 our South American trade had increased to $1,000,000,000, an increase of 188 per cent. Prior to the World War our trade with Asia was less than $380,000,000 a year. Following that war, seven American ship lines were established on routes to Asia, with the result that in 1927 our trade with Asia had increased to $1,800,000,000, an increase of nearly 380 per cent. Subsequent to the World War we established American ship lines to Africa, with the result that American trade with that great continent increased from $47,000,000 a year to $200,000,000 a year, an increase of about 325 per cent.

These figures prove beyond controversy that American trade and commerce rapidly increase with American owned and operated ships. This justifies the policy for the creation of an American merchant marine adequate to handle our foreign commerce. Until this is done, American foreign commerce is insecure and its further development will be seriously retarded. At the last session of the Congress we passed a shipping bill which we hope will result in the creation of an American merchant marine sufficient for our trade and commerce. Such a merchant marine in addition is necessary for the efficient operation and support of our Navy in time of national emergencies. However strong the American Navy may be, without a merchant marine in time of war or in time of distress and emergency its ability as a fighting force is reduced, I should say, more than 50 per cent.

Mr. President, in order to reach a conclusion as to the Navy needed to protect our commerce we must ascertain where this commerce is carried. Our commerce is world-wide, it goes over every sea and to all ports. We now have in operation 103 lines of American-flag ships on the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. There are four great sea channels for our shipping. One crosses the Atlantic to Europe, one goes around South America, one along our coast from Maine to Alaska, and one across the Pacific Ocean to the continents of Asia and Australia. These great sea routes divide themselves as they approach the transoceanic areas so as to cover every important port in those areas, and are reinforced by the American tramp steamers that do not travel a fixed service. We have less important commercial routes extending into the Indian Ocean, but we hope to expand them and make them larger and better and more effective for our commerce in that populous section of the world. Thus American ships go to every continent and to every important port in the world. The sea routes traveled traverse every sea and ocean in the world.

A navy is needed to protect these ships and guard these routes, so there may be no interruption in the flow of our foreign commerce. The development of our Navy for this purpose is almost as important as is the local defense of our territory. If this commerce is amply protected, it means the complete defense of our home territory, and also our varied foreign interests. If this commerce on the seas should be interrupted at any time, it would mean that the vast population of our port cities would suffer greatly reduced employment. It would mean that many of our mines would be closed for lack of sale of their products. It would mean that agricultural products would accumulate in barns and granaries without opportunity for sale. It would mean that many factories in all sections of the United States would close on account of lack of demand for their goods.

We must be prepared to protect this commerce and let it continue to flow, even if we should be engaged in war. If other nations should be engaged in war and we were neutral we must be prepared to protect this commerce free from unlawful interruption by others. Our legitimate commerce and lawful rights on the high seas must be protected from lawless hands that would destroy it for their own selfish purposes. Our national safety and our national progress demand that the United States should have a navy adequate at all times to accomplish this.

No one can foretell when an emergency will arise requiring the protection of these vital interests. Wars do not come now, as formerly, after long and protracted negotiations and disagreements. The advantages of swift, sudden movements and activities are so great that when wars come they come now like thunderbolts from a clear sky. The Japanese-Russian War and the World War both came with lightninglike swiftness and suddenness.

Navies can not be constructed swiftly and immediately, as soldiers can be drilled and massed. It takes years to design and construct naval ships, equip them, train and make efficient the personnel. Hence the entire complexion of naval warfare is determined largely by naval forces existing at the beginning of a war. Naval supremacy may be won or lost early after the commencement of war, and, if once lost, can hardly be regained.

The amazing genius, the tireless energy, the boundless resources at the command of Napoleon, gained by his domination of Europe, were unable to build a fleet sufficient to challenge

England's supremacy on the sea, which she had earlier established. Sea power must exist at the beginning of a war, or else it is never acquired. Hence, the United States should have a navy adequate for these purposes.

Mr. President, the question is presented for determination as to what is an adequate Navy for the United States. The United States Government, after carefully considering her great commerce on the seas, her probable economic and political destiny, her international obligation to protect the Panama Canal at all times, and give all nations the right of passage in peace or war, has reached the conclusion that we should have a Navy second to none. We established this as a definite policy at the Washington conference in 1921. At this conference we entered into an agreement with Great Britain and Japan by which it was thought the sea power of these respective nations would be established upon the ratio of 5 for the United States, 5 for Great Britain, and 3 for Japan. It was believed generally at that time that the United States and Great Britain had come to an understanding that the two Nations would abandon a competitive policy and accept substantial naval equality. It was believed that the agreement reached at this conference would accomplish this purpose. Unless this had been the understanding the treaty resulting from the conference would not have been ratified by the Senate. In order to stop competition in naval armaments, with the ill feeling thereby engendered, and the possibilities of rupture and war, the United States agreed to stop competition and surrender the naval supremacy it possessed and to accept naval equality with Great Britain.

When this agreement was entered into the United States had under construction 76 new ships of various types and in various stages of completion, including powerful battleships and battle cruisers. The completion of these ships, many of which were very near completion, would have given the United States a Navy which I believe would have been superior to the combined fleets of the world. Among these ships under construction were six large battle cruisers, whose size, speed, and armament would have enabled them to sweep and control the seas and its commerce. In order to attain the equality with Great Britain contemplated in the Washington conference the United States was compelled to scrap these and other ships, at a loss of about $175,000,000.

In other words, we surrendered naval supremacy and scrapped $175,000,000 worth of ships—ships upon which that amount had been expended—to stop competition, and to retain naval equality with Great Britain. Under this agreement Great Britain sacrificed in new construction about $2,600,000. Japan's sacrifice in new construction was estimated at $38,000,000. This shows the sacrifice made by the United States in order to put her on an equality with Great Britain, and with a ratio of 5 to 3 with Japan. No other nation made so great a sacrifice at the Washington conference in order to realize the policy adopted. I take the position that the United States made a wonderful, vast, and far-reaching sacrifice when it surrendered naval supremacy to obtain naval equality and prevent naval competition.

Mr. President, there is another matter that I want to call to the attention of the Senate which is as striking and far-reaching in this matter as the sacrifice made by the United States to prevent naval competition.

The ratio of 5 for Great Britain and 5 for the United States and 3 for Japan was supplemented by a promise on the part of the United States not further to fortify or increase the efficiency of her naval bases in Samoa and the Philippine Islands. Great Britain was left with all her naval bases and with the privilege of creating a great naval base at Singapore, which she is now rapidly building and fortifying. The naval bases of Great Britain were left undisturbed. Those bases are scattered in every part of the world, as so strikingly shown to the Senate by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in his speech of a few days ago. One had only to look at that map to see the sacrifices we made in the western Pacific in order to secure naval equality and to abandon naval competition.

The naval bases of Japan were left practically undisturbed by the treaty, and we were left in the Pacific with practically no adequate naval base except at Hawaii and our continental ports. The agreement to this ratio for naval vessels between the United States, Great Britain, and Japan was based upon this agreement in connection with naval bases. They were part of one and the same agreement—ratios of 5 to 5 and 5 to 3—with an agreement in connection with naval bases which was thought to be added to protect the rights and interests of all three nations and prevent competition.

Mr. President, these ratios can not be altered in any respect without severly jeopardizing not only our possessions and commerce in the Pacific and the Panama Canal but also our immense commerce scattered in all parts of the world.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to interrupt the Senator further than to inquire whether he intends to discuss the fact that a 5 to 5 basis between the United States and Great Britain in itself gives to the British Empire an immense advantage on account of her stations?

Mr. SWANSON. I may do so later; but I should prefer answering any questions the Senator may suggest after I finish my address. I desire to make it as logical and connected as I can.

These ratios, I repeat—5 to 5 and 5 to 3, with the agreement in connection with naval bases—can not be altered without jeopardizing the commerce and safety of the United States in the Pacific and the Panama Canal, and our possessions in the Philippine Islands and Samoa. I want the Senate distinctly to understand that the ratio was fixed in consideration of our agreeing to make no further fortification of our great naval base at Manila and our base at Samoa, and we were left on this basis of 5 to 5 to 3, which was thought to be adequate.

In fixing the ratio contained in the Washington treaty, the naval bases of Great Britain and Japan were fully considered. On account of Japan's many naval bases in the western Pacific, her proximity to China and the Asiatic coast, the ratio of 5 to 3 was considered adequate for the full protection of Japan and her commerce. In other words, a basis of 5 to 3, with the United States not fortifying Manila, was considered adequate for the protection of Japan, and with a fleet ratio of 5 to 3 we thought we were adequately protected, with a navy sufficient to protect the Philippine Islands.

The ratio of 5 to 5 between Great Britain and the United States was considered adequate for the protection alike of the extended commerce and possessions of Great Britain and those of the United States; and I believe in carrying out in spirit and substance the agreement reached at the Washington conference and the implied understandings arising therefrom. I believe the best interests of the United States and Great Britain and the world will be achieved by substantial equality in the navies of Great Britain and the United States. When this is accomplished fairly and substantially the apprehensions existing in each nation regarding the purposes and intentions of each to the other will disappear and the two nations will become firm in friendship, and I believe the peaceful relations which have so long existed between them will continue; and this will be most conducive to world peace.

If the United States and Great Britain enter into competition in naval armament, it will inevitably lead to friction, unrest, and apprehension. This would be a great misfortune to both the United States and Great Britain and might result in an alignment on one side or the other of other naval powers.

Equality of naval strength between these two nations will be the best guarantee of future good will and a continuation of peace between the two nations. With naval equality existing, neither can afford to be arrogant in demands or reckless in conduct toward the other. Neither can afford to be exacting in its own demands and neglectful of the rights of the other. With mutual respect and esteem occasioned by equal naval power, friendship and good will will be fixed on a firm basis. No reckless, ambitious government in either country would dare to jeopardize the future of either country by making arrogant demands or reckless ventures in diplomacy or war.

Thus, I am persuaded that the best interests of the United States and Great Britain will result from equal naval strength between the two nations. The United States has consistently in her negotiations been willing to accept this equality. The difficulty of reaching an agreement for substantial naval equality has been with Great Britain and not the United States. The Washington conference limited the ratio of 5–5–3 to battleships and aircraft carriers, but prohibited the construction of any naval ship larger than 10,000 tons. Thus the Washington conference still permits the unlimited construction of submarines, destroyers, and cruisers of a tonnage less than 10,000. No agreement could be reached at the Washington conference as to this character of ships on account of the opposition, it was understood, of other nations than Great Britain and Japan. The Washington conference thus resulted in only a limited agreement for disarmament. The results of the conference have proven most unsatisfactory to the United States. The result has been that she surrendered naval supremacy and has become only a second-rate naval power, some claim only a third-rate naval power. Our Navy is to-day small and inferior to that of Great Britain, and we would be at a great disadvantage if any conflict should arise between Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. President, we will examine and see how this great inequality has been accomplished. The Washington treaty in connection with battleships has been complied with by each Government party to it. Battleships constitute the backbone of a navy and are its real fighting power, but its efficiency is dependent on cruisers to furnish supplies, protect lines of communication, and obtain information upon which naval strategy is absolutely dependent. A fleet without an adequate supply of cruisers has its efficiency as a fighting force tremendously reduced.

I want to say, in passing, that a great many people believe we should have the greatest number of aircraft in the world, no battleships, and no cruisers. Others believe that we should have the greatest number of submarines and no battleships and no cruisers.

The object of the Navy is to control the surface of the sea, to control it for commerce, to control it for trade, to control it so that the cotton of the South, the wheat and corn of the West, the products of our mines and factories can find access to all the markets of the world unrestrained and untrammeled by lawless hands.

Aircraft are one of the elements for the control of the surface of the sea. We can not export $14,000,000,000 worth of goods by air, but aircraft are one of the elements in helping us to control the surface of the sea. We can not transport $16,000,000,000 worth of goods under the sea in submarines, but submarines are potential as an arm to enable us to get control of the surface of the sea so that commerce can go back and forth without interruption.

If a navy were confined simply to aircraft and submarines, it might hurt the commerce of other nations; but the sea would be closed to the commerce of the country with such a navy, and this great Nation can not afford to have such a thing happen—the sea closed to its commerce—either in time of peace or in time of war.

As I have said, cruisers are necessary to protect lines of communication, to obtain information for use in naval strategy. Without proper cruisers a fleet is helpless and defenseless, and its efficiency reduced more than 50 per cent. A fleet without an adequate supply of cruisers is at a great disadvantage in battles and in the protection of commerce and in defending our country's ports and seacoast.

The greatest defect in our Navy is lack of cruisers to aid the fleet and protect American commerce in times of emergency. Let us see who is responsible for the great superiority of the British Navy over the American Navy, and where lies the race for competition. At the time of the Washington conference the cruiser situation was as follows: The United States had a total cruiser strength, built and building, of 33 cruisers with a total tonnage of 257,625 tons. All but 4 of these cruisers were less than 20 years of age.

I want to show now why an age limit is important. Some naval ships run 25 or 30 years, or possibly more, but no cruiser, with its rapidity of movement, with its machinery built for speed, and with its armament, would be considered of use in battle or naval emergency after 20 or 25 years.

As I have said, at the time of the Washington conference we had 257,000 tons of cruisers under 20 years of age. Great Britain had at that time built and building 62 cruisers, less than 20 years of age, with a total tonnage of 338,170. Great Britain had in addition certain cruisers which were listed as obsolete and for sale. It will be noted that the ratio of cruiser strength in tonnage was 5 for the United States and 6.6 for Great Britain. While this was a disparity in favor of Great Britain, it was not as marked as to-day. Besides, this disparity was to some extent reduced by our superiority in destroyers.

It has been the experience of many years that the life of a cruiser is 20 years, after which time it is practically obsolete and almost useless as a fighting force. Modern improvements in naval construction and armament are so rapid that after a cruiser is 20 years of age it is hardly worth repairing and keeping as a part of a navy.

The United States to-day has 22 cruisers, commencing with the Rochester, built in 1893, to the Missoula, built in 1908, with a total tonnage of 178,425, and an average age of 25 years. These cruisers are not effective as a part of our Navy, and it will be a waste of money to keep them in repair for naval uses. Great Britain has no cruiser in her navy built before 1911, and thus her cruiser strength is free from obsolete vessels and is modern and up to date in construction, machinery, and armament. At this time the United States has 10 modern cruisers with an aggregate tonnage of 75,000 tons. Six of these cruisers were built in 1923, 3 in 1924, and 1, the Memphis, in 1925. Thus the United States built but 10 cruisers between 1908 and 1923. For 15 years this important arm of the Navy was woefully neglected.

Great Britain now has 51 cruisers completed since 1911, of a total aggregate tonnage of 269,190. Thus at the present time the cruiser strength of the British Navy is three and one-half times greater than the cruiser strength of the American Navy. This makes the British Navy vastly superior to the American Navy and leaves American commerce, which can only be protected by cruisers, completely at the mercy of the British Navy.

The United States has authorized and has appropriated money for the construction of eight additional cruisers with an aggregate tonnage of 80,000. Great Britain has authorized and appropriated for 12 additional cruisers, with an aggregate tonnage of 116,600. Thus when all cruisers authorized and appropriated for have been constructed, the modern real cruiser strength of the United States will be 155,000 tons and that of Great Britain 385,790 tons. This will give Great Britain a cruiser strength in the ratio of 13 for Great Britain and 5 for the United States.

In addition to this cruiser program Great Britain has 5 cruisers of an estimated tonnage of 42,000 authorized to be laid down in 1928 and 1929. The cruiser tonnages here given do not include the three cruisers, whose construction was postponed or abandoned.

Eliminating the obsolete cruisers possessed by Japan, this country has built since 1919, 21 modern cruisers, with an aggregate tonnage of 116,205. Japan has authorized and appropriated for the construction of eight modern cruisers with an aggregate tonnage of 80,000. Thus, Japan has modern cruisers, built, authorized, and appropriated for, of an aggregate tonnage of 215,155. In addition Japan has four cruisers still within the age limit of 20 years built prior to the Washington conference. Thus, Japan in cruiser strength has not only passed the ratio of 5 to 3, established at the Washington conference as the proper ratio, but has reached the ratio of 1.3 for 1 for the United States.

Considering the abandonment of our bases in Samoa and the Philippine Islands, Japan's Navy will be superior to our Navy in the western Pacific, and any effort on our part to protect our commerce and possessions under existing naval conditions would be almost futile. This deplorable condition of our Navy has arisen from our failure for 15 years to build any cruisers. It is useless to try to disguise the fact that the American Navy is not now sufficient to answer the needs of American interests and to respond to the demands for the safety and security of our commerce and possessions. Our hold upon the Panama Canal and our great interests there is no stronger than is the American Navy. In order to make these secure America must have naval equality with any nation, and that navy must be supported especially by cruisers to keep open our communications, supplies, and information, and to prevent raids upon commerce going through the canal. This is especially important from the fact that Great Britain possesses important naval bases near the Panama Canal.

Mr. President, we should remember further that we have an international obligation by treaty with all nations, pledging that the canal shall be open in times of peace and war alike to all nations. We will be powerless to discharge this obligation unless we have a navy equal to that of any nation. The trade, commerce, and best interests of all nations demand that the United States should fulfill this obligation. Failure to do so will be a national disgrace which this great Nation should never endure. All nations in the world are thus deeply interested in the United States having an adequate navy to fully discharge this international obligation, which can only be done by the possession of a navy equal to that of any nation. The immense commerce passing through this canal, exchanging commodities between the Atlantic and Pacific also demands that this canal be open and free and not hampered or threatened by the navy of any nation.

These considerations demand the construction of modern cruisers to increase the strength of our Navy and make it meet the ratio of 5 to 5 with Great Britain and 5 to 3 with Japan as contemplated at the Washington conference. If there has been competition in naval armament that jeopardizes the friendly relations of nations, such competition has been occasioned by others and not by the United States. We have patiently waited, vainly hoping that the ratios contemplated at the Washington conference would be respected by the nations participating therein and be extended to all classes of naval vessels. We only commenced building cruisers recently when we began to realize our Navy was becoming vastly insufficient as compared with others and our rights upon the seas, our commerce, and foreign possessions were left dependent on the good will of other nations. We have been at a loss to understand why some nations, if they possess the friendship and good will they claim for the United States, are so feverishly and rapidly building cruisers far in excess of those we possess in order to establish supremacy on the sea and to make effective then their will and decisions.

We realize in time of peace that all commerce from whatever source flows free and without interruption. It is only in time of war, and blockades incident to war, that trade and commerce are interfered with. Neither the United States, Great Britain, or Japan need navies except in time of war.

The British Navy is superior to all navies of the world combined, excluding the Navy of the United States. We can not understand why Great Britain should add to her navy so many cruisers except for the purpose of establishing naval supremacy against us. This supremacy is only needed in time of war or apprehended war. It is only needed to establish her control of the sea and her commerce whenever her interests may so dictate.

If no war is ever apprehended with us, then this supremacy can only be desired by Great Britain in case she is at war and we are neutral for the purpose of controlling our commerce upon the sea. She desires to be mistress of the sea as she has been for centuries and to make her will the law of the seas. I am unwilling, either by treaty, by agreement, or by failure to have an adequate navy, to concede this right to Great Britain. The sea is the common heritage of all nations and to be ruled by international law and agreements, and not subject to the will of any one nation. The best interests of Great Britain and the United States demand between these two nations navies of substantially equal strength so that neither can arrogate to itself the power of controlling the seas and its vast commerce.

If any government must be supreme upon the seas and no agreement for limitation of naval armament can be made, I, as a patriotic American, favor the United States Navy being superior to all others. I will trust this vast power and responsibility more willingly to the United States than to another nation. I believe it would be more fairly and more humanely exercised by this Nation than any other. I hope Great Britain will be wise enough to accept the offer of the United States for a Navy of substantially equal strength. If competition must arise, and if it does, it will be the fault of Great Britain. I for one prefer to make safe and secure the vital interests, commerce, and possessions of my country over that of any other.

Mr. President, in order to avoid this competition with its resultant evils a conference was called at Geneva, and Great Britain and Japan were asked to enter into an agreement to extend to all naval vessels the ratio agreed upon by the United States, Great Britain, and Japan at the Washington conference. Japan was willing to enter into an agreement extending the ratio agreed upon at the Washington conference to all vessels in the respective navies. Great Britain refused to do so and the conference adjourned without the accomplishment of anything other than producing further ill will and misunderstandings.

The American representatives were willing to agree to any reasonable limitation of cruisers, destroyers, and submarines that would extend to these the ratio established at the Washington conference for battleships and aircraft carriers. The American representatives also declared that they would prefer a reduction in tonnage rather than an increase. The American representatives offered to limit cruisers to an aggregate tonnage of 250,000, each country to build the character of cruiser most needed and desired not to exceed 10,000 tons each. Great Britain at first proposed a great increase of tonnage in cruisers, which the American representatives promptly declined, stating it would result in an increase of naval strength and not a decrease.

Great Britain then submitted proposals which instead of producing an equality in naval strength between the United States and Great Britain would have further enhanced her existing great superiority. She realized she had two great elements of naval strength that no other nation possessed and she had to devise some way by which these two elements could be used effectively even after the limitations were imposed on naval armaments in the treaty. These two elements were her world-wide system of naval bases, flanking all commercial ports in the world, and her great merchant marine of 880,000 tons of fast merchant ships, suitable for conversion into auxiliary cruisers. The way to make these two assets of particular value and to further increase her naval supremacy was obvious. First, she proposed that all ships should be limited to cruisers of small tonnage and ineffective batteries so they could not go far from their own shores without suffering capture and destruction. The second effort was to get a majority of the cruisers in the world so small and so lightly armed as to be comparable in strength to converted merchant ships. By this means Great Britain could augment her cruiser tonnage effectively in time of war, more than doubling it, while no other power could do so.

Great Britain fully recognized that if any power built cruisers in considerable numbers carrying 8-inch guns, such action would tend to minimize her great strength in merchant ships. Merchant ships can be converted into cruisers and armed with 6-inch guns, but not with 8-inch guns. Great Britain has a tonnage of 880,000 in such merchant ships which can be converted into auxiliary cruisers and armed with 6-inch guns. The United States has a tonnage of 180,000 which might be converted into cruisers with 6-inch guns. Thus if Great Britain could have entered into an agreement to confine cruisers built to cruisers of small tonnage and armed with 6-inch guns her complete supremacy on the sea would be established. If we could build cruisers of 10,000 tons, as we are now building, and arm them with 8-inch guns her merchant marine would be powerless against them on account of speed and size of armament.

Their offer was to limit us to 12 cruisers of 10,000 tons carrying 8-inch guns. Thus the United States would not have had one-half enough cruisers to accompany the fleet, as the others permitted under the proposed limitation in size would have restricted their operation from supply bases. The balance of the cruisers under the agreement would be 6,000 tons or less with 6-inch guns, which would be practically useless to the United States Navy on account of their limited radius of operations and size of guns. Such cruisers would not be more effective than converted merchant ships.

Thus at Geneva Great Britain instead of trying to create substantial naval equality sought to obtain an agreement which would have established her supremacy on the seas beyond question. The offer of the United States representatives to limit tonnage to 250,000 tons of cruisers and let each nation under a limit of 10,000 tons and 8-inch guns build as each nation might determine was refused, and Great Britain sought to obtain a great advantage in order to enhance her superiority. The proposals made by Great Britain at the Geneva conference if adopted would have given her greater naval supremacy.

The representatives of the United States very properly rejected these proposals, pointing out that on account of Great Britain's naval bases being scattered all over the world and with a great merchant marine that their acceptance would have permanently established Great Britain's naval supremacy. In order to induce us to accept this unfair proposal Great Britain subsequently entered into a naval pact with France, the effect of which was not to lessen the unfairness of her proposals at Geneva but to enhance them and obtain for her a still greater naval supremacy. The British Government thought by obtaining the concurrence of France in her proposals that the United States would be induced to accept the rejected proposals. The consent of France was obtained by making concessions to her for her great military land establishments. In this British-France pact Great Britain would be supreme on the sea and France would become supreme in military strength on land. The world would be confronted with the dangers of an alliance having the supremacy of both land and sea. This proposed pact was received with derision in America and encountered opposition in England, and the British Government has publicly avowed its abandonment. Such an alliance, if entered into, would not only have been a serious menace to the United States but also to other nations. It is difficult to discover the reasoning of the British Government by which it believed it could ever beguile us to consent to such an unfair and menacing agreement. The present abandonment of the pact furnishes no guaranty that it may not in the future be consummated.

Nothing should impress America more forcibly with the necessity of strengthening our Navy than the fact that such a pact was entered into by Great Britain and France. It shows the uncertainties and dangers that confront us and other nations in connection with international relations. While governments since the World War have been discussing peace and making noble gestures for peace such as are contained in the Kellogg-Briand treaty, all nations are increasing their naval and military establishments.

The military establishments of the world are larger now than they were prior to the World War. It is folly for us to close our eyes to what is transpiring in the world and to leave our national safety and our vital interests only to peace preachments. With peace in our hearts we behold the world arming, and we must be prepared for any emergency that may arise.

The first and main line of defense for America is her Navy. With an adequate navy, America is secure beyond peradventure, and our commerce and interests will be adequately protected, regardless of what may occur in other parts of the world. The proposal in the pending bill authorizing the construction of 15 cruisers and 1 aircraft carrier will meet only in a partial way the naval increases that are being made by other nations. If this results in naval competition, the responsibility for it lies with other nations, not with us. We have patiently waited, hoping for an agreement for naval limitation. The situation has become dangerous and we can not wait longer, especially since our fair propositions at Geneva were sternly rejected. If the construction of the 15 cruisers is authorized, appropriations to make the authorization effective must subsequently be made by Congress. To reject the pending bill at this time will be a source of great satisfaction to Great Britain, will give to her the assurance that America is willing to concede to her naval supremacy, and that her will shall be law on the seas. A large element in England agrees with us that the best interests of Great Britain and the United States can only be advanced by having substantial naval equality. Knowing the strong sentiment in America for peace, and the indisposition to make appropriations for naval or military purposes, those in England who insist on British naval supremacy are relying upon that sentiment to prevent an increase of our Navy, and thus leave British sea supremacy undisturbed.

I believe the American people desire to have a navy equal to any, and are not willing that our vast national interests shall be jeopardized by any failure to provide for an adequate navy. Our rights in China, in other parts of the Orient, and elsewhere in the world will be ultimately sacrificed unless we have a navy sufficient to maintain them. Our diplomacy must be vacillating and humiliating without a navy to insist upon our rights and just demands. The affairs of the world will be determined without consultation with us or consideration of our rights unless we have a navy sufficient to indicate that we can not be ignored. Our vast foreign commerce going to every continent and clime will only continue by the acquiescence of others and not as a matter of right unless we have a navy to insure its continuance. It seems to me that America is fully justified in increasing her Navy to an equality with that of any nation. Measured by our wealth and seaborne commerce, we are entitled to a navy equal to any; and we should not be satisfied with less.

If the 15 cruisers shall be constructed, we shall then have only 33, which is less than the number required properly to cooperate with and support our fleet and protect our commerce. This will give us only 305,000 tonnage in cruisers, 80,790 tons less than Great Britain, and about 90,000 tons in excess of Japan. We will still be below the 5–5–3 ratio. If these cruisers shall be constructed, there is no possibility of their being scrapped, as our cruiser strength would not exceed any limitation that might be agreed upon.

The pending bill also authorizes the construction of one aircraft carrier of 13,000 tons. The Washington conference limited the United States and Great Britain to aircraft carriers aggregating 135,000 tons each, and Japan to 81,000 tons. Under the Washington treaty we were permitted to convert two battle cruisers into aircraft carriers, which we did by converting the Lexington and Saratoga, with an aggregate of 66,000 tons. We have also the Langley, an old ship, almost obsolete, which brings our aircraft tonnage to 78,700 tons. If the aircraft carrier provided for in this bill shall be constructed, we will then have an aircraft carrier tonnage of 92,500 tons, which will be about 37,500 tons less than permitted under the Washington treaty. The necessity for the construction of the additional aircraft carrier is most urgent, as no fleet is safe without sufficient aircraft. In this respect we are also inferior to Great Britain. Great Britain has six aircraft carriers, with an aggregate tonnage of 107,550 tons. Japan has three aircraft carriers with an aggregate tonnage of 53,300 tons. Thus, if the aircraft carrier authorized in this bill should be constructed, the United States would be below the ratio established at the Washington conference.

Mr. President, it will be seen that the proposals contained in the pending bill are most moderate and conservative. They do not exceed in any degree the requirements of our Navy and can not be construed in any light as competition on our part, as the bill only seeks to bring our Navy up to the ratio established at the Washington conference; it even falls far short of bringing about that result. If we had been desirous of entering into a program of competition with any nation, a bill would have been proposed for larger increases in our naval establishment. There is no restriction in the Washington treaty as to the number of cruisers, the only restriction being that no cruiser shall be of a greater tonnage than 10,000 tons.

The members of the Naval Committees of the House and Senate did not accept the large naval program proposed by the Navy Department, but adopted the proposals contained in this bill, which are most moderate and conservative. These committees, intrusted by the House and Senate with the duty of making recommendations to the Congress for an adequate Navy, believe they are not justified in recommending less than is contained in the pending bill. Those committees feel that this is a very moderate program, which is absolutely necessary for the proper support of our present Navy, and will not only accomplish that purpose but will be an object lesson to Great Britain in showing Great Britain that the United States is determined to have a substantial naval equality.

I believe if this determination shall be made clear to Great Britain, it will convince her of the wisdom of entering into a pact for naval equality and induce her to abandon her policy of naval competition. I believe this bill to be the most effective step that can be taken to accomplish that desirable purpose.

We have limited the authorization to cruisers in this bill to meet the needs of our present Navy, so that if later an agreement shall be reached with Great Britain, we shall sustain no loss by scrapping. We refused to make further authorizations because we believed that Great Britain would ultimately, in fairness and justice, concede that our demand for naval equality was right. We refused to accede to the demand of those who would have a greater authorization and desired to build a navy superior to all others, and make America supreme upon the seas. We felt we were bound by the understandings and agreements of the Washington conference and would not be justified in recommending the construction of vessels violating the spirit of that conference. We desire to adhere to the spirit, wisdom, and understandings of the Washington conference.

Believing that the passage of this bill will accomplish the purposes sought and result in an agreement among the powers for the limiting of naval armaments, a provision has been incorporated in the bill authorizing the President, if an international agreement shall be reached as to further limitation of naval armament, which he is requested to encourage, to suspend all construction authorized under the act.

Thus, Mr. President, if Great Britain and Japan are willing to have an agreement to carry out the ratios established at the Washington conference to all naval vessels, the President is empowered to cease construction under this act. If competition shall continue after the passage of this bill, the responsibility will belong to other nations and not to the United States. This very bill holds out the olive branch of peace. This bill should pass, as it starts on a pathway that I firmly believe will lead to a better and more comprehensive agreement for the limitation of naval armament.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Virginia. I think we are greatly indebted to the Senator for his eloquent and logical presentation of this important subject. He mentioned early in his address a matter which it seems to me should be emphasized just a bit, and that is the effect of the Jones-White bill upon the encouragement of the building of an American merchant marine.

Mr. SWANSON. Perhaps the Senator was not present when I referred to that subject.

Mr. COPELAND. I was present and heard what the Senator said; but I want to emphasize, if I may, the fact that by reason of the mail subventions and the loan arrangements provided in that wise bill we are now building or contracting to build 26 merchant ships to sail under the American flag under private ownership of citizens of this country.

Mr. SWANSON. That is very gratifying.

Mr. COPELAND. I think it is gratifying, and I think it shows the wisdom of the Congress in the passage of that bill; and since the Senator made the merchant marine fundamental to his argument, I believed that this particular matter should be emphasized and the country should know it.

Mr. SWANSON. I thank the Senator for giving me the information.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have here a statement by the Fraternal Order of Eagles entitled "The Fifth Year Under Old-Age Pensions in Montana," which contains such valuable information, and information so much in point on this subject, that I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

THE FIFTH YEAR UNDER OLD-AGE PENSIONS IN MONTANA—POINTS TOWARD THE EARLY DOOM OF THE POORHOUSE

Opponents of old-age pensions must take to their heels before the fresh flood of evidence from Montana that the payment of pensions is a far more economical way than the poorhouse system to care for worthy dependent aged. During 1927 the average cost of maintaining a person under the pension law was less than half what the State would have had to pay to maintain a dependent in a poorhouse.

Under the poorhouse system, so the Federal Bureau of Statistics determined after a careful survey, each inmate costs the State an average of $344. Under the pension system, Montana, in 1927, paid an average of only $166.52. This, it is important to note, is even lower than the average in Montana for 1925 or 1926. Does it look, then, as if pension costs rise year after year, an objection which our opponents so lustily shout?

Corroborative evidence is not lacking from individual counties that costs under the pension law are far, far lower than under the poorhouse system, and that they may be further reduced as experience teaches the county commissioners the wisest way to administer the statute.

For example, in Lewis and Clark County, in 1926, the average pension amounted to $186.86. In 1927 it came to $148.80.

Carbon County, in 1926, paid an average pension of $171.63. In 1927 this was reduced to $140.64.

Custer County, in 1926, paid an average pension of $123.87. For 1927 this was reduced to the exceptionally low average of $103.85.

Gallatin County's record is remarkable. In 1926 this county paid pensions to 25 persons at an average cost of $259.51. Behold, then, the record for 1927. The county paid pensions to 30 persons at an average cost of but $152.75.

Jefferson County likewise shows an unusual saving. In 1926 the county helped 13 persons at an average cost of $126.92. In 1927 the county assisted 30 persons at an average cost of only $74.42.

Thus, with statistics from a State where the law is no longer an experiment, who can say that the old-age pension system is extravagant?

The saving is effected in a number of ways, as the Fraternal Order of Eagles has long pointed out. The counties are relieved of maintaining expensive buildings and grounds. They do not have to pay salaries to caretakers. Administration of the pension system can be placed in the hands of county officers whose time is not wholly taken with other official duties. The sick or mentally diseased can be cared for in hospitals equipped to give them the treatment they should have.

But the Fraternal Order of Eagles advocates old age pensions not alone on the grounds of economy. This is a humanitarian measure which must eventually be adopted, just as the six-day week and the eight-hour day have been accepted. Certain African tribes throw their old folk to the crocodiles. In this country, civilized though we claim to be, we consign our dependent aged to institutions where every shred of their self-respect is killed and where they are often subjected to virtual imprisonment, to abuse, to degradation. Under the pension system they can enjoy freedom, hope. They can live where they have known their years of greatest happiness, amid the familiar surroundings they love so well. They can turn their hands to tasks suited to their strength and ability, and so contributing to their own support, retain their self-respect. Without self-respect, what is life worth?

Furthermore, whatever a pensioner earns lessens by so much the amount the State or county must pay for his maintenance. And thus we arrive again at the established economy of the old-age pension system intelligently administered.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to have the Senate resume the consideration of the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the chair). The Senator from New Mexico suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	King	Schall
Barkley	Fess	McKellar	Sheppard
Bayard	Fletcher	McMaster	Shipstead
Bingham	Frazier	McNary	Shortridge
Black	George	Mayfield	Simmons
Blaine	Gerry	Metcalf	Smoot
Blease	Gillett	Moses	Steiwer
Borah	Glass	Neely	Swanson
Bratton	Glenn	Norbeck	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Greene	Norris	Trammell
Broussard	Hale	Nye	Tydings
Bruce	Harris	Oddie	Vandenberg
Burton	Harrison	Phipps	Wagner
Capper	Hastings	Pine	Walsh, Mont.
Caraway	Hayden	Pittman	Warren
Copeland	Heflin	Ransdell	Waterman
Couzens	Johnson	Reed, Pa.	Wheeler
Curtis	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Dill	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.
Edge	Keyes	Sackett

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. My colleague the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a brief statement as to the condition existing now with regard to the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Your conferees were in session for about 10 days, trying to arrive at an agreement with the conferees of the House on the forty-odd amendments that were made to that bill in the Senate. There has been a virtual agreement upon all the items with the exception of three.

The first of these is Senate amendment No. 29, which provides for placing the position of Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes in the competitive classified civil service.

The second is Senate amendment No. 39, which has reference to the condemnation of privately owned lands in national parks.

The third is Senate amendment No. 40, which has reference to the construction of the transmountain road in Glacier National Park.

I have asked that the Senate agree to the conference report. It is not a complete report, but the three items I have mentioned are to be taken back to the House for a vote. That being the case, the report is only a partial one, and I ask that the report be favorably acted upon by the Senate, with the distinct understanding that those three items are to go back to the House, as your conferees would not agree to the House demand unless the House had a direct vote upon those three items.

I wanted to say this much so that the Senate could get an idea of just what the three items are to which I have referred.

In other words, I might say this, the amendment provides that the road shall be built, not the way roads in all the other parks are built, but that it shall be built at once, and the sum of $500,000 estimated to finish it is to be made available for that purpose.

I realize that the road ought to be built; there is no question about it, there is no doubt about it in the world. It would connect with the main road in the Glacier National Park, so that people not only could go up north of the lake, but they could go out of the park through the northern route. It will take $500,000 to finish that road.

The policy in the past has been that there will be so much appropriated every year for the building of roads in national parks. That policy is to be continued. The chairman of the House committee is just as much in favor of building the road as are the Senators from Montana, but he says that the House can not agree that the full amount shall be taken out of its regular order and that road built.

The other item has relation to the condemnation of privately owned lands in the Glacier National Park. Senators know that the law now provides that the Government of the United States can condemn privately owned land. This provides that it shall not apply to the Glacier National Park.

The other item was one placing the position of Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes in the classified civil service. To-day he does not come under civil service. All of the Indian Associations are pleading that that position should be under the civil service. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], when the bill was reported to the Senate, made quite a statement to the Senate in favor of that and as against the action of the committee.

Mr. BRATTON. Does that apply to all superintendents or just to the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it applies to all the superintendents, although I am not sure.

Mr. CURTIS. It applies only to the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, because all the other superintendents are already under the civil service.

Mr. SMOOT. It applies to them all. As chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate, I want to say that everything has been done that we can do, it seems to me, to have the conferees of the House agree to all our amendments, but that was an impossibility. There was no need of holding any further conferences upon these items, we were informed by the conferees of the House. Then I suggested that, at least, before I would ask the Senate to recede from those amendments the House itself, not the conferees but the House itself, vote upon the three amendments.

If this conference report is agreed to, which I hope will be done, the bill will go back to the House, and the House will vote upon each one of the items to which I have referred. If the House votes for the Senate amendment, then there is only one thing for the House conferees to do; that is, to yield. If the House does not so vote, then the conference report will have to be brought back here for further action.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to express to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in charge of the report, my heartfelt thanks for the courtesy extended by him to me during a brief illness, in deferring consideration of this report until I could reappear on the floor. I am also indebted to him, as well as to other members of the Senate conferees, for the fidelity which they have exhibited in the conferences upon this measure to the amendments adopted by the Senate.

I am very glad to see a number of Senators here to listen to this matter this afternoon, because I intend to speak of what I regard as the most outrageously oppressive piece of legislation which has come before this body in a long time. It relates to an amendment incorporated in the Interior Department appropriation bill in the other branch of Congress. It was not found in the bill as originally introduced in the House, but is found in the bill as reported by the House committee. The Senate committee recommended an amendment which took the sting out of the legislation, and it is that amendment which is now the subject of consideration here.

Of course, I shall not oppose the request that the report, so far as agreed upon by the conferees, be approved by the Senate. I say what I have to say now with respect to the matter not only for the information of Members of the Senate but in order that what I think about the matter may be understood in the other branch of Congress when they come to take up the matter for special consideration over there.

The matter under consideration is found at page 101 of the bill as it came from the committee of the House, and at page 106 of the bill as it passed the Senate. I read from the Senate copy as follows:

> For the acquisition of privately owned lands and/or standing timber within the boundaries of existing national parks and national monuments by purchase (39) or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C., p. 1302, sec. 257), whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government, $250,000, to be expended only when matched by equal amounts by donation from other sources for the same purpose, to be available until expended: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of the Interior may incur obligations and enter into contracts for additional acquisition of privately owned lands and/or standing timber in the existing national parks and national monuments not exceeding a total of $2,750,000 as matching funds from outside sources are donated for the same purpose, and his action in so doing shall be considered contractual obligations of the Federal Government: Provided further, That the sum herein appropriated and the appropriations herein authorized shall be available to reimburse any future donor of privately owned lands and/or standing timber within the boundaries of any existing national park or national monument to the extent of one-half the actual purchase price thereof: Provided further, That as part consideration for the purchase of lands, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion and upon such conditions as he deems proper, lease lands purchased to the grantors for periods, however, not to exceed the life of the particular grantor, and the matching of funds under the provisions hereof shall not be governed by any cash value placed upon such leases: Provided further, That appropriations heretofore and herein made and authorized for the purchase of privately owned lands and/or standing timber in the national parks and national monuments shall be available for the payment in full of expenses incident to the purchase of said lands and/or standing timber.

It will be observed that by this legislation the Government of the United States embarks upon an entirely new policy. This is really not legislation appropriate at all to an appropriation bill, but it is a character of appropriation for the Interior Department that has been carried for a long time.

A great deal of the legislation in relation to our reclamation projects in the West has found its way into these appropriation bills. A great deal of the legislation affecting Indian affairs out West has thus been incorporated in appropriation bills. Indeed, the abuse was so marked that our esteemed and venerable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who I am glad is now present, said to me about two years ago that if anything of the kind ever came over again he would return it to the House without action by the committee at all on the subject. But here it is.

Under this legislation we would embark upon the policy of acquiring all lands in all national parks. It amounts to something over 92,000 acres, exclusive of mineral claims, the aggregate of which we are not advised. It contemplates the expenditure of something over $5,000,000 in cash and the exchange of lieu lands to the State of a value of at least as much. In other words, it contemplates the expenditure all together of something in the neighborhood of $10,000,000 for the acquisition of privately owned lands in all the national parks.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that no committee has ever considered this except the Committee on Appropriations. One would naturally think that if the Government of the United States were going to embark on any such policy as that an appropriate bill would be introduced, which would go to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or to some other appropriate committee, which would examine into the matter and announce the policy of Congress, and, if necessary, authorize an appropriation, and then it would go to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee would recommend such appropriation as it thought necessary. Instead of that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives having in charge appropriations for the Interior Department have themselves declared and made effective this policy.

It is quite true that the rules of the House of Representatives apparently forbid anything of the kind, and very properly so. I read:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

I entertain no doubt at all that this provision in the bill would have been subject to a point of order in the House of Representatives, and would have been excised upon the mere suggestion that nothing of the kind was ever authorized by any law.

This is the theory upon which our Budget law was enacted, namely, that no appropriation should find a place in a general appropriation bill except to carry out some purpose already authorized by law. I will read section 202 (a). The statute, after directing the President of the United States to submit an estimate each year upon which appropriations can be made, provides:

SEC. 202. (a) If the estimated receipts for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the Budget, on the basis of laws existing at the time the Budget is transmitted, plus the estimated amounts in the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year in progress, available for expenditure in the ensuing fiscal year, are less than the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the Budget, the President, in the Budget, shall make recommendations to Congress for new taxes, loans, or other appropriate action to meet the estimated deficiency.

Even the President is by the law enjoined not to include in the Budget any appropriation for any purpose except that which has already been authorized by some law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLAINE in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 11526, the cruiser bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I read from section 203 (a), as follows:

SEC. 203. (a) The President from time to time may transmit to Congress supplemental or deficiency estimates for such appropriations or expenditures as in his judgment (1) are necessary on account of laws enacted after the transmission of the Budget, or (2) are otherwise in the public interest. He shall accompany such estimates with a statement of the reasons therefor, including the reasons for their omission from the Budget.

This item was not included in the Budget and there has been no supplemental estimate supporting it received by either the House or the Senate. Indeed, I have just had information from the Bureau of the Budget that they have not estimated the item at all.

But this body has recognized the wisdom of the policy thus expressed in the rule of the House and in the Budget.

Rule XVI of the Senate relates to amendments to appropriation bills. Of course, these general appropriation bills originate in the House according to a practice which has become almost as fixed as though there was such a constitutional provision, so provision is here made only for amendments to appropriation bills and not for original matter in appropriation bills. Rule XVI, "Amendments to appropriation bills," provides that—

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

I think the policy is fairly well fixed that this provision has no business in the appropriation bill at all. It violates the settled policy of the Government to have it here. Of course, the way to get at this matter, if it is desirable to acquire any privately owned lands in a public park, is to introduce a bill, have it referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys or the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or some other committee, and reported, and the bill passed, and the authorization given, and then the Committee on Appropriations make whatever appropriation may be appropriate for it.

Just how important is this particular matter? In the House hearings upon the bill is found the report of some officer of the Park Service, who investigated the questions of private holdings in the national parks throughout the country, in which he tells us:

Exclusive of mineral claims, complete data on which is not yet available, alienated land and timber holdings in the national parks total 92,101.84 acres, of which 2,935 acres are involved in power-site withdrawals, which may be subject to cancellation in whole or part; 47,662.19 acres are in State ownership and for the most part acquirable by lieu of exchange; and 2,321.82 acres of lands in Yosemite, owned by the city and county of San Francisco and subject, in whole or part, to conveyance to the United States under terms of the so-called Raker Act of December 19, 1913, granting certain power and water privileges to the city and county, leaving 39,182.83 acres to be acquired through purchase or donation. Of the latter acreage, 3,207.77 acres represent timber rights held by the Yosemite Lumber Co. on Government-owned land and 150 acres represent land only on which the Government owns the timber, both parcels being in Yosemite National Park. The remaining 35,825.06 acres is classified into timberlands, 18,704.49 acres; nontimberlands, 15,455.45 acres; and town sites and villa site, 1,665.12 acres.

How much is it going to cost to get these lands? We have the following:

Information on which to base appraisals of privately owned lands in the parks is meager. In only one park, Yosemite, do we have any cruises of timberlands available, and even here the figures are not entirely complete. Estimates of present values in all cases therefore have been arrived at by comparison with known values of similar lands elsewhere in each community; ascertaining, where possible, the asking prices of owners; location of the various tracts with regard to roads and trails and with regard to administrative importance; suitability for resort or summer-home sites or commercial enterprise; and assessed valuations. Naturally there is in general a wide divergence of opinion as to values between asking prices and the estimates of our superintendents and even a wider one between asking prices and assessed values, and the figures are presented with the full realization that they are far from conclusive. Nevertheless, it is believed that for the most part they represent liberal values and would not be exceeded by appraisals under condemnation proceedings if instituted.

The total estimated present value of all alienated holdings, except mineral claims, power sites, and State lands, is placed at $5,810,261.29, divided among the various parks as follows: Glacier, $1,553,763.57; Yosemite, $1,510,846.80; Rocky Mountain, $1,076,350; General Grant, $479,062; Lassen Volcanic, $475,100; Mount Rainier (including mineral claim appraised at $100,000), $337,919; Crater Lake, $147,119.92; Sequoia, $125,200; Grand Canyon, $84,550; Mesa Verde, $11,850; and Zion, $8,500.

It is contemplated that all these lands shall be acquired and the various amounts expended, and this is only the barest guess as to what the lands cost the Government, all without having an investigation of it by any committee appropriate to the case.

The bill carries an appropriation of $250,000 for the purpose of making acquisition, but authority is given to contract obligations amounting to $2,750,000 more, the appropriation, however, not to be available unless private parties put up an equal amount. So it contemplates the incurring of an obligation to the amount of about $3,000,000 by the Government of the United States in the expectation that interested private parties will put up $3,000,000 more.

The alleged occasion for the legislation, it is said, arises by reason of conditions in Yosemite National Park and in Glacier National Park. A topographic map of the latter park is before Senators. It is said that within the Yosemite National Park a very considerable body of land is owned by a lumbering company, which may at any time resume lumbering operations and cause a desecration of the cedar. The same condition exists to some extent in Glacier National Park. There is a rather limited area in that park that is privately owned now, that is quite heavily timbered, with valuable timber upon it, and the logging of that particular land would be a desecration.

If the matter came up before any committee I should very cheerfully lend my support to legislation looking to the acquisition of the lands, the lumbering of which would operate really to make the place entirely unsightly and detract from the particular purpose for which the park is created. But I now speak with especial reference to Glacier National Park, all of which is within the State of Montana and with every feature of which I have the most intimate familiarity.

In addition to lands more or less valuable for timber, which are near the foot of Lake McDonald, the largest lake in the park, and, if I may be permitted to say so, the most beautiful, there is quite a little body of land held in private ownership that is likely to be logged off, a thing that ought to be obviated by appropriate legislation. But in addition to that it will be noticed that in the western portion of the park along the line of the North Fork of the Flathead River, which constitutes the western boundary of the park, there is land which is comparatively level. Of course, it is all mountainous, but speaking with respect to the remainder of the park, that region is a comparatively level region, so much so that settlers have gone into that locality. I dare say there are a dozen of them who went in there before the park was created in 1910 and established homes for themselves there and have lived there since and have made a living upon those lands. They occupy the tracts which, it will be observed, are not particularly scenic in character. They have some stock that grazes upon the foothills there. They have milch cows. They cultivate gardens and sell the vegetables thereon grown to tourists in the park. They act as guides to hunting parties who go into the locality to the west, which is famous for its big game.

The legislation to which I am addressing myself provides that the Secretary of the Interior may purchase any of those lands which he desires to purchase, to which feature I offer no particular objection; but the objection is directed to the power it gives to the Secretary of the Interior to condemn any lands he may see fit to condemn anywhere within national parks; and the amendment which is the first subject of discussion here takes away from the Secretary that power to condemn. It is amendment No. 39, which would strike out the language—or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C. p. 1302, sec. 257), whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government—

Practically all lands held in private ownership in the Glacier National Park cluster about Lake McDonald and the valley of the North Fork of the Flathead River. There are now held in private ownership, under patents granted by the United States prior to the time that the park was created, a tract of practically 160 acres at the head of Lake McDonald; another at the place at which I point [indicating], of equal area, about a mile and a half down the lake from its head. Between those two points is another tract held in private ownership. Another tract is held in private ownership at the foot of the lake; another is directly opposite at the place to which I point, there [indicating]. That is all the land around Lake McDonald which is held in private ownership. Lake McDonald is about 10 miles long. Its perimeter is something over 20 miles. In that 20 miles these 5 tracts cover about 2½ miles of shore line; in other words, the Government now owns about ten times as much shore line as is held in private ownership.

Those properties were acquired a good many years ago. People have gone in there and built summer homes upon those privately owned lands. It is now proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Interior at his sweet will, whether the owners care to sell or not, to go into court and condemn those lands, take them away from those who have thus acquired them and who make there their summer homes.

But that is not all. At this point of which I have spoken, about a mile and a half down the lake from its head, is a tract which was thus acquired and which is now owned by Mr. John E. Lewis. There has been something in the nature of a hotel there for many years; it existed for years prior to the time the park was created; but since the park was created Mr. Lewis has acquired the property and has built thereon a gem of a hotel, a beautiful piece of architecture. It is a popular place for summer tourists to go and stay during the entire season. Mr. Lewis has expended, I should think, perhaps $150,000 or $200,000 in the construction of that hotel and in the accessory buildings, in improving the grounds, and that kind of thing. Power is proposed to be given to the Secretary of the Interior, if he does not agree with Mr. Lewis upon the price that he ought to have for his property, to go in and condemn that land and take it away from Mr. Lewis at such a figure as a jury may be willing to award him; then, inasmuch as a hotel is needed there, to give a lease or concession to some one else to run the hotel.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, at this point, will the Senator explain to the Senate how many hotels there are in the park that have been leased and are owned by the Great Northern Railroad Co.?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Great Northern has a very large and very lovely hotel at the eastern entrance of the park here [indicating], that will accommodate perhaps 600 guests. I, perhaps, ought to say that the park is bounded on the east by the Blackfeet Reservation; the right of way of the Great Northern Railroad forms the southern boundary of the park; the North Fork of the Flathead River is the western boundary; and the international boundary line is the northern boundary. The park is upon both sides of the main range of the Rocky Mountains. There is one peak within the park, which is known as Triple Divide Peak, from which if a snowball be thrown in one direction the waters will go into Hudson Bay; if a snowball be thrown in another direction the water will go into the tributaries of the Missouri, and ultimately into the Gulf of Mexico; and if it be thrown in another direction the waters will go into the Flathead and Columbia Rivers, and eventually into the Pacific Ocean.

In addition to the hotel at the eastern entrance, the Great Northern has another hotel between the two St. Marys Lakes, upon the eastern border of the park, and has another hotel within the park, which is known as the Many Glaciers Hotel, because from that hotel the glaciers shown upon the map may be seen. Furthermore, the Great Northern has chalets or small stopping places at Two Medicine Lake, at Going-to-the-Sun Mountain, at Granite Park, and at the Sperry Glacier. These it will be observed are all on the east side of the park; that is, on the east slope of the mountain. The only hotel on the west slope of the mountain is the Lewis Hotel at Lake McDonald.

In addition to that, Mr. President, a Methodist society have acquired a part of a tract of land, which was patented, at the lower end of the lake, consisting of 40 acres, which they use for a summer camp to which they invite their young people to come for a month or two in the summer time; and they go in large numbers. It is proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to condemn that land thus taken and appropriate it to any other purpose to which he may care to put it.

I want to impress upon the minds of Senators the idea that the national park officials do not desire these lands for any purpose whatever; they simply do not want any of these lands held in private ownership.

I may say—it, perhaps, may be of interest to the Senate—that prior to the time when the park was created I acquired a building site, a part of a patent, at the head of the lake and constructed there, in the year 1910, a very comfortable summer home. I may add that since 1900 my family have been accustomed to spend their summer vacations in that neighborhood, living in the house at the head of the lake since it was constructed. It is proposed to take my house away from me, if the Secretary of the Interior feels so disposed, and burn down the house or turn it over to some one else.

Mr. President, I do not think there is any occasion whatever for this legislation. I spoke of the occasion for it so far as the Yosemite Park is concerned. It is said that at the south end of Lake McDonald, here [indicating], there are a number of unsightly houses that are offensive to tourists who come to the park. Well, I passed there every day last summer during nearly two months, and I was not sensible of any offense. We had a good many guests during the summer time, and none of them apparently noticed the offense, if there was any; but, anyway, the department wants to get rid of the buildings at the lower end of the lake, and I am not here to say that some of them are as handsome as I wish they might be.

I am perfectly confident, Mr. President, that there will be no difficulty whatever in acquiring in the Glacier National Park, and I am perfectly sure in all other parks, all of the lands that are held because of the timber upon them, for those who hold them because of the timber hold them for commercial purposes, and they would just as lief sell to the Government as to cut the timber and manufacture it into lumber. So the permission to the Secretary of the Interior to purchase is to my mind all that he needs, at least, all that he needs at the present time. If it is impossible for the Secretary to negotiate with the owners of any of these lands which ought to be acquired by the Government of the United States for their sale at a reasonable price, he may then come before the Congress at the next session or some subsequent session and ask for specific authority to condemn particular lands, explaining to the appropriate committee exactly why it becomes necessary to condemn such lands. But to give the Secretary of the Interior carte blanche to condemn any lands that he sees fit to condemn in any of the national parks it seems to me is an outrageous and indefensible power for the Congress to vest in him. So much, Mr. President, for the amendment to strike out that provision of the law which authorizes condemnation; but before I pass from it I want to correct a misapprehension that may exist. It will be observed that the proposed legislation reads:

by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 4, 1888, whenever in the opinion of the Secretary acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government.

Some notion seems to prevail that the Secretary of the Interior even now has the authority under the provisions of the act of 1888 to condemn any of these lands, and that it is now proposed to confer no additional authority upon him. That is a very grievous error. The act of 1888 confers no authority whatever upon any officer of the Government to go out at will and condemn private lands for any public purpose. If that were the case, the Postmaster General would be authorized to go into any city and condemn a piece of land for a post-office site, or the Secretary of War to proceed to condemn lands for the purposes of a fort or an arsenal or something of that kind without any authorization by Congress at all. That, however, is not the law at all. The law simply provides that whenever the acquisition of lands is authorized, the proper officer may proceed as provided in the act of 1888.

I read from the case of the United States against Certain Lands in Narragansett, R. I., reported in One hundred and forty-fifth Federal Reporter, at page 656, as follows:

The defendant contends that the act of August 1, 1888 (ch. 728, 25 Stat. 357), entitled "An act to authorize the condemnation of land for sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," does not confer a general authority to land, but only authority to institute condemnation proceedings in furtherance of or in execution of authority otherwise granted to procure real estate for public purposes. A mere reading of this statute shows clearly that this contention is correct. The act is as follows:

"That in every case in which the Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer of the Government has been, or hereafter shall be, authorized to procure real estate for the erection of a public building or for other public uses, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to acquire the same for the United States by condemnation, under judicial process, whenever in his opinion it is necessary or advantageous to the Government to do so; and the United States circuit or district courts of the district wherein such real estate is located shall have jurisdiction of proceedings for such condemnation; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States, upon every application of the Secretary of the Treasury under this act, or such other officer, to cause proceedings to be commenced for the condemnation within 30 days from the receipt of the application at the Department of Justice.

"SEC. 2. The practice, pleadings, forms, and modes of proceeding in causes arising under the provisions of this act shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the State within which such circuit or district courts are held, any rule of the court to the contrary notwithstanding."

Chappell v. United States (160 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. Ct. 397, 40 L. Ed. 510) clearly recognizes the necessity for other authority than that conferred by chapter 728 by the reference to Revised Statutes sections 4658, 4660.

So, Mr. President, without the authorization of this legislation, the Secretary of the Interior has no power to condemn any of the lands within that park; but, regardless of that, he has no funds with which he could pay for the lands that are condemned unless they are granted by this legislation. So what it amounts to is that this legislation is necessary in order that he may prosecute the condemnation proceedings to effect.

So much for the amendment revoking or withholding from the Secretary of the Interior the power to condemn those lands.

The other amendment is related to this question.

When I first became familiar with this country there were no roads here at all anywhere in the neighborhood of the park except a road running from Belton, on the Great Northern Railroad, to Lake McDonald, a distance of about 2½ miles; and that road was scarcely wide enough to permit the passage of a wagon through the dense forests that exist there. I might say that this park is the most marvelous combination of mountains and barren peaks, of glaciers, of rushing rivers, of wonderful cataracts, but, most of all, of the most lovely forests. A short distance above Lake McDonald here is a beautiful group of cedar trees. The forest consists of pine, both yellow and white, of fir, spruce, cedar, tamarack, hemlock, and shrubbery of innumerable kinds. The wild flowers grow in the utmost profusion and in startling beauty. This road at that time, as I say, was just wide enough to permit the passage of a wagon; and you went down into deep ruts and over tree roots and everything of that kind.

However, after the park was created, this road upon the east side of the park, most of it within the Blackfeet Reservation, was constructed, permitting easy access to the Great Northern hotels upon the east side of the park; and there was also constructed a beautiful road taking the place of the old road of which I have spoken from Belton to Lake McDonald. In more recent years that road, now spoken of as the transmountain road, has been extended up the east side of Lake McDonald, and then proceeds to climb up the bed of McDonald Creek and up the side of the mountain to what is known as the Granite Wall, where it turns back; and it is intended to continue on down until it reaches the upper end of St. Marys Lake, permitting passage from the east over this marvelously scenic road to the west side and on to the west.

In anticipation of the completion of that road the State of Montana has spent an enormous amount of money for a State as sparsely settled as ours upon the improvement of roads leading to the Glacier National Park, anticipating that tourists will travel through that country by the thousands for the purpose of viewing the beautiful scenery and enjoying the advantages it offers. That road is now completed to the summit, and now it is proposed to stop its construction.

I might say that at the present time there is no road across the Rocky Mountains south of the park until you reach a point opposite my home in Helena, Mont., a distance of about 200 miles. For 200 miles there is no way of getting across the Rocky Mountains; so that when we go to Lake McDonald in the summer time it becomes necessary for us to make a great detour off to the west here, crossing the mountains near Helena, getting on the other side, and coming up from the west side instead of coming along from the east to the eastern side and then crossing by this route.

The bill carries an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the construction of roads in the national parks. Each of our appropriation bills for the last half-dozen years has carried such an appropriation; and out of these appropriations so made since 1923 an allocation has been made for the construction of this transmountain road, until now there has been expended in the construction of that road something over $1,400,000; and now there is a gentlemen's agreement between the chairman of the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations and the Park Service that they will not spend a dollar more of any money that is appropriated for roads in the national parks for the completion of that road until—well, I suppose until the chairman of the House subcommittee lets them.

Mr. SMOOT. Until next year, they say.

Mr. WHEELER. Was not the statement, until these people had sold out their property?

Mr. SMOOT. No; until next year, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. At any rate, the fiat has gone out by the chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the House that none of that $5,000,000 must be spent in the completion of that road—and you are correctly informed by the Senator from Utah that it will take about half a million dollars more to finish the road—until these people who own the lands at the south end of the park will sell out their properties at a satisfactory price or until they shall be condemned under the provisions of this law.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. I spent a week in the park a year ago, going through such parts of it as the time allotted would permit; and I learned that there was some effort to construct one highway which would permit the passage of tourists who did not want to take the time to go through the park generally.

I think that ought to be done. I should greatly regret it if it were not done; but it will not be the policy, will it, to abandon the many horse trails that go through the park?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No, Mr. President; I think we shall be able to hold to the policy that no more roads shall be constructed in the park.

Mr. FESS. That is precisely what I wanted to know. I think that is the most wonderful natural curiosity in America, and every citizen ought at some time to see that park.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The map before you shows the horse trails through the woods, and they are the ordinary means of travel in the park; but, as the Senator properly says, there are many people who can not take the time to get off and move by horse trail. This road would give them an opportunity to go through the park, and they would be taken by this route high up above even the timber line, among the bare, barren rocks.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a personal statement?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. A trip from Many Glaciers Hotel by horse trail up to Granite Park is a trip that very few people in the world will duplicate; and I should very much dislike to see that particular phase of visiting the park broken into. I agree that there ought to be one trunk line by which automobiles could go through, but I should very much dislike to see that natural curiosity broken into by our modern methods of transportation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I fully agree with the Senator.

Mr. FESS. When you approach Granite Park you can see the mountain goat and I do not know what else so high up that it is necessary for you to use a glass to see it; and you realize that you are in a portion of real nature that it is very difficult for a man to appreciate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I might say in this connection that those who are familiar with the country love to go there and stay, and they come year after year to enjoy the beauty of the surroundings.

Mr. President, the officers of the Park Service are very, very decent about this matter. They say, "We have made this arrangement with Mr. CRAMTON, and we propose to carry it out, but we will do whatever the Congress tells us to do about the matter." Accordingly we asked the Senate committee to put in an express provision that this money should be utilized, among other purposes, for the purpose of continuing the construction of this road.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say, however, that Mr. Cammerer and also Mr. Demaray took the same position that the bill provides, particularly as to the condemnation proceedings. In fact, I have their testimony here on pages 26 and 27.

Mr. WHEELER. With reference to condemnation proceedings?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; with reference to condemnation proceedings. I want to say also that the chairman of the House subcommittee, Mr. CRAMTON, recognizes that this is one of the greatest scenic places in the world, and he says that that road is going to be built without a question. His point was, however, that it should not be done this year. That, of course, is what he tells the members of the subcommittee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to say this much in justice to Mr. CRAMTON, and not only in justice to him but I am glad to do so. He is to be commended for the interest he has exhibited not only in these national parks but in all of the problems which come before his subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with appropriations for the Department of the Interior. But really I dare say that most people would feel as my colleague and I do, that when it comes to a question of such vital consequence to our own State, when it deals with this property here, within which both of us have summer homes, at least we ought to be consulted about the policy before it is announced.

It has already been told that that is what is going to be done, that there is not going to be a dollar spent upon this road until this property at the foot of the lake is acquired by the Government of the United States. So well is it known, that the contracting firm which has constructed the road thus far from the head of the lake, and done a splendid job, a beautiful piece of work, with an enormous equipment there, pulled out their equipment and disbanded their force, and it has gone elsewhere, because the word has been given out, before the Congress has acted upon the matter at all, that there is not going to be any more work done on that road until this property is acquired. That is the situation which confronts us.

Mr. WHEELER. Had they remained there and kept there the horses and the machinery, which they had for completing the road, it would undoubtedly have meant a saving to the Government, because of the fact that that firm having pulled their equipment out anybody who takes up the work now will have to put similar equipment on the ground.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, they would have been in a position to bid less than anybody else could bid for doing the work.

Now, I desire to indicate in this connection that the attitude taken by me and my colleague is likewise taken by the people who own the most of these lands. I have this telegram from Mr. Lewis:

COLUMBIA FALLS, MONT., December 22, 1928.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,

Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

My attitude on park measure same as yours and heartily approve of same, with your amendment, and do not think same will work hardship on anyone.

JOHN E. LEWIS.

Mr. Lewis owns some of these timberlands down at the south end of the lake. There will not be the slightest difficulty in agreeing with Mr. Lewis upon a reasonable price for those lands, because he is desirous of preserving them, as we are, of course, as he is running a hotel there for the accommodation of tourists, and he has agreed that that land should be taken over by the Government and should not be logged over.

The other owner of most of those lands is a Mr. Stack, who runs a store at Belton that is supported by the tourist traffic. He does not want to log off this land, and there will not be any difficulty in making an arrangement with him that is reasonable. But if these people should be unreasonable about the matter, and the Secretary should be unable to get the lands at a fair price, let him then come before Congress and say, "We have done the best we can, and we can not get them. Give us authority to condemn."

There is absolutely nothing urgent about this matter. Even with respect to the Yosemite National Park—and I regret that the Senators from California are not here—I dare say there is not a man who owns timberland in the Yosemite National Park who under the circumstances would think of engaging in logging operations while there was a prospect that legislation for the acquisition of those lands was pending before the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator long enough to say that I personally know Mr. Lewis is anxious to sell, but the Government has not even attempted to buy the timberland from him at all; at least it had not when I talked with him—I do not know whether it was the past summer or just before that. He personally talked with me and told me he would be delighted to sell the land because he did not want to log it off.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Methodist organizations to which I have referred are equally solicitous about their property. I have this telegram from Bishop Brown, of that church, who appears to be in Ithaca, N. Y., at present:

ITHACA, N. Y., December 20, 1928.

Senator T. J. WALSH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Our Methodist property Glacier Park acquired at sacrifice. Very useful educational and recreational purposes. Shall appreciate your interest in protecting our investment.

Bishop W. E. BROWN.

I have another telegram, under date of December 21, 1928, from Mr. C. L. Clifford, as follows:

KALISPELL, MONT., December 21, 1928.

Senator THOMAS J. WALSH,

Capitol Building, Washington, D. C.:

We are concerned about bill to condemn privately owned property in Glacier Park. We purchased 40 acres on Lake McDonald and spent thousands in development and buildings through summer institutes. Thousands of Montana young people are given outing and training. I represent hundreds who commend and urge your amendment.

C. L. CLIFFORD,
District Superintendent.

I have a telegram from Mrs. Nancy C. Russell, the widow of the late Charles Russell, the cowboy artist, who has a very lovely place, filled with mementos of her late husband, of artistic character, at the foot of the lake, a part of the patent in that section. She says in her telegram:

PASADENA, CALIF.

Senator T. J. WALSH:

You know my love for the lake. Would like to keep property. Do not wish to go against any decision of the Government. Would like more explicit details. Would appreciate your advice as to what I shall do.

NANCY C. RUSSELL.

I have a long letter here from the head of the Epworth League, very much concerned likewise about the Methodist property, as follows:

MONTANA STATE EPWORTH LEAGUE,
Fort Benton, Mont., December 21, 1928.

Hon. T. J. WALSH,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I wired you to-day as follows: "Emphatically protest against condemnation of Glacier Park Institute camp grounds. Bill should except lands held by religious corporations when not used for business purposes. Use for such purposes not inconsistent with purpose for which park created; our grounds used for recreational purposes only. Hold bill in committee until protests received."

I had no knowledge of this bill until Bishop Brown's secretary called me by phone from Helena. We have, as you know, the Glacier Park Institute camp which is a religious corporation under the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church and have 80 acres of ground at the foot of Lake McDonald. We have two or three very good buildings on these grounds and expect to erect more to take care of our religious meetings and institutes which are held there each summer. New buildings that may be erected on these grounds will be in keeping with the improvements placed in the park and under no circumstances could the use of these grounds for the purposes to which we are putting them be considered a detriment to the park; but, on the other hand, it brings to the park hundreds of young people each year that would not otherwise have the opportunity of visiting this national playground.

I can not see where there is any more objection to our organization holding this ground and maintaining this camp than there would be to any hotel or permanent camp grounds operated by any private individual. In fact, there are many arguments in favor of the camp ground and against any permanent camp privately operated. If there is a valid reason for condemning other privately owned property in the park that is now being used for commercial purposes, that reason would not hold as against the continuance of our ownership of this property or, in fact, the ownership of any other property in the park by any other religious corporation. These grounds have been used for the past five years for one or two weeks each summer. Young people gather for a week's outing from all parts of the northern and western portions of Montana. It seems to me that the Government should encourage the use of its national parks for such purposes rather than to discourage such use. It is absolutely impossible for us to carry on our summer meetings without some sort of permanent buildings and improvements, and we could not, of course, place improvements upon leased ground.

I will be very glad to hear from you at once regarding this matter with any suggestions that you may have as to how we may be able to retain our holdings in the park. I am sure you will do everything that you can to help us in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

VERNON E. LEWIS.

I have another letter from Mr. Clifford, under date of December 22, 1928, in which he says:

MONTANA STATE EPWORTH LEAGUE,
Kalispell, Mont., December 22, 1928.

Senator THOMAS J. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: You received my wire regarding the Interior Department appropriation bill and the provision that privately owned property be condemned in Glacier Park and that the continuance or construction of the road through the park be held up until the Government has acquired such property.

We appreciate your attitude on this bill and heartily favor your amendment to the effect that the condemnation of privately owned property in the park be eliminated. A host of private owners are greatly concerned and it affects thousands of young people who have been securing and improving our Glacier Park institute grounds.

Several years ago we purchased 40 acres at the south end of Lake McDonald. We secured it at a very reasonable figure because the owners had gotten it as a homestead and now in their old age they desired to do something fine for the young people of this State. Now, we have invested many thousands of dollars in the land, in improvements, erection of buildings, etc. Thousands of young people have received there at our summer institutes educational training, inspiration, and wholesome recreation. The very grounds and location have gotten into their minds and hearts—in fact, are a part of the life dreams of those who are to become our future—and, may I say, some of our best future citizens in the Northwest.

We are in favor of your amendment and will appreciate your best efforts to secure its passage. We do not wish to obstruct the completion of the road in Glacier in any way, but that should not be contingent on the Government securing the private property in the park.

Thanking you for your continued efforts in this matter, I am,

Very cordially,

C. L. CLIFFORD.

P. S.—I am representing the sentiment of a multitude of people in Montana regarding the above.

I also have a letter from Mr. C. E. Smith, likewise holding some position with the State Epworth League, as follows:

MONTANA STATE EPWORTH LEAGUE,
Hamilton, Mont., December 24, 1928.

Hon. T. J. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Word has just come to me of a congressional bill looking to the condemnation of certain lands in Glacier Park. The Glacier Park Institute Camp of the Methodist Episcopal Church has 80 acres of ground at the foot of Lake McDonald. This they hold for religious purposes only. We have a rustic temple, artistically built, worth approximately $6,000. We also have other substantial buildings, including kitchen, cabins for members, and have plans for administration building, and so forth. The plan of the institute has always been in harmony with those of the park—seeking to preserve all the beauties of nature and build in harmony with other park architecture.

To these grounds come hundreds of young people from the northern and western part of the State for two weeks every summer. A good advertisement for the park, and we supposed in perfect harmony with that for which the park was created. These grounds are in no way used for commercial purposes, nor for any private profit. We have been operating for the past five years. Should we be deprived of the use of these grounds or be compelled to lease them it would seriously cripple our building and improving program and be a distinct loss to our present hundreds, and eventually thousands, of young people.

Whatever may be the attitude of the Government toward other privately owned property in the park, it does seem to us that for the above-mentioned reasons we should be privileged to retain our property, for our plans extend beyond the present meetings for the young people to include religious privileges to other departments of Christian work that shall call for occupancy of the grounds for the greater part of the season, and this we could not do unless we own the grounds, as at present.

We feel sure, Senator, that we have a friend in you, and believe that you will do all in your power to help us to retain our holdings there.

Sincerely yours,

C. E. SMITH.

Mr. President, the good people in the Park Service say, "We do not intend, Senator WALSH, to try to condemn your property." That is neither here nor there. This would give them power to do so. Some of them have made very serious complaint about this Methodist camp at the foot of the lake. I never saw any reason to complain about it. I think it is an admirable thing. For one thing, it is the only place where religious services are conducted in that part of the park on Sunday, so that anybody can attend.

They say, "We do not intend to condemn this property of the Methodist people. It is only some objectionable property that we want to condemn." But this would give them authority to condemn the property if they saw fit to do so, and that is what we complain about.

In any case, Mr. President, I think it is discreditable in the great Government of the United States to say, "We will not go on with the building of that road, on which we have spent a million and a half already, until these people at the south end of the park, including these Methodist people, sell out their property to the Government at such a figure as is satisfactory to us, or as a jury may decide."

As I have said, if there is any of that property they need for any public purpose, and it can not be purchased at a reasonable figure, that will be time enough for them to come to Congress and get authority to condemn.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator understand that as to most of those holdings they want to purchase, they are perfectly willing to purchase and allow the man owning the property to remain on it as long as he lives?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wanted to advert to that. The bill, it may have been noticed, provides that the Secretary may buy or condemn, and then it provides that—

> The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion and upon such conditions as he deems proper, lease lands purchased to the grantors for periods, however, not to exceed the life of the particular grantor, and the matching of funds under the provisions hereof shall not be governed by any cash value placed upon such leases.

That is to say, after the Government has bought this land, or after it has condemned the land, it may lease any particular piece of land to the man whose land has been condemned or bought, for the period of his life. In other words, they come in and condemn my nice home there, and after they have condemned it and acquired it, then they will give me a lease of it for the balance of my life, but my period of life is getting to be rather limited. I have a daughter who has been going there for 30 years and is just as much attached to the place as I am. I have a couple of grandchildren who are delighted with the place, and we do not care to sell.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand there is no intention whatever of condemning the Senator's land.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, I do not ask for any special privilege.

Mr. SMOOT. That provision has particular reference to the land here in this valley. The people who live in this little valley, in between the mountains, are settlers who have taken up lands there for farms. They have cattle there, and raise vegetables for the people who come in the park in the summer. They furnish them eggs, and butter, and milk, and things like that. The owners of nearly all those places will have that privilege as long as they live.

Mr. McKELLAR. About how many people live there?

Mr. SMOOT. About a dozen families.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is no obligation to do that at all, bear in mind. The Secretary may, if he sees fit to do so, lease the land to those people.

Mr. SMOOT. But that has been the policy, not only in my State but in all the other States, as I remember, where the Park Service has holdings.

Mr. WHEELER. What assurance have we, when there are constant changes in the office of Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SMOOT. We have the assurance of the statement before the committee.

Mr. WHEELER. That is not binding at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that, but I am saying that that is the policy now. They really assert it here in relation to the Glacier National Park.

Mr. DILL. How long is this power to condemn to continue?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Indefinitely.

Mr. DILL. It is a permanent law?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the law now.

Mr. DILL. It is not the law now, or a new law would not be required.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have endeavored to show that the existing law does not give that power.

Mr. DILL. I heard the discussion before the committee and I heard the representative of the Park Service say that they did not know that they had the power, and they wanted this additional power.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I earnestly solicit the resolute opposition of this body to any recession from the action heretofore taken approving of both these amendments—first, to cut out the provision in relation to condemnation, and, second, to direct that the appropriate part of the appropriation for the construction of the roads in the national park be applied to the continuance of the work on the transmountain road.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I heartily concur in all that my colleague has said. I want to call attention to and emphasize one or two points which he made, particularly with reference to Mr. Lewis, who owns the hotel. Mr. Lewis spent a lifetime building up his beautiful hotel, and now the Government wants to go in and condemn it, and what for? Not because it is unsightly. Not because it is not needed. Simply because of the whim of some bureaucrat here in Washington.

There has been no development in road building on the west side of the park until quite recently. The road building has been on the east side of the park, where the Great Northern Railway has built the Glacier Park Hotel, the Two Medicine Camp, the Cut Bank Camp, the St. Mary Camp, the Gunsight Camp, the Going-to-the-Sun Camp, the Many Glacier Camp, the Granite Camp, and the Red Eagle Camp. Immediately after the park was created the Great Northern Railway Co. got a permit from the Government to build and has built magnificent hotels at all these various points.

There was no development on the west side of the park for a long period of time. If anyone wanted to go by automobile from the east entrance to the west entrance of the park, it would be necessary to ship his car from Glacier Park Station to Belton at a great deal of inconvenience and cost. The west side of the park is, in my judgment, the most scenic. In this I may be prejudiced, as I have spent most of my vacations there. But be that as it may, the great bulk of the traffic, both by rail as well as auto, comes, I think to the east side. The greater portion of them never get to the west side at all. First, because there is no means of transportation except by horseback or by train, and because the Great Northern Railway, not having hotels on the west side, quite naturally does not proclaim the beauties of the west side as loudly as it does the east side, where are situated its many beautiful hotels.

There was no road at all through the park and no connecting road across the mountains anywhere. Finally the road was built, and it was within 12 miles of completion when, as my colleague pointed out, the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, in charge of this matter, came forth and, I am told, simply announced to the people of Montana, without ever consulting with either my colleague or myself, or so far as I am able to learn, either Member of the House of Representatives, that this road construction was going to be stopped. The contractors, who were on the ground and who had built the road, pulled up their equipment and took it away. They had their equipment there, and they moved it out of the park. Consequently, when bids are asked for and a new contract let, the Government of the United States is going to have to pay more for the completion of the road, because whoever gets the contract to build that 12 miles of road now is going to have to move his equipment into the park at tremendous cost. It will have to be brought over the Great Northern Railway and shipped or carried over the mountains, and the work will have to start all over again. This, of course, is all in the interest of economy and sound business as administered and understood by some.

If the Government buys Mr. Lewis's hotel—which the Government will have a perfect right to do if this bill goes through, as it came from the House—then they can say, "Very well; we will lease it to anybody we want to." It has been said that the Great Northern Railway Co. wants to go over on the west side of the park. The Government could simply condemn Mr. Lewis's property and then issue a permit and lease it to Mr. Lewis, who has spent a lifetime building up the property, or to any other person they might see fit.

There is another man by the name of W. C. Whipps, one of the old-timers in Montana, who has a little home at the head of the lake. He was one of the men most instrumental in having this piece of land preserved for the tourists and for the people of the country. He has a little home up there. The Government proposes to come in and say, "We want to condemn your home, too."

Another old-timer out there in Montana is a man by the name of James Conlon, who has a very beautiful little summer home there. He has spent every summer of his life going to this little home. The Government wants to go in and condemn his property and throw him out. He was another one who was instrumental in trying to get legislation so that this magnificent park should be set aside and not be destroyed by those who wanted to go in and cut off the timber.

The Methodist Church has gone in there and bought up 40 acres of land and established a school, where every year a large number of young people go and spend two months at an institute. They have ministers come there from all over the State to speak to the young people. It is not only a religious institution but an educational institution as well.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not understand there is any intention whatever of disturbing that institution.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Why does the Senator say "Oh, yes"?

Mr. WHEELER. Because of the fact that the bill gives power to the Secretary of the Interior to do it, and what assurance have we or has any other Senator on this floor that Mr. CRAMTON may not get the idea in his head that for the purpose of preserving the beauties of Montana he might go to the Secretary of the Interior and say, "I want you to take this Methodist school out of there." They do not want that done because of the fact that they do not want this possible threat hanging over their heads and causing them to hesitate in the expenditure of any further money in connection with their property.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to get the idea that at the present time there is going to be any effort to interfere with that church, nor with the Senator's home, nor with the home of the senior Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. It is perfectly all right for the Senator to say that, but we have not any definite assurance. How would the Senator from Utah like it if we had a Democratic chairman of the subcommittee in the Senate and he would go out to the State of Utah and, without consulting the Senator from Utah at all or ever mentioning it to him, should enter into a tentative agreement with the Park Service that no money shall be used to complete a road unless something else shall be done or unless something else shall happen, or until the people of his State shall do so-and-so.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no doubt my action in the matter represents exactly what I believe.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course.

Mr. SMOOT. But we are up against a condition and not a theory. I have done the best I could.

Mr. WHEELER. I have not any doubt about that. I do not want the Senator from Utah to think for one moment that I have the slightest criticism to offer of his action in the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. For the sake of the record I want it to appear that, so far as I am personally concerned, I understand there will be nothing done that would affect the Methodist school.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now that the Senator from Utah is on his feet, let me say that it appears that roads are being constructed in all of the parks and it likewise appears that there are lands held in private ownership in all of the parks.

Mr. SMOOT. Every one of them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Has the Senator been advised of any other road project that has been suspended until the private lands in the other parks are acquired?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This is the only one that has been suspended, is it not? In Zion Park in his own State, they are constructing roads. Are they going to suspend the construction of those roads?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, so far as Zion National Park is concerned, there are no roads. In Bryce Canyon National Park there is a road which I suppose is about completed, but it has taken years to construct it. Not only that but there are other roads that will have to be built in that park sooner or later.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am speaking about roads actually under construction in parks where there are lands held in private ownership. The argument is that "if we go on with the construction and completion of this road, the lands at the foot of the lake will increase in value and we do not propose to spend any money there because it will increase them in value; we do not propose to spend any money until we acquire those lands." I want to know if the same condition exists in some other park?

Mr. SMOOT. No; and I do not know that Mr. CRAMTON would acknowledge that to be the case. I want to say to the Senator from Montana that I do not know whether it is the case or not, but I am going to take the Senator's word for it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This I do know, that they are constructing roads in the other parks. I do know that in other parks there are lands held in private ownership and no suggestion has been made from any quarter that they are going to suspend construction of any other road.

Mr. SMOOT. In our State we have had very few roads constructed, but I acknowledge that the great Glacier National Park is one of the great scenic wonders of the world. I think the only one that could possibly be superior is the wonderful Bryce Canyon, with all the beauties that there are in Glacier and, in addition, rocks of every known color. It is a marvelous thing. Our national parks are just beginning to be known. I believe, as firmly as I believe I am standing here at this moment, that there will be not only tens of thousands visiting the parks, but that in a short time there will be millions of people from all over the world visiting our national parks. Among the great scenic sights of the world is the Glacier National Park. There is no question about that.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the very reason why the road ought to be completed.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to get the idea that I do not believe it ought to be completed. I know it ought to be completed. There is no doubt about that. But we have not money enough to complete all the roads in all the parks at the present time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Utah that I agree with all he has said about national parks; but my own view is that what is needed to supplement what we already have is a park in the tropical regions of Florida, where the people can go in the wintertime and visit a national park and see real tropical things which are not to be found in the mountains.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I want Senators to understand exactly what has been taking place in our State. I would ask the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], or the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], or the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], or the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], or the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who are among those who do me the honor to listen to me, just what they would think if the chairman of a subcommittee of the House entered into a tentative agreement with some branch of the Government by which it was agreed that they would not expend any part of an appropriation that was made by the Congress of the United States of America for national parks or for some other object until, if you please, a certain group of people sold their lands to the Government at some price that he might want to pay for them. I think it is a situation almost without a parallel in the history of the Government for the chairman of a subcommittee of the lower House, without consulting the Members of the Senate who live in the State involved, to take such steps as have been taken in this matter. But because of the fact that he happens to be in this point of vantage, he simply comes out and tells the people in Montana, "You have got to sell these lands, and you have got to do so-and-so, or you will not have any money to complete this road."

What is he gaining by it? There are 12 miles of that road that remain to be completed. As the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said, people coming from Minneapolis, St. Paul, and points east can go to Glacier Park by automobile, but they have to stop at the Glacier Park Station or at some other point on the east side of the park. Then, if they want to go over to the west side with their automobiles, they have to drive a distance of somewhere in the neighborhood, I should judge, of 600 miles and go clear around down through Great Falls, Helena, Missoula, and then up to the west side of the park.

Mr. CRAMTON, chairman of the House subcommittee, is holding up this road, and compelling those people to do that, because of the fact that he wants to force through this proposed legislation.

Let me repeat what I said a moment ago, that Mr. Lewis is probably as much interested in the west side of this park as anybody could possibly be. He has just built a beautiful little gem of a hotel on Lake McDonald; he owns some of the timber that it is proposed to condemn. Mr. Lewis has talked with me personally about the matter and has stated that the last thing in the world he wanted to do was to cut down the timber; that he would be only too glad to sell it to the Government of the United States. There is not any need of legislation to compel him to do so. Mr. Lewis would be delighted to sell the timber to the Government, because it would be more to his interest to see that the timber around Lake McDonald and in that section shall be preserved than it would be to the interest of almost any other one person in the United States, for if the timber around Lake McDonald shall be destroyed it will injure his property. If it should be cut down or burned, it would depreciate the value of his property, and also injure the scenery around Lake McDonald. So he is vitally interested in seeing that the Government shall buy the timber and that it shall not be logged off.

Then, as I have stated, there are about a dozen farmers who, as my colleague, the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] pointed out, went in there long before there was any thought of a park; they took up little homesteads along the north fork of the Flathead River; they have built their homes there; they have raised their children there, are perfectly contented, and want to stay there.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says, of course they will be permitted to live there during their life time; but suppose there shall be a new Secretary of the Interior, and suppose some official of the Park Service should come along and say "I am not going to issue any more permits." Now, let me ask Senators what assurance have we that such a thing will not happen?

Mr. SMOOT. But, Mr. President, I will say to the junior Senator from Montana that such permits will be issued; there is not any doubt about it.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but, if the Senator will wait a minute, let me point this out: At the head of Lake McDonald are two sisters, who have a little cottage of about two or perhaps three rooms. When they bought that little cottage I think they were paying $5 for their permit. The price of the permit was raised, I think, first, to $15, then to $25, then it was raised to $50, and I do not know but now it has been raised to $75. Every year or two the Park Service has gone ahead and raised the price of the permits to those two sisters who have this little summer home where they come each year. The Interior Department has a perfect right, under its rules and regulations, to raise the price of the permits. What assurance have the farmers there, indeed, what assurance has anybody who secures a permit there, that he is not going to be subjected to the whims of the head of some bureau in the Interior Department?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is the junior Senator from Montana sure that those permits are issued annually?

Mr. WHEELER. They are issued annually. I know that because of the fact that I have a cottage there of my own.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that in many cases permits are issued for 10 years.

Mr. WHEELER. But, as I have stated, I have a cottage there and I am familiar with the practice.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not disputing what the Senator has stated, but I was just asking the Senator if he knew the fact he has stated of his own knowledge.

Mr. WHEELER. Before I was elected to the Senate I had a cottage up there at the head of Lake McDonald, and a permit was issued to me every year.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that fact, then?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; there is not any question about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Ordinarily, I will say, such permits are issued for 10 years, and I know in some cases, such as that of the Methodist Association, they have been issued for a longer time than that.

Mr. WHEELER. Permits have never been issued for a longer time than a year in Glacier Park. I do not know whether, under the law, the Interior Department would have the right to do so, for I have never looked into the matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the law provides for the issuance of permits from year to year, and more than 10 years ago the Interior Department announced its policy not to issue any more permits at all, and none are now issued.

Mr. WHEELER. No one can get a permit there now. I bought a log cabin, the previous owners of which had received a permit away back, I think, in 1913 or in 1914. They transferred that permit to me, and it has since that time been reissued to me every year.

Mr. FLETCHER. What does a permit cover? Why not call it a lease? Why call it a permit?

Mr. WHEELER. It is called a permit; that is all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does a permit give any special privileges other than to occupy the land?

Mr. WHEELER. It merely gives the privilege to occupy the property.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. To occupy it from year to year.

If my colleague will permit me, Mr. President, I desire to say that I had yesterday morning a very appealing letter from Mr. Robert Underwood Johnson, one time, as my recollection now serves me, ambassador to Italy, who, as my information goes, has passed 80 years of age. He writes me in the most appealing kind of way, referring to his long association with John Muir, about the absolute necessity of acquiring all lands within the national parks. He speaks of it as if it were something very close to his heart.

The idea is to get everybody out of the parks. Under that situation of affairs what reason have we to suppose the Secretary of the Interior may not be induced, by those who feel so keenly about it, not to issue life leases or permits to the people who are now there? If, after my death or after the death of the homesteaders in the park, it is the policy of the United States and to the interest of the United States to acquire the lands, it is likewise to the interest and to the policy of the United States to acquire them now. So that the present system is merely a concession which the present officers of the department seem quite willing to accord; but how do we know that that policy is going to be continued?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the junior Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the attitude of the department as set forth in the testimony of officers of the department:

> We have, as you see, a provision here that as part consideration for the purchase of the land the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion and upon such conditions as he deems proper, lease lands purchased to the grantor for periods not to exceed the life of the grantor and a matching of the funds, etc.

I know that is the policy of the department, and I know that is provided for in the law. Under such conditions the department could not oust those who are there.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, if the department granted a lease good for life they could not be ousted.

Mr. SMOOT. And it is stipulated that the granting of the lease is to be considered as a part payment for the land.

I do not deny what the Senator says; I merely call attention to what I know to be the general policy of the department.

Mr. SIMMONS. But it is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; it is left in his discretion.

Mr. SMOOT. I know in this case the department is going to act in accordance with the policy it has announced, as it has done in other cases.

Mr. WHEELER. But we may have another Secretary of the Interior; we may have another head of the National Park Service. By the time this bill passes we do not know who is going to be Secretary of the Interior, and we do not know who is going to be at the head of the National Park Service. So, if this provision is allowed to remain in the bill, it will be tantamount to subjecting the Methodist society, who bought 40 acres of land and are carrying on an institute at that place, to the hazard of being dispossessed at almost any time.

Let me ask the Senator, To what better use could the park be put than to have the Methodist societies carry on their institute—the Epworth League, I think it is called—and have their speakers come there during two months of the year? Young people go there; they are enabled to leave the cities and to spend time in a place where they can have a wholesome outdoor life. Frequently noted persons, visiting the park from all parts of the world, come to the institute and are glad to talk to the young people who go there.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there could not possibly be a better use made of the park than that. It is being done all over the West. There is hardly a canyon in Utah where there are not buildings for such organizations, where young people may come. Different organizations are provided for, and they hold their meetings every year for at least two months. It is a wonderful thing for those who participate not only from the health standpoint but also because of the teaching of morality under the care of those who are sent to look after them. I have not any idea that they will ever be interfered with. I can not conceive of any man who is worthy to be Secretary of the Interior putting a stop to a great program so beneficial not only physically but morally and spiritually and preventing the park being used for such desirable purposes.

Mr. WHEELER. It is just as conceivable to me that that should take place as it is that the chairman of the subcommittee of the committee of the House Appropriations Committee should go to the Park Service and enter into a tentative agreement with its officials that the Park Service could take the action which is here proposed without ever consulting the Senators from Montana, who are supposed to represent the State, and seek to enact this legislation over our heads, disregarding us entirely. I say that there is not a Member of this body who would not resent such action as that on the part of the chairman of a subcommittee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the junior Senator from Montana yield to his colleague?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If my colleague will pardon me, the Members of the House from the State of Montana have not been consulted about the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. They must have known when the bill was before the House what it contained, did they not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The policy was announced last summer, and so definitely was it announced that the contractors removed their equipment.

Mr. SMOOT. If this conference report shall be adopted as it is, the House Members will have all the time they want to consider the matter, because the conferees on the part of the Senate have not agreed, I wish the Senate to understand, to these three amendments.

Mr. WHEELER. The trouble with agreeing to the report is that we know perfectly well that if the conference report shall be agreed to as it is, there will be a demand to put it through, and then, under such circumstances, the pressure of the closing days of the Congress will be so great, the demand so strong, and those having items in the appropriation bill will be so anxious to have it put through, that one Member of the House of Representatives will be able to dictate and say just what kind of legislation the bill shall contain with reference to Montana, and the Representatives from Montana will have no voice and nothing to say as to what shall be done.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the only way that the conferees could act in order to secure action here on the conference report. The conference report has got to go back again; it is not a complete report, as I have said.

Mr. WHEELER. It is complete except as to two or three items, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Except as to three items—the two items that have been spoken of here and an item as to placing the superintendent of an Indian agency in Oklahoma under the civil service.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The object, then, is to approve the conference report so far as it has been agreed on?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; so far as it has been agreed on.

Mr. FLETCHER. And have the amendments still in disagreement go back to conference?

Mr. SMOOT. To go back to the House.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask one further question, if the Senator from Montana will permit me. As I understand the situation, the bill carries an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the construction of roads in national parks, without specifying in detail where the money is to be expended.

Mr. WHEELER. That is it exactly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then who decides where the $5,000,000 shall go?

Mr. WHEELER. Apparently, Mr. CRAMTON.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I mean under the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Under the bill, the Secretary of the Interior; but the department say that they have entered into an agreement with the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the House that none of this money shall be spent on the completion of this road.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that in the House hearings?

Mr. WHEELER. That was in the Senate hearings. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] spoke of it; and, as I recall, we also asked the representative who came down from the Park Service.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will call attention to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I remember that the Senator brought up the question when he was before the committee, but I do not remember the details of it now. I will look it up.

Mr. WHEELER. I do hope, therefore, that the Members of the Senate will not place the people of the State of Montana in the position of simply being at the mercy of some one who says, "We are going to enact legislation for Montana regardless of whether or not the people of Montana want it, and regardless of whether or not their Representatives in Congress want it. We will not even do them the courtesy of consulting them about it, nor will we consult the Park Service about it."

There is very little property there that is owned by anybody. There is some property down here at the foot of Lake McDonald, 3 miles from the entrance of the park, that was owned by homesteaders before the park was established, and they have sold some lots down there to various people who have built a few homes down there.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, does this road run through that property?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. The road originally ran from Belton up to the foot of the park. That has been there for some time. Then they built a road around the lake here. There are a few houses here at the foot of the lake, and that road has been there for a long time.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have been listening to the Senator with interest, and what I wanted to ask him was this: Does the unfinished part of that road, 12 miles, run through this property?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no; that unfinished part of 12 miles is away up here in the mountains, probably 40 miles away.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says the department take the position that they will not finish that road, away up in the park, until some people owning property down at the bottom of the park enter into arrangements with the Government for its acquisition?

Mr. WHEELER. That is the position they have taken.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Government needs that property, has it not the right to condemn it?

Mr. WHEELER. Under the law they have not the right to condemn it at the present time. They are asking for the right to go in there and condemn it; but none of this land is needed by the Government at all. There are about six homes up there—not to exceed that number, I believe—at the head of the lake; and then there is the Lewis Hotel, and then there are probably 15 or perhaps 20 houses—I do not recall how many—down at the foot of the lake.

Mr. SMOOT. There are some few houses on the east side.

Mr. WHEELER. Right across here one man by the name of Kelly has a homestead, and he has built a few cabins over there. Then there are these farms up there.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there are some houses here.

Mr. WHEELER. No; there are no houses here. I am very familiar with that country, because I visit there every summer. There are some at the foot of the lake, but there are no houses along here at all. The only place where there are any is up at Lewis's Hotel. There are a few houses along by Lewis's Hotel, where he has sold to people who have been coming there year after year.

Mr. SMOOT. I have photographs of all the houses on the lake, and I thought there were a few on this side. They may have been on that side.

Mr. WHEELER. No; there are a few on this side of the lake, right around this bend. At the very foot of the lake there is a road. The road goes right down to the foot of the lake; and prior to that road being built, if you wanted to get to the head of the lake, you took a boat and went across the lake to get up to where my colleague's home is, and where the rest of these few homes are.

There is not a possibility of those few homes doing the park any injury at all at the present time. These people have acquired that small amount of land; they have built their little homes there; and they have been going there year after year. Now, as I say, the park authorities simply want to take their property away from them, take the Methodist property away from them, take Mr. Lewis's Hotel away from him, take Mr. Kelly's home away from him, where he has been living for, I should judge, at least 20 years, and take these farms along up here; and then they say, "But the Secretary of the Interior can, if he wants to, issue a permit to you."

I do not own any property in the park except a house, so I am not in any wise interested because of owning any land there. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] has had a very beautiful log house there for many years. He owned that home long before the park was established; and, of course, they could go in there and condemn his property, or they could condemn the property of anybody else that they saw fit, and you would constantly be under the threat that they would not renew your permit if it was the way it is at the present time.

I sincerely trust that the Senate will not let the Committee on Appropriations of the House simply dictate to the Senate and tell us just what kind of legislation we have to have for Montana, when they have not even done us the courtesy of consulting with us concerning the matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if my colleague will pardon a further interruption——

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can answer definitely the inquiry addressed to him by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. The answer to his question is found at page 29 of the hearings before the Senate committee.

Mr. Demaray, representing the Park Service, is before the committee:

Senator WALSH. Let me ask you this: If you had the money would you go on with this work?

Referring to the road work.

Mr. DEMARAY. If we had the money and were able to proceed under this acquisition of privately owned lands over there, we would certainly want to go right along with it.

Senator WALSH. Yes. Suppose that that were taken out, what would your attitude then be about the completion of this work?

Senator SMOOT. You mean if the appropriation was made?

Senator WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DEMARAY. If that was done, Senator, I would have to say frankly that as far as we were concerned we would follow the wishes of Congress however they might be expressed.

Senator WALSH. The whole discretion is vested in you now. Congress makes an appropriation for roads and trails in the parks. What would you do with respect to this road?

Mr. DEMARAY. In view of the fact that, as you know, it is the understanding with the House Appropriations Committee that we would not go ahead——

Senator WALSH. Exactly——

Mr. DEMARAY. With this, but we will certainly follow the directions of Congress.

Senator WALSH. Oh, Congress! If Congress tells you to go on, you will go on.

Mr. DEMARAY. Certainly.

Senator WALSH. But if the discretion is left with you, you will be bound by an understanding with the House Committee on Appropriations to suspend construction on this road.

Mr. DEMARAY. I think we would have to be bound.

Mr. WHEELER. That is all I have to say about the matter; but I do appeal to the Senate not to permit us to be placed in this position and not to subject the people who are living out there to this unbelievable hardship.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Montana yields the floor, I want to bring him back to the question before the Senate, and that is the cruiser bill. This has a relation to the cruiser bill, I confess, but I think the Senator has wandered just a little bit away from the real object of the bill.

I should like to inquire of the Senator about these lakes that we see on the relief map. For instance, how long is Lake McDonald?

Mr. WHEELER. Ten miles.

Mr. NORRIS. It is navigable, is it?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Are there boats on it?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Are there boats on these other lakes?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there some commerce there?

Mr. WHEELER. There is some commerce there; yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the only way you have to get about there, is it not?

Mr. WHEELER. That is the only way.

Mr. NORRIS. This makes it apply directly to the cruiser bill. I was very greatly impressed with the eloquent speech made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, and to-day by the likewise eloquent speech made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. In both of these speeches the leaders on that question on both sides of the Chamber laid great emphasis on the fact that we needed these cruisers in time of peace to protect the commerce of the country. Does the Senator, after he has made this speech interesting us in this park, contemplate offering an amendment to the cruiser bill to provide for the building of some cruisers on these lakes to protect the commerce there in time of peace?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, we are very near the Canadian border, and there is a great deal of commerce coming between Canada and the United States; but I do not know whether these lakes are used for that kind of commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose there would be some objection to that, because we have an agreement with Canada not to build fortifications on the boundary line; but if it is necessary to have these cruisers in time of peace—and it seems to be from the arguments of these gentlemen—these cruisers are not so necessary in time of war; but in time of peace we must have them to protect our commerce—why should we not protect the commerce right where the commerce is? Therefore, I can not understand why the Senator is not just as much entitled to have some cruisers on those lakes as we are entitled to protect the commerce in time of peace in South America, for instance.

Mr. WHEELER. Kenter Lake, of course, is very near the border; so is Wetterton Lake.

Mr. SMOOT. We can use the obsolete ones there.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I heard what the Senator from Utah said about putting the obsolete cruisers there. In the first place, it would be difficult to convey those obsolete cruisers, even though they are obsolete, from the places where they are over to these mountain lakes; but there is not any reason why Montana or Glacier National Park should not have the same protection for their commerce in time of peace as anybody else, and they ought not to be required to use obsolete cruisers. They ought to have the newest and the best that there are.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. I just want to remind the Senator from Nebraska that if they had cruisers on those waters they would probably have to be like the gunboats that President Lincoln said could run on a heavy dew.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, if there is any commerce on a heavy dew, I do not see why we should not want to protect it; and certainly we ought to have a cruiser for the purpose.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield the floor.

Mr. BRUCE obtained the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	McKellar	Sackett
Barkley	Fess	McMaster	Schall
Bayard	Fletcher	McNary	Sheppard
Bingham	George	Mayfield	Shipstead
Black	Gillett	Metcalf	Smoot
Brookhart	Glass	Moses	Steiwer
Broussard	Glenn	Neely	Stephens
Bruce	Hale	Norbeck	Swanson
Burton	Harris	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Trammell
Caraway	Hastings	Oddie	Tydings
Copeland	Hayden	Phipps	Vandenberg
Couzens	Heflin	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Johnson	Ransdell	Warren
Dale	Jones	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Dill	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Edge	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.

Mr. McKELLAR. My colleague [Mr. TYSON] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber on account of illness.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] are engaged in a hearing before the Indian Affairs Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 15088. An act to provide for the extension of the boundary limits of the Lafayette National Park in the State of Maine.

SIGNING OF THE MULTILATERAL PEACE TREATY

The VICE PRESIDENT. The President of the United States has authorized me to state that he will sign the multilateral treaty at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning in the East Room of the White House, and will be glad to have present any Senators desirous of attending that ceremony.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the question now before the Senate is approval of the action of the conference committee with respect to the items concerning which they have agreed; that is all. Neither I nor my colleague have any objection to that. We have spoken about the matter of the one amendment because it may come up at a later time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION

Mr. BRUCE. I introduce a bill which I ask may be read by its title.

The bill (S. 5399) to amend the laws relating to the United States Tariff Commission was read twice by its title.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, this is a bill of uncommon importance, in my judgment, and I desire to follow up its introduction with a few explanations. It is entitled "A bill to amend the laws relating to the United States Tariff Commission."

At the present time scenes are being reenacted before the House Committee on Ways and Means which have often been enacted before that committee. In other words, a general tariff revision is under way. The tariff trough, filled with tariff increases, has been placed in position, and the pigs, big and small, are gathered about it and are grunting and squealing and jostling and fighting each other.

Some will secure a much larger measure of tariff favor than they will be entitled to, others will not be quite so fortunate, but very, very few, it is fair to predict, will be less fortunate than they shall deserve to be. And there will be no representative of the great consuming American public, free from political pressure, to see to it that the interests of the public are properly taken care of.

The bill provides, first, that the present United States Tariff Commission shall be continued, and that it shall—be an agency in the legislative branch of the Government primarily to aid the Congress in the exercise of its legislative functions relating to customs duties.

The bill further provides that the commission shall be composed of 12 commissioners appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and that any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause.

It further provides that—

Not more than six commissioners shall be members of the same political party, and that in making the appointments members of different major political parties shall be alternately appointed as nearly as may be practicable.

It further provides that—

No individual shall be eligible for appointment to the commission who at any time within the preceding five years has been engaged in any business or employed in connection with any business the interests of which have been or are likely to be represented in proceedings before the commission.

It further provides that—

No commissioner shall actively engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as a commissioner.

It further provides that the terms of the commissioners in office at the time of the passage of the bill shall not be affected by the provisions of the bill, except that any such commissioner may be removed for the causes and in the manner specified in the bill.

Then, after making special provision for the length of tenure of the first members of the commission, the bill provides that the commissioners shall serve for 12 years.

The bill further provides that the commission shall annually select from its members a chairman and a vice chairman who shall not be members of the same political party, and that—such selection shall be made as nearly as may be practicable on the basis of seniority in service and of rotation in office.

It further provides:

The commission shall from time to time divide itself into divisions of one or more members and assign commissioners thereto and in case of a division of more than one member designate the chief thereof.

It further provides that—

If a division as a result of a vacancy or the absence or inability of a member assigned thereto to serve thereon is composed of less than the number of members designated for the division, the commission may assign other members to the division.

Then it is provided that a division shall hear and determine any matter assigned to it by the commission, but that the determination of the division may be reviewed by the commission within such time as the commission may by rule specify.

Then it is further provided that—

In any such review no additional opportunity for hearing need be had—

And that—any determination of a division which is not reviewed by the commission within the time so specified shall have the same force as if made by the commission—shall be considered as a determination of the commission.

And—

It is further provided as follows:

In accordance with the rules of the commission each division shall, as to any matter assigned to it, have all the jurisdiction and power conferred by law upon the commission and be subject to the same duties and obligations as the commission.

I pause at this point to say that the present number of the Tariff Commission is doubled and that those arrangements for divisions of the commission are inserted in the bill because of the fact that experience has shown that much unavoidable delay in reaching decisions has attended the deliberations of the present Tariff Commission.

The bill further provides that each commissioner shall receive a salary at the rate of $12,000 a year, and then comes this most significant feature of the bill:

There shall be an office in the legislative branch of the Government to be known as the office of the public relations counsel of the United States Tariff Commission. The office shall be in charge of a counsel to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The counsel shall be appointed for a term of 12 years and shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. No individual shall be appointed as counsel who has been engaged in any business or employed in connection with any business the interests of which have been or are likely to be represented in proceedings before the commission. The counsel shall not actively engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as counsel.

That I regard as one of the most important features of the bill. The idea of having a people's counsel, if I may use that phrase, attached to the Tariff Commission is that whenever an application is made to the commission for an increase of duty or the like there should be some official on hand to represent especially the welfare of the general American public.

The creation of such an official by the bill is borrowed from the provisions of the public service commission law of the State of Maryland. By that law provision is made for the appointment of a people's counsel, whose duty it is, whenever there is an application for an increase in the rates of any public utility, to see that the interests of the public are properly protected.

The language of the bill in this connection is as follows:

It shall be the duty of the counsel to appear in the interest of the consuming public in any proceeding or investigation before the commission, and to conduct such independent investigation of matters relative to the tariff laws of the United States as he may deem necessary to enable him properly to represent the consuming public in any proceeding before the commission.

Then the bill further provides:

The counsel is authorized to appoint such assistant counsel and experts, and, subject to the civil service laws, such clerks and other employees as may be necessary for the execution of the duties vested in him, and may fix the salary of any such assistant counsel, experts, clerk, or other employee, subject to the classification act of 1923, as amended. The counsel may make such expenditures (including expenditures for rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, law books, periodicals, and books of reference, and for printing and binding) as may be necessary for the execution of the duties vested in him. The principal office of the counsel shall be in the District of Columbia, but he may, personally or through such agents as he may designate, prosecute any investigation or do any act necessary to the performance of his duties in any part of the United States or in any foreign country.

Then follows a section of the bill which defines the powers with which the reorganized commission contemplated by the bill shall be clothed. This section is section 4 (a), and reads as follows:

The United States Tariff Commission shall from time to time, upon application of any interested party or upon its own motion, determine upon, for recommendation to the Congress, changes in the laws prescribing custom duties. Any such change shall be in one or more of the following forms: A change in the rate of duty, including the transfer of any article from the dutiable list to the free list or from the free list to the dutiable list; a change in the form of duty; a change in classification; or a change of the basis of valuation to the American selling price (as defined in section 402 (f) of the tariff act of 1922) of any similar competitive article manufactured or produced in the United States. A statement of any change so determined upon by the commission shall thereupon be transmitted to both Houses of Congress, or if the Congress or either House thereof is not in session, then to the Secretary of the Senate and/or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the case may require. The statement shall be accompanied by a report of the commission with respect to the change, together with any minority report that may be made by any member of the commission. Any such change so recommended to the Congress shall have the force and effect of law if the change is approved, with or without modification, by act of Congress. In such event the change—or, if modified, then the change as so modified—shall take effect upon such date as may be provided by the act of Congress approving the change. If so approved, the change shall apply with respect to articles imported from any foreign country into the United States or its possessions, except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, the islands of Guam and Tutuila, on and after the date the change takes effect under this section.

Then it is further provided, as follows:

No change in the laws prescribing customs duties shall be recommended to the Congress under this section unless the determination is reached after an investigation by the commission, during the course of which the commission shall have held hearings and given reasonable public notice of such hearings and reasonable opportunity to the parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard. The commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable rules of procedure as may be necessary to execute its functions under this section.

The bill then proceeds to repeal the flexible clause of the present tariff act and to exclude the President entirely from the function of tariff making. Then follow several sections assembled under the head Unfair Practices in Import Trade, which I do not deem of sufficient importance to be called in detail at the present time to the attention of the Senate.

The bill is an enlargement of the recommendation made a few months ago to the Senate by the special tariff investigating committee appointed by the Vice President, of which I happened to be a member. The other members of the commission were former Senator Wadsworth, of the State of New York, whose connection with the committee unhapplly came to an end before the committee rendered its report; the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Of course, I have no expectation that any final action will be taken with reference to the bill at the present short session of Congress, but I do trust that at the next session of Congress, or some succeeding session of Congress, its merits will be thoroughly considered by Congress, and that ultimately it will become one of the laws of the land.

Personally, as to nothing could I be more completely satisfied than that at some time in the future tariff reform in this country will move along the grooves of this bill. The advantages of such a bill, if it could only be enacted, are almost too manifest to be closely considered. It tends, of course, to substitute economic and business methods of tariff administration for political tariff administration. It tends to break up the practice of exchanging tariff favors for campaign or other political services by corporations or individuals. It secures a patient, painstaking, and exhaustive hearing for every manufacturer or industrialist in the country who comes to Congress for the measure of relief to which he believes himself to be justly entitled.

With nothing have I been more struck in my relations to the present Tariff Commission than the thoroughness, whatever may be the criticism to which it is justly subject in other respects, with which it does its work. With its staff of experts it goes most deeply and efficiently into every tariff problem that is laid before it.

It is, of course, almost impossible for a committee of Congress, no matter how conscientious or industrious it may be, to give to any tariff question the same degree of searching inquiry that it is possible for a tariff commission such as I have in mind to give to it. Above all, under the scheme of the bill, whenever there is an application made to the Tariff Commission for an increase of duty, there will be an official whose peculiar duty it will be to safeguard the interests and welfare of the general American public. For that purpose he is empowered by the bill as people's counsel, so to speak, to select an assistant and to surround himself with a staff of experts and to ask for and receive all facilities of every sort that may be necessary to enable him to discharge his duties faithfully and effectively.

In conclusion, let me say, in general terms, that what I am seeking is the creation of a tariff commission that would occupy a position of aloofness and dignity not unlike that of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and would in time, like that body, acquire a degree of prestige that would create a strong presumption in favor of the soundness of its conclusions in the mind of Congress.

I now ask that the bill may be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROHIBITION ANNIVERSARY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, nine years ago to-day national prohibition in the United States began.

Since its initial day, January 16, 1920, the day the eighteenth amendment went into effect, five Congresses have been elected.

Each of these Congresses has had a larger number of Senators and Representatives favorable to prohibition than the preceding one.

Inasmuch as a third of the Senate and all the House are chosen every two years it will be seen that since 1920 every seat in the Senate has been subjected to the test of at least one election, two-thirds of its seats having been voted on twice, while the entire membership of the House has faced the polls five times.

In the election of 1920 prohibition developed a gain over its strength in the existing Congress which had been elected in 1918 and which had passed the Volstead Act, the measure providing the enforcement machinery for the eighteenth amendment.

The election of 1922 brought about a further increase in the prohibition ranks in Congress.

Similar results followed the elections of 1924, 1926, and 1928.

It is safe to say that in the Congress elected in 1928 and which is soon to come into existence, prohibition will have such tremendous majorities in both House and Senate as to make any effort to repeal or to liberalize the eighteenth amendment or the Volstead Act rash beyond reason and the culmination of absurdity.

What more convincing indication could be had of the fact that the American people desire the continuance of nation-wide prohibition than the record of the personnel of the five Congresses following its advent?

The struggle with beverage alcohol is one of the oldest and most familiar features of American history.

In 1622, only 15 years after the first landing at Jamestown and but 2 years after the Pilgrims disembarked at Plymouth Rock, the council of the London Co. advised Sir Francis Wyatt, Governor of Virginia, to restrain the evil of drinking to excess, saying, "The cry whereof can not but have gone to heaven."

In 1629 the Massachusetts Bay Co. suggested to Governor Endicott that steps be taken to shield the Indians from the "excessive use or, rather, the abuse of strong waters."

Throughout the Colonies restrictions were imposed on the liquor trade with the impossible objective of keeping it within orderly channels. Perhaps the earliest form of prohibition was found in colonial laws forbidding the sale of intoxicants to apprentices, servants, and negroes, and the inborn lawlessness of the traffic obtained perhaps its earliest expression in the illegal liquor joints, or speakeasies, which were operating in defiance of these laws, a form of bootlegging more than 200 years older than national prohibition. And yet we are told that the bootlegger is a product of modern prohibition.

Smuggling of liquors to avoid revenue and customs laws also began at an early date among the Colonies.

In 1658 Maryland deprived freeholders of the right to vote when convicted of drunkenness for a third time, a forerunner of the Baumes law with violators affording a pristine example of the latter-day repeater.

So disastrous was the liquor habit among the Indians, due to introduction of intoxicants by whites bent upon profit, that the Allegheny Indians in 1738 took steps preventing the use of such beverages among themselves.

In 1754 a Creek Indian delivered an eloquent and impressive attack on the traffic in intoxicants. He condemned a system which coined its profits from the debauchery of human beings and indicated the degradation and shame that would follow such a course. This article was published in London in 1754 and was entitled "Speech of a Creek Indian Against the Immoderate Use of Spiritous Liquors." It was much more, however, than a denunciation of immoderate use. I pause here to assert that the pursuit of monetary gain by the liquor trade in the United States more than a hundred years later led to its expansion on such a scale that it became a colossal menace to life and health and happiness, to the integrity of government and law, and forced its own destruction as a legally recognized institution in this country.

In 1686 Increase Mather and John Moody delivered sermons at the execution of James Morgan, who had committed murder while under the sway of strong drink, and both took occasion to denounce the destructive effect of the drink habit on the youth of that time. They went so far as to say that it was "weakening the fiber of the younger generation." Those who describe drinking by the young as a creation of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act are commended to a study of these statements of nearly 250 years ago.

Toward the end of the seventeenth century Cotton Mather, taking up the temperance work of his father, remarked that excessive drinking was about to "drown Christianity."

Then came Benjamin Wadsworth and Samuel Danforth, preaching and writing against intemperance; and in 1754 a publication by the Hartford Courant arraigning the drink evil, obtaining wide currency, and having for its subject the following:

Tryal of Sir Richard Rum. At a court held at Punch Hall in the colony of Bacchus.

Among the temperance leaders of the eighteenth century in the American Colonies there was none more earnest, more untiring, or more effective than Thomas Chalkley. Vividly did he picture the terrors of drunkenness and zealously did he preach in order to save the generations about him from temptation or to reclaim them from indulgence.

No man of that age viewed with more concern the rapid rise of public houses where liquors were retailed than Benjamin Franklin. In 1744 a Philadelphia grand jury, of which he was foreman, recommended that the number of these establishments be restricted, claiming that they were responsible—for the increased number of the poor, the common use of profane language in the streets, and the growing indifference to God and religion.

The first settlement in Georgia was established in 1733; and in 1735 the trustees prohibited the liquor traffic throughout the Colony. This was the first instance of prohibition in the Western Hemisphere—an instance occurring nearly 200 years ago. The rum runner immediately appeared; rum runner, a term supposed by many to apply only to the present prohibition era.

The rum runner and the bootlegger proved to be too strong for the little colony. Commercial consideration also prevailed and the House of Commons at London about 1749 ordered the repeal of the prohibition decree. How different the results following nation-wide prohibition in the United States nearly two centuries afterward! The rum runner and the bootlegger have hammered in vain against the foundations of the greatest moral movement of the ages and national prohibition in America gathers strength and prestige with the years.

By this time the liquor habit, despite all the efforts of temperance workers and teachers and enthusiasts to arrest it, had secured an almost universal hold on American colonial life. Intemperance became so general that the necessity for continued action against it was alarmingly apparent. Jonathan Edwards and John Woolman joined the ranks of those who pleaded for temperance, but the most active crusader was Anthony Benezet, who in 1774 issued a printed attack on ardent spirits, in which he attempted to show that the ravages of drink were comparable to the horrors and losses of war.

In 1778 Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, physician general of the Middle Department of the Continental Army, issued a pamphlet entitled "Directions for Preserving the Health of Soldiers." In that treatise he combated the belief then prevalent that distilled spirits strengthened the body for labor and protected it against fatigue and heat and cold. He took the position that camp diseases were encouraged and not repressed by the use of such spirits. He recommended lighter beverages, such as beer and ale. While this publication had no effect on army policy, it marked the beginning of a more intensive and scientific study of the effect of alcohol on the human body.

In 1784 Doctor Rush published another treatise called "An Inquiry Into the Effects of Spirituous Liquors on the Human Body and Mind." Reasoning from cases within his own experience he held that distilled spirits long used, even in moderate quantities, would induce serious mental, nervous, and physical complications. Again he commended a lighter form of drink to take the place of ardent spirits. This pamphlet won general and favorable notice throughout the country and was used for many years as a reference manual by promoters of temperance.

A group of business men in 1789 pledged themselves to carry on their respective enterprises without furnishing the workers distilled spirits, but to serve them such drinks as beer and cider instead. This is said to be the first instance of organized abstinence from ardent spirits in America. A similar pledge was circulated in Virginia in 1800 and received the signatures of many farmers. During the last decade of the eighteenth century a number of teachers in various colleges joined the clergy in denouncing intemperance and the newspapers to an increasing extent began to publish articles favorable to temperance.

In 1790 the College of Physicians of Philadelphia petitioned Congress for heavy duties on distilled spirits as a method of aiding temperance, stating that—the habitual use of distilled spirits in any case whatever is wholly unnecessary; that they neither fortify the body against the morbid effects of heat or cold, nor render labor more easy or productive; and that there are many articles of diet and drink which are not only safe and perfectly salutary, but preferable to distilled spirits, for the abovementioned purposes.

Thus the physician joined the preacher, the teacher, and the student in combating the widespread evil of intemperance; and thus at the beginning of our present system of government about 140 years ago the people of the United States were being taught that a real liquor question, involving morals, health, prosperity, and progress, all the fundamentals of free institutions, confronted them.

Doctor Rush did not confine himself to the composition of treatises. He overlooked no effort to carry his teachings to every part of the country. In spreading his doctrine he was capably assisted by Jeremy Belknap in New England and Dr. David Ramsay in the South.

A copy of Doctor Rush's famous essay of 1784 came to the notice of Dr. B. J. Clark, a physician of the town of Moreau, in Saratoga County, N. Y. So impressed was Doctor Clark that, with his pastor, Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong, he organized, on April 30, 1808, the Temperance Society of Moreau and Northumberland. Its membership, drawn from the citizens of Moreau and the near-by town of Northumberland, pledged itself for one year to use no rum, gin, whisky, wine, or distilled spirits, or composition of the same, except by advice of a physician or in case of actual disease. Each member agreed to do what he could to diminish the use of liquor among laborers.

This, the first temperance society in the United States, set the pattern for subsequent societies, and its formation has been said to mark the birth of the temporance reformation. The members of this pioneer body came soon to understand that the effect of intoxicants on the efficiency of labor was one of the most urgent reasons for temperance.

On this society a writer of note makes the following comment:

This was no iron-clad pledge, but in spite of its manifest incompleteness it marked the signers as founders of a new enterprise. Living in a typical community which regarded ardent spirits as a preventive of disease, which could not build a house, cut down a field of grain, hold a husking, logrolling, quilting, christening, wedding, or funeral without some assistance from alcohol, the society's charter members must have felt considerable misgiving about their experiment. They had agreed, however, to test the new principles for a period of one year. When the first annual meeting was held in conformity with the constitutional provision the spirit of wonder at the year's success was so pervading that the gathering became an experience meeting of the revival type. Everyone was eager to give testimony.

A copy of Doctor Rush's essay came into the hands of Lyman Beecher, who, under its inspiration delivered a series of notable sermons on the evils of intemperance, from 1806 to 1809. Later, on his initiative, a society was formed in Connecticut for law enforcement, temperance, and moral reform. A similar organization was launched in Massachusetts, and others followed in these and many other States. Despite all those efforts intemperance continued to flourish with all its attendant misery and crime. The moral forces of the country, led by the clergy, redoubled their energies against the liquor evil. Lyman Beecher, in 1825, restated his position and announced that total abstinence from ardent spirits was the only basis on which intemperance could be successfully fought.

Then followed the organization of the American Society for the Promotion of Temperance in 1826. Its vital point was the advocacy of total abstinence from distilled spirits as a beverage. In six years the membership numbered 500,000, with 4,000 local units. New societies not in affiliation with the American Society were organized in various sections, while many of the older temperance organizations were still in existence or had been revived under the impulse of the new movement.

The years following 1826 were filled with missionary activities on the part of temperance crusaders in every part of the country, and an abiding sense of the danger of the liquor habit and of liquor was permanently planted in the hearts of millions. In fact, millions had been induced to sign the pledge for entire abstinence from distilled liquor as a beverage.

In order to unify the temperance movement a national convention to be composed of delegates from all existing organizations was held on the suggestion of the American Society in Independence Hall at Philadelphia in 1833. More than 400 delegates representing organizations in 21 States were present. A minority moved the inclusion of fermented liquors in the pledge but was voted down, the majority favoring the retention of the pledge of "total abstinence from the use of ardent spirits." A resolution was adopted to the effect that the traffic in distilled spirits was morally wrong and worthy of the severest condemnation. The convention formed a new national organization to be known as the United States Temperance Union, consisting of the officers of the American Society, the officers of the 23 State societies, and representatives of all local societies. An executive committee elected by the members was authorized to conduct the work of the union and to act as final authority in everything relating to temperance propaganda.

In 1833 was also organized the American Congressional Temperance Society at Washington to oppose "the use of ardent spirit and the traffic in it by example and by kind moral influence." Following the lead of Congress, temperance societies in many State legislatures were established within the succeeding two years. The cause of temperance seemed now to make greater headway than ever before. In 1834 the State societies recorded more than 5,000 local groups with a membership of probably a million. In manufacturing establishments, on railroads, farms, and in college and society spheres the custom of heavy drinking seemed to be decreasing. Many distilleries and retail liquor establishments ceased to operate. Physicians, college presidents, and college students participated in the temperance movement to a larger degree than had ever been the case in the past.

In 1836 the executive committee of the United States Temperance Union called a convention of temperance societies in the United States and Canada to be held in August of that year at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Three hundred and forty-eight delegates from 19 States and from upper and lower Canada attended. The union was enlarged so as to include Canada and any other part of North America, and the name was changed to the American Temperance Union. The official personnel was completely changed. Again an effort was made to reword the pledge so that it would call for "total abstinence from all that can intoxicate," and this time the effort was successful. Thus the old distinction between distilled spirits and all milder forms of intoxicating beverages was no longer preserved. All were placed under the ban and included in the pledge. Thus the question of light wines and beer as substitutes for hard liquor was fought out by the adversaries of intoxicating drink after decades of experience nearly 100 years ago and decided in the negative. Sharp division over this action continued for many years, but it was never reversed. Furthermore, another source of controversy soon developed over a new phase of the movement against beverage liquor. An insistent demand developed for legislative action against the traffic itself. It was argued that unless the traffic should be prohibited by law all the gains made in behalf of temperance would be lost. It was claimed that public opinion was now sufficiently crystallized against the traffic to make necessary and desirable the translation of that opinion into law. Constant violations of the license laws were causing grog shops of low character to multiply in number and in victims.

In 1840 the Washingtonian revival, sponsored by men who had personally experienced the agony and demoralization of drunkenness, set in motion the most effective current of feeling against intoxicants the country had yet experienced. These men formed at Baltimore in that year the Washington Temperance Society, which rapidly enlisted others of their type throughout the country, and soon the masses were aflame with a reborn interest and zeal in the subject of temperance and the reclamation of those who had succumbed to the liquor habit. Most notable among the speakers of this period were Hawkins and Gough, who swayed audience after audience with the story of their salvation from drunkard's lives and drunkard's graves and with appeals for signatures to the pledge for total abstinence.

Thenceforward the antiliquor forces included in their program legislative action against all intoxicants both distilled and fermented, both of high and low alcoholic content. There resulted numerous local option statutes and the enactment on June 2, 1851, of the first state-wide prohibition law in our history by the Commonwealth of Maine—a law that remains in operation at this hour. It was secured mainly through the remarkable leadership of Neal Dow, who had devoted his life to temperance work.

So we are able to trace from earliest colonial times to the present the continuous development of the movement against intoxicants from a protest against excessive drinking to an attack on distilled liquor, then to an onslaught on all liquor and then to the added objective of legislative prohibition, the movement now resting on a triple basis of education, suasion, and legislation. The movement was destined to undergo many reverses until local and state-wide prohibitory statutes were merged into nation-wide constitutional prohibition in 1920.

New bodies were formed after the Civil War to press for prohibition in precinct, county, State, and Nation—to teach it in school and home, to proclaim it in pulpit and in the secular forum—bodies far more militant than their predecessors.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, founded in 1874, has become one of the principal factors in the advancement of prohibition and in the maintenance of its effectiveness.

The Anti-Saloon League, organized in 1893, has exercised a vigilance and a power for the cause of prohibition probably never before equalled by any other group engaged in the promotion of reform.

To-day 34 welfare and temperance organizations of efficient personnel and signal achievement have united in a federated conference to supervise the continued progress of prohibition.

It is evident, Mr. President, that national prohibition has been in the making for nearly 300 years—that no other subject has been more constantly before the American people with every phase and possibility more widely discussed through decades and centuries than the proper handling of beverage alcohol. The crusade for prohibition sends its roots into the depths of the past. Indeed, they find their way to Bethlehem and Sinai.

National prohibition is an expression of the moral sentiment of the American people, a sentiment inseparable from the progressive civilization of America.

It is forever anchored in the heart and purpose of Almighty God.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I have listened with the greatest pleasure to the interesting historical review by the Senator from Texas. But my attention has been called to the fact that in that review he makes no mention of the large number of States which, on the eve of the Civil War, adopted prohibition, only to abandon it a little later on, when they experienced the abuses and evils which, as I see it, always flow from prohibition systems. The Senator is aware of the fact that some eight States, if not more, adopted prohibition at that time and afterwards, with the exception of Maine, abandoned it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I covered that in a general way by saying that the movement was destined to undergo many reverses after the victory in Maine before national prohibition was finally attained.

Mr. BRUCE. If the Senator referred to it, I am sure that he did it in a very gingerly fashion.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I say I covered that phase as I have indicated. My object this evening has been to point out the different stages in the evolution of prohibition. The last stage was prohibition by law, and that was first definitely reached when Maine became a state-wide prohibition State. From that time until 1920 the phase of prohibition by law was especially prominent, perhaps dominant. Within that period some States went dry and then returned to a wet status, many precincts and counties went dry and then went wet again, numbers repeating this process several times, but the last phase was the legislative phase. Having emphasized that point, I did not deem it necessary to go into details. At some later time I hope to go into the history of the legislative phase at greater length.

Mr. BRUCE. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the Senator's speech.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE STATE AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JONES. I submit the conference report on the State, Justice, Labor, and Commerce appropriation bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The clerk will read the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15569) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$958,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,712,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES. I will state that the Senate added $68,000 to the bill as it passed the House. The conferees have reached unanimous agreement, and the House conferees conceded $48,000 of the increase put on in the Senate. One of the increases made by the Senate and not agreed to was $10,000 increase in the amount for the transportation of clerks, and so on, in the Diplomatic Service. The House took the position that the amount that was allowed for that, which was very largely increased over the amount appropriated before, was sufficient. The Senate increased the amount for the Air Service above the Budget estimate by $32,640. The House conferees agreed to an increase of $23,000. They have accepted all the other amendments put on the bill by the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the agreement complete?

Mr. JONES. The agreement is complete. I move that the report be agreed to.

The report was agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF CRUISERS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 17, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 16, 1929

REGISTER OF THE TREASURY

Edward E. Jones, of Harford, Pa., to be Register of the Treasury in place of Walter O. Woods.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Warren N. Cuddy, of Alaska, to be United States attorney, district of Alaska, Division No. 3. (Mr. Cuddy is now serving under appointment by the court.)

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 16, 1929

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE

Walter Spencer to be register of land office, Denver, Colo.

POSTMASTERS

CALIFORNIA

Margaret A. Robinson, Kelseyville.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, January 16, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We would meditate, merciful Father, upon Thy condescending attitude toward us. We feel assuredly that Thou dost not leave us out. We may know joyfully that we are encompassed and enfolded within the embracing reach of eternal goodness, the infinite compassion and the unmeasured love of a triumphant God. May our Christian faith have a high moment and rise to a wonderful certainty. We praise Thee for the breadth, the length, and for the depth and the height of Thy all-inclusive mercy. By the might of Thy name and in the strength of Thy truth may we always rejoice in Thy courts. Enable us to meet the day with new zeal and admiration whose wisdom shall be more than our old fondness dreamed. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12449) entitled "An act to define the terms 'child' and 'children' as used in the acts of May 18, 1920, and June 10, 1922," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, desiring to ascertain the exact benefits brought to the individual citizen of the United States of America through the passage of the eighteenth amendment, I hereby challenge any accredited social organization to produce between now and the close of this Congress a single individual, who was a heavy drinker before prohibition and who now is a total abstainer; or to produce a single family that is now enjoying a fair degree of prosperity that before prohibition was denied the necessities of life because of the excessive indulgence in alcoholic liquors on the part of some member of that family.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I will.

Mr. SNELL. I can present some families who will comply with the gentleman's request.

Mr. CLARKE. And I have some exhibits I would like to put in the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Me too!

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. There are millions of them, boy!

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I think the answer may be found when they are presented.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WASON, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 16301) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, which was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CULLEN reserved all points of order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. CHASE, at the request of Mr. KENDALL, was given leave of absence indefinitely on account of illness.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the committees, and when the Committee on the Public Lands was called—

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill 3162, an act to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 13]

Connolly, Pa.	Jenkins	Palmisano
Curry	Kent	Patterson

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-two Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

REFERENCE OF H. R. 9770

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to the bill (H. R. 9770) authorizing the construction of a road in the Umpqua National Forest between Steamboat Bridge and Black Camas, in Douglas County, Oreg., which is the second bill that I had expected to call up to-day. On examination of this bill I am convinced that it should have been referred to the Committee on Roads, and I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Public Lands Committee upon the bill may be vacated and set aside and that the bill may be rereferred to the Committee on Roads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that the report on the bill H. R. 9770 be vacated and that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Roads. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the Committee on Roads requesting that the bill be referred to it?

Mr. COLTON. The chairman of that committee is here, and I shall ask him to answer that question.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rose a few moments ago to ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes, with the hope of securing later just what the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands has now asked unanimous consent to have done. This bill is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Roads, and should have been considered by that committee originally, but was considered, however, by the Committee on the Public Lands. It should be rereferred to the Committee on Roads.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, of course it is a little bit unusual after a bill has been reported and put on the calendar to change the jurisdiction. It has the tendency to delay the consideration of the bill. I do not know what the bill is about.

Mr. COLTON. This bill was reported out before the present chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands occupied that position. It was reported out last spring. This bill authorizes an appropriation to build a road across certain public lands, particularly across a tract of land in a forest reservation in the State of Oregon.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I think this will establish a rather unique precedent in the history of the House. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] will, I think, agree with that. It is not in order to make a motion to rerefer a bill after a report on it by a committee has been filed; that is, after such report has been filed an objection would be sustained to a request for reference to another committee. Now, here is a bill wrongfully referred under the rule. Every Member of the House is presumed to have had knowledge of the record and therefore of the wrongful reference, and it was the duty of any Member who desired to have the reference changed to make such a request before the committee having the bill in charge had made a report.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. It would be in order at the conclusion of the reading of the bill, would it not, to make a motion to commit it to the Committee on Roads?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A motion to recommit would then be in order.

Mr. RANKIN. And it could be committed to the Committee on Roads instead of recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is true.

Mr. CRAMTON. While it is true that a point of order would not now lie because of the wrongful reference, I do not understand that it is not possible and entirely proper and, when committees have agreed upon it, desirable that a motion be made for its rereference. Certainly a rereference by unanimous consent would not establish any dangerous precedent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Except in this way: Persons interested in the proposed legislation might be aware of the original reference of a bill to a committee and also of the favorable report of that committee and therefore presumably believe it sure of favorable action in the House. They have gone away from Washington, we will say. The bill is ready to be acted upon, but instead it is referred to another committee. The people interested in the bill having departed to their respective homes, its new reference might make a considerable difference. But I shall not object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, a presumption that the House will act favorably because of a favorable committee report is rather a violent presumption, particularly in the case of a bill which has been adversely reported upon, as I understand it, by one department, if not two.

Mr. DYER. There was no testimony submitted at the hearing before the Committee on the Public Lands, so that no witnesses are involved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the distinguished chairmen of these two committees if by this reference we are to understand that in the future all the bills pertaining to roads, trails, and the construction of the same in forest reserves are to go to the Committee on Roads?

Mr. DOWELL. Under the rule all road bills go to that committee, just the same as all immigration matters go before the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not always. Naturalization affairs I find are sometimes reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, when the subject matter has referred to Indians; the Committee on Insular Affairs has reported out and passed a bill relating to citizenship in the Virgin Islands. To date have not all bills that pertain to roads and trails in forest reserves come from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. DOWELL. No.

Mr. COLTON. I think not. I think the Committee on Roads, of which I happen to be a member, has reported several bills for the construction of roads in forest reserves.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What about roads in national parks?

Mr. COLTON. They come from the Public Lands Committee, because that committee has jurisdiction of national parks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And who has jurisdiction over forest reserves?

Mr. COLTON. Strictly speaking, the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is exactly like the matters pertaining to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman. They diverge a little bit and come up from various committees. I shall be glad to see more uniformity. If this is to be a precedent, well and good, then we can look for action on roads of every kind in the public domain, which is a large part of the western part of the United States, amounting to more than 50 per cent of the area of many Western States, from the Committee on Roads. Road matters on Indian reservations, parks, and the Federal domain will come from the Committee on Roads, I take it.

Mr. COLTON. No; I would not want to go as far as that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But the gentleman here waives and agrees and has stated that this clearly belongs to the Roads Committee, and that this committee will have the right to all that character of road construction where Federal money is expended.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. This bill is a straight bill and provides an appropriation for building a certain road. It has no relation to any other subject, and the Committee on Roads has jurisdiction.

Mr. COLTON. And would not establish a precedent as to other bills, particularly in areas where the Public Lands Committee has exclusive jurisdiction?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly it would establish a precedent so far as other bills are concerned. Will the gentleman say whether any previous appropriation of Federal money has been spent on this road?

Mr. DOWELL. No; I know nothing about the bill. It has not been before the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to object, although I think it is pretty well settled that a motion to do this would not be in order. Of course, it can be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entirely agrees with the gentleman.

Mr. KORELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object in order to ask a question, and that is whether or not this bill does not contemplate important work of a character other than road building?

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand H. R. 9770 contemplates only road building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BUSBY. For a parliamentary inquiry. On April 2 last year the bill H. R. 8913 was reported favorably to the House from the Committee on Patents. It was placed upon the Consent Calendar on two occasions and stricken from the calendar on objections made. The inquiry I want to now propose is whether or not the bill being on the House Calendar at the present time the Patent Committee has any authority to proceed with additional hearings on that bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the committee could not hold hearings unless the bill was rereferred to the committee for that purpose.

REAPPORTIONMENT

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks made last Friday upon the reapportionment bill and also to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, during the consideration of the Fenn reapportionment bill reference was frequently made to the several methods of apportioning Representatives among the several States according to their respective populations. The Fenn bill provides for the use of the method known as major fractions. Other methods have been suggested, namely, the method of equal proportions, the method of rejected fractions, and the method of minimum range, each of which has its champions. Quite a number of statisticians and economists of nation-wide reputation appeared before the Census Committee, each explaining in detail his favorite plan, showing its advantages and pointing out the weaknesses and disadvantages of the other methods. Very much to my surprise I found a striking disagreement between statisticians and economists who had devoted many years of diligent study to this question in an endeavor to solve the problem and determine the best, fairest, most equitable, and most satisfactory method. Each plan has been viciously assailed by those who favored other methods, and few men can read the hearings and reconcile the conflicting arguments and reach a definite and satisfactory conclusion entirely in favor of one method or entirely opposed to any other method. In fact, each method has much merit, and I am convinced that neither formula is 100 per cent perfect.

In addition to the methods I have mentioned there are the plans known as the method of least errors and the method of alternate ratios. Much misunderstanding exists both in and out of Congress as to the nature of these formulas and as to how they operate when used in an effort to apportion Representatives among the several States.

I have been requested by quite a number of my colleagues and by not a few newspaper correspondents to explain briefly these various formulas. This I am willing to do in my poor way, not in detail but in general terms. I have been unable to find any complete and satisfying definition of these several formulas, but much has been written and spoken in reference to the manner in which they operate. I have not the time and perhaps not the ability to formulate a complete, satisfactory, or scientific definition of these several formulas, but I will state briefly the principle and purpose on which each is founded, their operation, and the results that flow from the several systems.

I may add that every one of these methods is complicated and each involves somewhat extensive mathematical computations. Only highly cultivated mathematical minds can comprehend the working rules, arithmetic mean, and sliding divisor used in the major-fractions method, or the multiplier, process squaring, taking reciprocals, and square roots involved in the equal proportions formula.

I will now briefly define or rather describe the operation of and principle underlying each of these methods.

REJECTED FRACTIONS

Under this formula all fractions are rejected. If, for instance, the apportionment of Representatives among the States is 1 for 250,000 population, a State with a population of 2,749,000 people would be assigned 10 Representatives, or 1 for each complete bloc of 250,000, but would not get any additional Representative for its fraction of 249,000. This method was used in all apportionments prior to 1840. Thomas Jefferson was a strong advocate of this plan and his brief and argument very strongly supported his contention that under the provisions of the Constitution fractions could not be considered in apportioning representation among the States. In other words, it was his contention that the Constitution did not contemplate assigning an additional Representative to a State for any number of people short of the number adopted as the basis of apportionment and that all fractions, whether major or minor, should be disregarded.

All of our trouble and contention about formulas and methods of apportioning representation could and would have been avoided if we had steadfastly adhered to the Jeffersonian constitutional method. This bitter controversy between economists and statisticians and this uncertainty as to the best method of apportioning representation would have been avoided if Webster and others had not endeavored to add to the constitutional provisions by taking fractional groups into consideration in making apportionments.

EQUAL PROPORTIONS

This is a method by which the relative or percentage differences in either the number of inhabitants per Representative or the number of Representatives per inhabitants are made as small as possible. The method of equal proportions, devised by Dr. Edward V. Huntington, of Harvard University, has never been used in apportioning representation.

Dr. Joseph A. Hill, Assistant Director of the Census Bureau, described the process followed in applying the equal-proportions method as follows:

(1) In making an apportionment by the method of equal proportions the first step is to assign one Representative to each State, thus fulfilling the requirement of the Constitution that each State shall have at least one Representative. This disposes of 48 Representatives.

(2) The next step is to divide the population of each State by the following quantities in succession: $\sqrt{1\times2}$, $\sqrt{2\times3}$, $\sqrt{3\times4}$, etc.

(3) The quotients thereby obtained are arranged in order of size, beginning with the largest, to form what is called a priority list, which indicates the order in which Representatives in excess of 48 shall be given out to the States. Representatives are then assigned in that order until the required number has been given out.

The above process produces a result in which the necessary deviations from exactness are as small as possible when measured by the relative or percentage difference in either the ratio of population to Representatives or the ratio of Representatives to population.

Prof. E. V. Huntington, of Harvard University, who originated the method of equal proportions, describes his system—as the only method which insures that (1) the ratio of population to Representatives, and (2) the ratio of Representatives to population, shall be as nearly uniform as possible among the several States.

On account of fractions or remainders in the exact quotas a mathematically exact apportionment according to population is impossible. That being the case the aim should be to make an apportionment in which the necessary deviations from a mathematically exact apportionment shall be as small as possible.

It is evident, then, that the essential difference in the two methods is in the mode or method of measuring deviations or divergencies from exactness, the method of equal proportions using as a measure the relative or percentage difference in either of the ratios while the method of major fractions uses the absolute or subtraction difference in the ratio of Representatives to population.

MAJOR FRACTIONS

This plan rests on finding a ratio which will divide the population of each State so as to give a certain whole number and a certain fraction in each quotient. The plan rests on the theory that a Representative should go to each State for each unit in the quotient, and also for each fraction above 0.50 in the remainder. It may be otherwise defined as a method by which the absolute differences between the several States in the number of Representatives per inhabitant are made as small as possible. That is what the method of major fractions is designed to accomplish in the end.

As laymen understand the term, the major-fractions method operates in a general way, as follows:

If, for instance, representation is apportioned on the basis of 1 Representative for every 250,000, then a State with a population of 2,626,000 would be entitled to 10 Representatives for the first 2,500,000 population and an additional Representative for the remaining 126,000 population, because the fraction or remainder, 126,000 is more than one-half of 250,000 the unit or basis of representation. But mathematicians and economists have extended and refined this so-called major-fractions formula by mathematical processes in which certain quotients are arrived at and which are used as the basis for apportionment and which are different from the exact quotas to which the several States are seemingly entitled, and as a result of this refined method frequently a State with a larger major fraction is not allowed an extra Representative and a State with a smaller fraction is given an additional Representative. Major-fractions method is supposed to apply the principle of counting the remainder when it is more than one-half of the unit or basis of representation, but in its practical application this is not necessarily done, as for illustration in apportioning representation in the 1910 census major fractions were disregarded in apportioning Representatives to Mississippi, New Mexico, Ohio, and Texas, the exact quotas of these four States being "scaled down" by mathematical processes, and States with smaller major fractions given extra representation. The method of major fractions was used twice, in 1843 in apportioning representation under the 1840 census, and in 1911 in apportioning representation under the 1910 census.

The major-fractions formula used under the 1910 census was devised by Dr. Walter F. Willcox, of Cornell University, and is an amplified form of the major-fractions method used under the 1840 census.

Dr. Joseph A. Hill, Assistant Director of the Census Bureau, described the process followed in applying the major-fractions method as follows:

(1) Here, as in the method of equal proportions, the first step is to assign 1 Representative to each State, making 48 in all.

(2) The next step is to divide the population of each State by the following quantities in succession: 1½, 2½, 3½, etc.

(3) The quotients thereby obtained are then arranged in order of size, beginning with the largest and continuing the process until the total number of quotients plus 48 is 1 greater than the number of Representatives to be apportioned.

(4) The next step is to divide the population of the several States by a number midway between the last two quotients in the list.

(5) The last step is to assign to each State a number of Representatives equal to the whole number in the quotient which was obtained for that State by the above division plus one more Representative in case the quotient contains a major fraction.

This process gives a result in which the necessary deviations from exactness are as small as possible when measured by the absolute or subtraction difference in the ratio of Representatives to population.

THE VINTON METHOD

[Named after Congressman Vinton, who proposed it]

Under this method the total population of the United States is divided by the number of Representatives to be apportioned. This gives the ratio or number of inhabitants per Representative. The population in each State is then divided by that ratio number. The result represents the exact quotas, and taking these quantities, you assign Representatives in the order of the size of the fractions. For instance, suppose there were 10 Representatives to be assigned for fractions, the first Representative would be given to the State with the largest fraction, and the next to the State with the next largest fraction, and so on until all the Representatives were allocated. This process might use up all the major fractions and no more; or it might not use up all these major fractions; or it might use up all the major fractions and one or two minor fractions. This method was used in apportioning representation from 1850 to 1900, inclusive.

MINIMUM-RANGE FORMULA

The minimum-range formula, also devised by Dr. Walter F. Willcox, is a method by which absolute difference between the several States as measured by the number of inhabitants per Representative is made as small as possible. The main purpose of this formula is to give the congressional districts as nearly as possible the same population, so far as Congress by apportionment can bring about that result. It is based on the ratio of population to representation and respects the ratio of Representatives to population. The minimum-range methed has never been used in apportioning representation.

Two other methods of apportioning representation have been devised, but never used:

(a) Method of least errors, formulated by Prof. F. W. Owens, of Cornell University, gets about the same result as the major-fractions method.

(b) Method of alternate ratios, devised by Dr. J. A. Hill, of the Bureau of the Census. This method was recommended by Dr. E. Dana Durrand, then Director of the Census, for adoption in 1911. The method of equal proportions is virtually a modification or refinement of the method of alternate ratios.

In 1921, when the Senate Committee on the Census was considering an apportionment bill based on the 1920 census, its chairman, Senator Sutherland, received a communication from the census advisory committee, which had been appointed to advise the Director of the Census on technical questions coming up during the taking of the 1920 census. This committee was composed of three representatives from the American Statistical Association and three representatives from the American Economic Association. The members of this committee were C. W. Doten, E. F. Gay, W. C. Mitchell, E. R. A. Seligman, A. A. Young, and W. S. Rossiter, all eminent statisticians and economists. In its detailed and well-considered report, which was unanimous, the committee of experts analyzed the methods of major fractions, equal proportions, and other suggested formulas, explained the principle, operation, strength, and weakness of each plan, and reached the following conclusions:

1. The "method of equal proportions" leads to an apportionment in which the ratios between the representation and the population of the several States are as nearly alike as it is possible. It thus complies with the conditions imposed by a literal interpretation of the requirements of the Constitution.

2. The "method of major fractions" has back of it the weight of precedent. Logically, however, it can be supported only by holding that the Constitution requires, not that the ratios between the representation and the population of the several States shall be equal, as nearly as is possible, but that the representation accorded to individuals or to equal groups of individuals in the population (that is, their "shares" in their respective Representatives) shall be as nearly uniform as is possible, irrespective of their places of residence.

3. It is not clear that the special interpretation of the Constitution, which alone is consistent with the use of the "method of major fractions," is to be preferred to other possible special interpretations which lead to other methods of apportionment. We conclude, therefore, that the "method of equal proportions," consistent as it is with the literal meaning of the words of the Constitution, is logically superior to the "method of major fractions."

The advisory committee concluded its elaborate report with the following:

SUMMARY

1. It is clear that the Constitution requires that the allocation of Representatives among the several States shall be proportionate to the distribution of population. It is not equally clear that there is anything in the constitutional requirement which suggests that one of the forms in which such apportionment ratios or proportions may be expressed should be preferred to another.

2. The "method of major fractions" utilizes only one of several ways of expressing apportionment ratios. The "method of equal proportions" utilizes all of these ways without inconsistency. The latter method, therefore, has a broader basis.

3. There is no mathematical or logical ground for preferring the one form of expression of the apportionment ratio used in the method of major fractions to other forms of expression. These other forms lead, when similar processes of computation are employed, to different and therefore inconsistent results.

4. The method of major fractions logically implies preference for a special meaning which may be attached to one of the forms in which apportionment ratios may be expressed. To attach to ratios meanings which vary with the forms in which the ratios are expressed is to interpret them as something else than ratios.

5. In the "method of major fractions" the "nearness" of the ratios of representatives and population for the several States is measured by absolute differences. The "method of equal proportions" utilizes relative differences. The relative scale is to be preferred.

In his testimony before the Census Committee Doctor Hill, of the Census Bureau, defined the three principal methods of apportioning Representatives among the States and the advantage and disadvantage of the several methods as follows:

In conclusion, on the basis of what I have said I might frame a definition of the three methods I have mentioned, including the method of minimum range. I am defining not the mathematical process of the methods but the purpose each method accomplishes.

The method of major fractions is the method by which the absolute differences between the different States in the number of Representatives per inhabitant are made as small as possible. That is what the method of major fractions accomplishes in the end.

I will define the method of minimum range as the method by which absolute differences between the several States as measured by the number of inhabitants per Representative are made as small as possible.

The method of equal proportions is the method by which the relative or percentage differences, in either the number of inhabitants per Representative or the number of Representatives per inhabitant are as small as possible.

Those are technically correct definitions. I might say more about the third method.

Comparing the three methods, the method of equal proportions is more—I will use the word favorable—is more favorable to the small States than the method of major fractions and less favorable than the method of minimum range.

The method of equal proportions is more favorable to the large States than the method of minimum range and less favorable than the method of major fractions. Thus, it occupies an intermediate position between the other two.

The practical results of the application of the three methods may therefore be summed up as follows: If it be desired to have a method which shall be as favorable to the large States as possible then the method of major fractions should be used. If it be desired to have a method that will favor the small States as much as possible, then the method of minimum range should be used. If it be desired to adopt a method intermediate between these two, not as favorable to the large States as the method of major fractions, nor as favorable to the small States as the method of minimum range, then the right method is the method of equal proportions.

I submit the following additional observations:

There is a wide disagreement among statisticians, mathematicians, economists, and plain, common-sense people as to the correct, best, and most equitable method of apportioning Representatives among the several States. Seemingly this conflict is irreconcilable. This contention and bitter battle between experts grows out of and is the inevitable result of an effort on the part of statisticians and economists to inject fractions and complicated mathematical computations into what should be a simple problem of allocating to the several States the Representatives to which their population entitles them. The effort to give a State or any number of States additional representation because of a fraction of population, major or minor, is an apple of discord which will be thrown into the apportionment problem every 10 years to confuse the issue and prolong the battle between experts as to refined formulas, infinitesimal computations, and complicated scientific methods of making apportionments.

When you adopt either the major-fractions formula or the equal-proportions formula you depart from exact quotas and from an equitable, just, fair, simple, and constitutional method of allotting representation among the several States. Representation should be based upon exact quotas, and not on "scaled-down" fractions or intricate mathematical computations which under either method may easily convert a major fraction into a minor fraction. When you abandon the rejected-fractions formula and adopt either the equal-proportions or major-fractions formulas you are traveling away from an equitable, simple, fair, and exact apportionment based upon quotas according to population. Mr. Jefferson was the great exponent of the rejected-fractions formula, while Mr. Webster championed the major-fractions method. All of our trouble, all of our worries and contention, all of our controversies and pitched battles between statisticians, mathematicians, and economists are the inevitable result of our having abandoned the simple formula recommended and strenuously championed by Mr. Jefferson to the effect that both major and minor fractions should be disregarded in apportioning representation. I strongly urge the abandonment of the major-fractions formula, the equal-proportions formula, and all other methods that take fractions into consideration. Wisdom suggests that we return to the hard and inflexible, but, nevertheless, just basis of rejected fractions, which is fair to each of the States and does not give any State an advantage or place any State under a disadvantage as a result of complicated mathematical computations involved in all of the formulas which contemplate a recognition of fractions in apportioning representation.

When the pending bill was being considered by the Census Committee I called attention to the brief and argument by Thomas Jefferson on the congressional apportionment bill of 1792, in which he vigorously, and I think persuasively, opposed the recognition of major fractions in the apportionment of Representatives to the several States based on population. I also called attention to the great speech made by Daniel Webster in the United States Senate in April, 1832, on a congressional reapportionment bill, in which he strenuously contended for a reapportionment formula which recognized major fractions.

I was requested by the committee to put in the record the data as to where these great arguments by Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Webster could be found, and this I was glad to do.

Mr. Jefferson's argument is found in Story's Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, fifth edition, volume 1, pages 495 to 500, inclusive; also in Ford's Life of Jefferson, volume 5, page 493. Mr. Webster's argument is found in the same volume at pages 500 to 512, inclusive. I may add that Edward Everett's speech supporting the contention of Mr. Webster can be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, issue of May, 1832.

My recollection is that Mr. Jefferson's argument and Mr. Webster's speech are reproduced in haec verba in Mr. Foster's work on the Constitution, and, of course, the speeches of Webster and Everett appear in the reports of the congressional debates.

I think I have heretofore stated in discussing this question that President Washington vetoed the first census bill because it recognized fractions in apportioning representation among the several States. This veto was on the advice of and after a conference with Thomas Jefferson, his Secretary of State, John Randolph, his Attorney General, and James Madison, the principal creator of our Federal Constitution, and, according to Mr. Jefferson, these three men prepared the veto message. In advising President Washington to veto the first census bill which recognized major fractions, Mr. Jefferson says he—urged the danger to which the scramble for fractionary members would always lead.

In a letter to Archibald Stuart on March 14, 1792, Mr. Jefferson, in opposing the use of fractions in allocating Representatives among the several States, said:

Besides, it takes the fractions of some States to supply the deficiency of others and thus makes the people of Georgia the instrument of giving a Member to New Hampshire. On our part the principle will never be yielded, for when such obvious encroachments are made on the plain meaning of the Constitution the bond of union ceases to be the equal measure of justice to all of its parts.

I can not refrain from again expressing my conviction that in the interest of popular government and efficient translation of the public will into legislation it is necessary to increase the membership of the House. Under our system of procedure in the House and with our Committee on Rules and our steering committee of the majority party a House of 500 or 600 Members would not be unwieldy. This system of legislative procedure is so well entrenched in the House and functions so efficiently that the addition of 50, 75, or even 100 or more Members would not militate against the expeditious dispatch of legislation in the House. It will not be denied that the House with a membership of 435 functions more efficiently and enacts legislation more promptly than the Senate, which has a membership of only 96. Nine times out of ten the delay in enacting legislation occurs in the Senate and not in the House, and the defeat of legislation demanded by the public is generally brought about by the action of the Senate and not by the action of the House.

Again, with the tremendous increase in our population, the enormous development of our industrial and commercial activities, the creation of innumerable commissions, bureaus, and departments of Government, the participation of the Government in business and the active interest of business in government—all these conditions have combined to bring about a situation where the departmental business of the average Congressman has increased very greatly over what it was in the past, and over similar official activities of the members of legislative assemblies in foreign countries.

The rapid and enormous extension of the activities of our Federal Government in new fields, the ever-increasing participation of business in government and the enormous increase of Government business has added several hundredfold to the labor and responsibilities of a Member of Congress, who is the agent and should be the dependable spokesman and representative of his constituents in the true sense of that term. The Member of Congress is the instrumentality by which his constituents get in contact with the Government on matters involving not only legislation and taxation but pensions, post office, and Rural Free Delivery Service, veteran legislation, departmental matters, and scores of other agencies that touch and materially affect the interest of the people; and while Congress in recognition of the increase of departmental duties has increased the clerical force of Representatives and Senators, nevertheless much of this work must come under the immediate and personal supervision of the Member of Congress, and much of it can not be delegated or intrusted to his clerical force. The people have a right to demand that their business with the Government have the personal attention of their Congressman, because of his ability to get better results for them than if the matters in which they are interested are left to the attention of a clerk or secretary. Undoubtedly the smaller the legislative body the more easily it can be controlled by the sinister and sordid interests and the more readily it will yield to corrupt appeals and venal influences.

By increasing the membership of the House, within reasonable limits, of course, you will draw "fresh blood" from the country—men who come fresh from the people who know the needs of the people, and who have the courage and ability to champion the cause of the masses. If we should add 75 to the House membership and if this increase would bring into the Government service two or three men with genius for government and legislation equal to that possessed by Champ Clark, Joseph Cannon, Claude Kitchin, James R. Mann, Martin Madden, Joe Byrns, Finis Garrett, John Garner, and others equally distinguished in the realm of statecraft, would not the acquisition of the brains of these two or three new Members and the employment of their genius in legislative matters be worth infinitely more to the Government and to the people than the entire cost of such increase in membership?

If popular government is to be successful, it is absolutely necessary to interest the masses in governmental matters and in voting, and they should know their Representatives.

And that result will be brought about more easily by not having a Representative in Congress represent too many people or too large an extent of territory. The arguments against the increase of the membership of the House are arguments against large legislative assemblies. It is true that in all the history of the world since people began to strive for popular government, bureaucrats and those who did not believe in the masses having a voice in governmental matters, have always been opposed to large representative assemblies, and attempted in all nations and in all ages of the world's history to confine governmental activities to a favored class, to the highborn, or at least to a small body of men that could be more easily controlled than large legislative assemblies.

I think that a study of the history of the world shows that those who have been opposed to popular government have always used the argument that the masses were not capable of self-government, and that a large legislative assembly can easily be converted into a mob. In that connection I call your attention to the fact that this very question was discussed in the Constitutional Convention, and it was there argued very convincingly that the success of free government would largely depend upon having a large representative assembly; that is, a House with a large membership drawn from all parts of the country, directly from the people, so that all vocational groups would at least have a fair representation in Congress.

And with the tremendous increase in our commercial and industrial population, if the membership of the House be confined to 435, in each succeeding census and apportionment, the representation of the agricultural States and agricultural groups will become less and less in each succeeding reapportionment, until ultimately the numerical representation of the agricultural classes will be nominal and negligible.

To illustrate: If the formula of 435 is adhered to, I believe in 25 years the cities of St. Louis and Kansas City, and their environs, on a population basis, would send to Congress at least three-fourths of the total number of Representatives from that State. While you can not by any system prevent this disparity, you can adopt a system which will give to each vocational group a fair and just numerical representation, and it is important that every group, every vocational class, have such numerical representation in the House as may be reasonably necessary to protect the interests of each and every vocational group.

I am not advocating soviet representation. I am advocating an apportionment that will reduce to a minimum the disparity between the representation of industrial classes and the agricultural classes. You can not prevent the disparity but you can adopt a system which will give to the agricultural classes a reasonable and sufficiently large numerical representation to enable them to present the cause of agriculture when legislation is pending that affects the interests of that great industry.

It can be done by allowing one Representative in the House for every 250,000 inhabitants. Under the present apportionment in Missouri 4 of the 16 Congressmen represent industrial and commercial communities. Twelve of them represent agricultural communities.

In each census the population of these commercial and industrial centers is going to increase and ultimately outrun the population of the agricultural communities. While giving to the commercial and industrial centers increased representation according to their population, you should not reduce the representation of any State below its present quota. If you unalterably fix the membership of the House at 435, it is inevitable that the agricultural States will have their representation reduced in every succeeding apportionment until in 25 or 50 years the agricultural States will only have a nominal or negligible representation.

If you limit the membership of the House to 435, in 25 years from now the number of Representatives from Iowa would probably be reduced to five or six. Can it be contended that the time will ever come when the great agricultural State of Iowa would only be entitled to five or six Representatives? And yet that situation is inevitable if the membership of the House is to be arbitrarily limited to 435.

With the membership limited to 435 it is only a question of a comparatively few years until the great cities will practically monopolize the State's Representatives in the House. The State will be carved into districts to which perhaps a string of rural counties will be added, but the population of the city will be largely in excess of the country population, which means that the cities will control the nomination and election of the Representatives. This means that the rural sections will be shorn of their influence and serve only as ballast or as a tail to the kite of the predominating city population. You can not remedy this evil by the "shoe-string system" of laying out congressional districts. This system would be ineffective for the reason that in every instance the industrial and commercial population in the district would predominate and constitute an overwhelming majority, so that the agricultural classes in the shoe-string district would have about as much chance to dominate the industrial classes as the tail of the dog has to wag the dog. I am looking forward into the future and visualizing the ultimate and inevitable results that will flow from limiting for all time the membership of the House to 435. If we place the membership of the House in a strait-jacket, and by a general law decree that never hereafter shall the House of Representatives contain more than 435 Representatives, you have adopted a formula which within the next 25 or 50 years will reduce the representation of Kansas, Iowa, and of Nebraska to five or six Congressmen, and the representation of all other agricultural States proportionately.

While we can not change the ratio of representation or give any State larger proportionate representation than it is entitled to under the constitutional mandate and we can not prevent the numerical disparity between the industrial States and agricultural States, we can nevertheless adopt a formula or basis of representation which, while it will not give to the agricultural States as many Representatives as the industrial and commercial States have, it will numerically increase the representation of the agricultural communities and give the agricultural States a sufficient number of Representatives to properly present the cause of agriculture in Congress.

To emphasize my position, may I say this? The fewer number of Representatives in the House the greater is the real or effective disparity between the industrial and commercial classes, on the one hand, and the agricultural classes on the other. You might adopt as a basis of representation, say, 1,000,000 population. That would give Missouri four Representatives. It would give Iowa two or three, and other agricultural States a very greatly reduced representation. Now, I am not contending that Missouri and Iowa and Nebraska shall each have as many Representatives as the larger States. I am not insisting that the agricultural classes shall have as many Congressmen as the more numerous industrial and commercial classes, because the agricultural population is not as great as the industrial and commercial groups. But I am contending that the time never will come in the history of the United States Government, with the increase in population and the tremendous development of our industrial and commercial and governmental activities, when Iowa ought to have less than 11 Members.

The time will never come when Kansas ought to have less than eight Members. The time will never come when Missouri ought to have less than 16 Members. By limiting the membership to 435, Alabama, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, Mississippi, Maine, Louisiana, and probably all the other agricultural States would lose representation in every succeeding apportionment, and the influence in legislative matters of these and other agricultural States would rapidly decline.

And while it is perfectly right and proper to give the industrial States that are rapidly increasing in population additional representation, no formula should be adopted that will put Wisconsin, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Alabama, Mississippi, Indiana, and other agricultural States in a strait-jacket and ultimately reduce their Representatives to a mere handful of men. These States not only want their proportionate part of all the Representatives but they want a basis of representation that will give them a sufficient number of Representatives to safeguard their interests in Congress.

While I would not favor a policy that would deprive the cities of their just proportion of Representatives, I favor a basis that will give the rural districts adequate numerical representation; that is to say, a system or basis that, while not giving to the agricultural sections more than their proportion of the Representatives, would nevertheless give them a larger number of Representatives or more adequate numerical representation, to the end that the rural sections may always have on the floor of the House a sufficient number of Representatives to adequately reflect their will, plead their cause, and protect their interests.

By the plan I advocate you would not remove the disparity in the number of Representatives between the industrial and agricultural sections, but you would reduce the evil effects of this disparity. A House with a larger membership would not give the agricultural States more than their proportionate part of the total number of Representatives, but it will give them a larger physical or numerical representation; not more Members proportionately, but a larger numerical body of Representatives to plead their cause and reflect their will.

Or to state the proposition in another way, under my plan you get a Congress with a larger membership, but in that larger body each vocational group will have a larger numerical representation and will be able to present its cause more efficiently than if such representation were reduced one-half or one-third. I am vigorously opposed to any legislation which will put the American people in a strait-jacket as to the number of members of the House. The present Congress does not possess such a monopoly on wisdom as to authorize it to speak ex cathedra and decree that the House of Representatives shall never have more than 435 Members. We have no authority in law or morals to foreclose the power or right of some succeeding Congress to increase or decrease the membership of the House. Our efforts so to do will be futile.

Most people who oppose increasing the membership of the House have made only a superficial study of the reapportionment problem which means that their conclusions are hastily drawn and obviously unsound. There are many, many reasons why the membership of the House should not be held down to 435. A House with a membership of less than 500 would not and could not be truly representative of 123,000,000 American people engaged in diversified occupations, and whose interests are so conflicting that with a less number all the great vocational groups could not have a voice in the enactment of legislation vitally affecting their welfare.

A House of 500 Members would allow one Member for each State (as required by the Constitution) and an additional Representative for every 272,000 population. No Congressman, however industrious and painstaking, can efficiently represent more than 272,000 people. A constituency of 272,000 would, as a rule, be homogeneous or composed of people belonging to the same general class or vocation and have the same interests, and similarly affected by legislation. The Representative of a district of this kind could speak the language of practically all of his constituents, which he could not do if he represented a district with half a million population engaged in different callings, having conflicting interests, and being affected differently by proposed legislation.

A district of 272,000 population or less would probably be exclusively agricultural or exclusively commercial and industrial, and its Representative would not be compelled to choose which master he will serve, because his constituency will probably be practically of one mind on all legislative proposals. On the other hand a district with a population of 500,000 would probably be composed of industrial and agricultural groups with approximately the same numerical strength. The legislation favored by one vocational group would probably be opposed by the other groups. In this situation the Representative would be compelled to choose between these groups in charting his legislative course, and in meeting the demands of one group of his constituents he would be compelled to disregard and neglect the interests of the other large vocational groups in his district. In serving the industrial groups in his district he would frequently be compelled to vote for legislation detrimental to his constituents engaged in agricultural pursuits; or in voting for legislation in the interest of his agriculture constituents he would often have to disregard the interests and demands of the industrial classes in his district.

I can not overestimate the ever increasing governmental activities in matters directly affecting the people. Each year more and more of the time of Members of Congress is required to represent their constituents in departmental matters relating to postal service, rural free delivery service, pensions, soldiers' compensation, veteran affairs, transportation, immigration, and dozens of other departmental or bureau activities that require an ever increasing amount of the Congressman's time. I wish some of these editors and students of public affairs who are insisting that the membership of the House is now too large could be at my side and follow me for a week as I attempt to perform my duties, not only on the floor of the House and on committees but in the study of bills and proposed legislation and in matters before the departments, bureaus, commissions, and other Government agencies. I am sure that after close observation of the daily work of an average Congressman these carping critics would be disillusioned and would have a different conception of the work that a Congressman must perform in order to meet the demands of his constituents and be even a small factor in legislative affairs. I wish they could see my daily mail and understand the requests that come from my constituents and the multitude of reasonable and proper appeals that come to me for this or that service in the departments, bureaus, and commissions. I am confident they would be weary after keeping at my heels for a week, often working 16 or more hours a day; and what I do is done by every other Representative who strives to efficiently serve his constituents.

The smaller the membership of a legislative body, the easier it is to wrongfully influence and control that body. Every beneficiary of special privilege in America wants a House of Representatives with a small membership—the smaller the better for him, and the less trouble to manipulate. Every selfish, sordid, sinister, cynical, and baneful influence in America champions small legislative assemblies, because the smaller the membership the easier it is to control and the fewer men they have to "fix" or influence to thwart the public will and accomplish their venal purpose. Every reactionary individual and influence in the United States favors a small House of Representatives, because it is harder to corrupt, control, or wrongfully influence large assemblies than small ones. All comparatively small assemblies are controlled by a few "key men." In all ages of the world's history those who make merchandise out of patriotism and use the agencies of government for the accomplishment of their selfish purposes have opposed large representative assemblies, because in large legislative bodies there will be a larger number of far-seeing, progressive, and incorruptible men to protect the public interest and prevent the plunder of the Public Treasury.

In a letter to Thomas Mann Randolph, March 16, 1792, Thomas Jefferson stated one reason why he was in favor of a large House of Representatives. He said:

> The fate of the representation bill is still undecided. I look for our safety to the broad representation of the people which that—
>
> Meaning a House with a large membership—> shall bring forward. It will be more difficult for corrupt views to lay hold of so large a mass.

But, gentlemen, there is another reason why I can not bring myself to vote for the pending bill. It delegates to the Secretary of Commerce a duty that the Constitution places on Congress. It is a constitutional prerogative and duty of Congress to apportion representation among the several States according to population. That prerogative, that duty, that right Congress should not and, in my opinion, can not legally delegate to a Cabinet officer. The pending bill involves what I consider a supine surrender to bureaucracy and an abandonment of the constitutional functions of Congress. By passing this bill Congress is proclaiming to the world its pusillanimity, inefficiency, and abrogation of its plain constitutional duties, and its lack of confidence in future Congresses to perform their constitutional duty.

It will not do to say that we are only delegating the performance of a ministerial duty. Under the system that this bill sets up it will be within the power of the Secretary of Commerce to manipulate the population statistics so as to wrongfully favor one State at the expense of another. The changes of a few figures in the enumeration of 123,000,000 people will increase or reduce the total population of a State so as to change a major fraction into a minor fraction or to increase the size of the major fraction of one State at the expense of another State; and all this can be done in the dark, under cover and without any probability of the wrongful changes ever becoming known to the public. The grave abuses that a corrupt or partisan official or clerk in the Census Bureau can make under cover could and would take from one State a Representative and electoral vote to which it is entitled and give that Representative and electoral vote to another State not entitled to it. I believe that Congress, on reflection, will be heartily ashamed of having enacted this humiliating and debasing measure and will repeal it as soon as reason ascends the throne and sober judgment again controls their deliberations.

I believe when Congress passes a reapportionment bill it should be in truth and fact a reapportionment bill. I repeat what I have frequently stated, that I will vote for a reapportionment bill immediately after the 1930 census is taken, and while I favor an increase in the membership of the House, if that increase can not be secured I will then vote for a reapportionment under the 1930 census based on the present membership.

IMPROVEMENT OF OREGON CAVES, SISKIYOU NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to call up the bill S. 3162.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3162) to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the same.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3162, with Mr. MICHENER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3162, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to construct and maintain such improvements within and near the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg., as are necessary for the comfort and convenience of the visiting public, including the purchase of materials and equipment for lighting the caves and washing the interior thereof, and providing easier accessibility and traversibility thereof, and providing an additional exit or entrance, and for installing such materials and equipment; and for the aforesaid purposes the sum of $35,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "be" and insert the word "is"; and on page 2, after line 4, insert a new section, to be known as section 2, and to read as follows: "SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to administer the provisions of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules two hours are allowed for debate, to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the bill. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the Oregon Caves are situated in the southwestern corner of the State of Oregon in the Siskiyou National Forest, and are great natural caverns in a mountain system. They are approached at the present time through one entrance. A road has been constructed to the caves. The attendance of late years has greatly increased, so that last year over 23,000 persons visited the caves. The Oregon State Highway Commission is now prepared to spend additional funds enlarging this road on account of the increased traffic and to provide the caves with another road to be known as the Redwood Highway, from California. The traffic has continually grown, and everyone who has visited the caves is impressed with their beauty.

The purpose of the bill is to make the caves more accessible. The filtration of the waters during the winter covers the floors of these beautiful caves in some parts with slime, making it dangerous for the people who desire to visit the caves to do so, and covers the sides of the caves with material that seriously impairs their beauty. But with the water system that is proposed to be installed, the sides of the cavern will be cleaned, thus exposing the beauties of the coloration, and the débris and mire underfoot will be washed out.

It is proposed to put in a small hydroelectric system which will furnish enough power both to wash the caves, which is a small item, and to afford light. In the caves there are places where there are deep descents, and some of them can not now be easily negotiated. It is desired to put in some steel or iron ladders in such places and to rail off certain deep abysses, and also to light the caves so that the people may have the opportunity to see the beauties of the caverns.

The Forest Service, for the obvious reason that these caves are located in the midst of a national forest, has refused to allow torches to be used in the caves, which was the method of lighting them until a recent date. By these means, with the expenditure of a small amount of money, the caves can be made safe, and other caverns can be opened with only a slight expenditure. Some of the most beautiful chambers are now closed up and are accessible only through narrow openings, through which it is very difficult for many to pass through. These will be made available.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Are these caves and caverns part of a national park?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a national monument administered by the National Forest Service. It is proposed to create an entrance on the other side of the cavern. This legislation will protect life and limb, open up new caverns to visitors, and create an additional entrance, so that the people can go in at one end and out the other without retracing their steps, and this will also avoid congestion of visitors looking into the caverns.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I note in the committee report a letter from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture under date of March 7, 1928, in which it is stated that the legislation proposed in this bill would be in conflict with the financial program of the President. Has the President changed his views since the date of that letter, March 7, 1928?

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as I know, I do not know that he has.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman has no knowledge of the reasons for the opposition?

Mr. HAWLEY. Only that is it in conflict with the present policy of expenditure. But this is such a necessary thing for the development of these caves, and for the accommodation of a growing number of visitors who travel over the highways named and who desire this improvement, that the expenditure is justified.

Mr. BACON. No one has jurisdiction over these caves except the Federal Government?

Mr. HAWLEY. No one except the Federal Government, through the Forest Service.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, my purpose at this time is to point out that in passing this bill we embark on a policy, of which I approve, of preserving our national resources and places of scenic beauty, and for that object making use of public funds. These places of natural beauty are of great educational value.

A few days ago on the Consent Calendar we had a bill providing for exactly the same purpose at Mammoth Cave, Ky. I believe that we should be fair in these matters and that all these propositions that are alike should be treated alike. It so happens that the Mammoth Cave in Kentucky does not come under public land, and therefore the bill went to another committee. Objection was made to the consideration at the time. If my memory serves me correctly the objection was based on the question of policy—whether the Federal Government should finance the conservation or preservation of a natural cave. I believe that it should, especially of a cave of the size, importance, and beauty of Mammoth Cave. In approving of the bill now before us I hold that we approve that very policy. The question of cost does not really enter into such propositions.

Notwithstanding the financial program of the President—and I say that with all due deference—the control of public funds and responsibility for the expenditure of same are entirely with Congress, and in considering these matters we should treat all of these cases alike. So I hope that either on the proper Calendar Wednesday or by a special rule the bill authorizing appropriations for doing the same kind of work at Mammoth Cave, Kentucky, will be brought before the House, so that the House will have an opportunity to vote on it and approve it. After all, a thousand years from now neither history nor anyone else will know or care much about the financial program of a well-meaning public official of our day; but a thousand years from now the people of that age will know and care if we properly and prudently conserved our natural resources and preserved the natural beauty of our country.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the bill before us has not aroused my enthusiasm, and in part for the reason emphasized by the gentleman from Wisconsin, that it is in conflict with the President's financial policy. Also, I have not liked the form of the bill. I am not sure what the policy is to be in the administration of these caves. I am not very well informed as to the rules which obtain in the handling of recreational areas in national forests. I have had some contact with that question in the national parks but not as to national forests. The policy that is obtaining at the present time with reference to caves administered in the National Park Service is to charge an admission fee, for the reason that guides are always required to handle the parties, and so forth. So a fee is charged. A fee is charged at the Wind Cave National Park in South Dakota, and a charge is made at the Carlsbad Caverns National Monument in New Mexico, which is probably, and, I think, without question, the most wonderful and the most beautiful underground display to be found in the world. The receipts are used in the development and maintenance of the monument or the park.

I have suggested to the gentleman from Oregon an amendment to make it clear that such a policy should obtain with reference to these caves, the amendment being to add at the end of section 2, the section which sets forth the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to administer the provisions of the act, the following language:

Including the fixing of charges for admission to said caves sufficient to maintain and develop them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I have no objection to that at all, because I think that is the present practice.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think that is likely to be the practice, but I should like it to be definite, and because I understood that to be the attitude of the gentleman from Oregon, I have not felt justified in opposing the bill, and I think very possibly that might modify the attitude of the Budget and the attitude of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has it been the practice at any time in the past to lease such caves or other natural places of beauty?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have never known the Government to lease an attraction.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So there is no danger that this might be leased to a concessionaire?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think there is no authority for leasing it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no authority in law for doing it?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not think there is, and I am sure the Forest Service would not contemplate that.

Mr. HAWLEY. Leases are made at places near the caves for hotels, and things of that sort.

Mr. CRAMTON. For public utilities and conveniences leases are often made, but I know of no instance where the attraction itself is leased. Mr. Chairman, with that understanding, I think it puts the bill in much better position with regard to the present policy and not in conflict with either the Forest Service policy or the national park policy.

Mr. COLTON. Did I understand the gentleman from Michigan to offer an amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will at the proper time.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I have no more requests for time, and I suggest that the bill be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does anyone in opposition to the bill desire time for debate? If not, debate is concluded, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be hereby authorized to construct and maintain such improvements within and near the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg., as are necessary for the comfort and convenience of the visiting public, including the purchase of materials and equipment for lighting the caves and washing the interior thereof, and providing easier accessibility and traversibility thereof, and providing an additional exit or entrance, and for installing such materials and equipment; and for the aforesaid purposes the sum of $35,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "be" and insert the word "is."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: On page 2, line 2, after the words "sum of," insert the words "not more than."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, after line 4, insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to administer the provisions of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 7, after the word "act," insert "including the fixing of charges for admission to said caves sufficient to maintain and develop them."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MICHENER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3162) to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg., had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COLTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LANDS HELD UNDER COLOR OF TITLE

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13899) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House therefore automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MICHENER in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that a tract or tracts of public land in the State of Michigan, not exceeding in the aggregate 160 acres, has or have been held in good faith and in peaceable, adverse possession by a citizen of the United States, his ancestors or grantors, for more than 20 years under claim or color of title, and that valuable improvements have been placed on such land or some part thereof has been reduced to cultivation, the Secretary may, in his discretion, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre, cause a patent or patents to issue for such land to any such citizen: Provided, That the term "citizen," as used herein, shall be held to include a corporation organized under the laws of the United States or any State or Territory thereof.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER].

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I believe there is no opposition to this bill, and perhaps for that reason I should say nothing about it, but it is a little out of the ordinary and I want to make a very brief explanation of it. The territory which is affected by this bill is entirely in Monroe County, Mich., which is the southeastern county of the State, and through Monroe County the River Raisin flows in an easterly and westerly direction. This territory was settled by the French in the sixteenth century, and it was the habit of the French where they granted land along rivers to make the grant in very narrow strips back from the river. They did this here, just as they did in the Province of Quebec and elsewhere throughout the region that was once occupied by the French.

The Government of the United States never had any title to this property at all and has never claimed any title to it. It has not title to any property except post-office property, I believe, in the county of Monroe; but the people in these later days when abstract companies and the banks are becoming more particular about abstracts of title, have learned that there are clouds upon the title to this property, and it is for that reason this bill has been introduced.

The United States, as I have said, has no claim to it, but the United States by this bill will have the right, through the Secretary of the Interior, to grant patents to the people living upon this territory and owning it on the payment of the usual fee of $1.25 an acre. I think there are comparatively few of these places in Monroe County, but I am informed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] that they have had a good deal of trouble about these particular titles.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOPER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not unusual in relief bills of this kind that are usually predicated on giving relief to an individual, to include therein land held adversely by a corporation?

Mr. HOOPER. Well, I do not know that it is unusual, but there seems to be no other way, I will say to the gentleman from New York, to handle this particular situation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How did these lands get into the possession of corporations?

Mr. HOOPER. Well, I do not know that any of the land has got into the possession of corporations. It is nearly all farm land, I will say to the gentleman. So far as I know it is all farm land, and the people who hold it have held it for generations; that is, they and the people who held it before them. There is no city property involved here.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In my brief, but happy, experience on the Public Lands Committee, we had bills like this under consideration, but we never had a case where a corporation held adversely or asked relief of this kind.

Mr. HOOPER. I do not want to be too certain about it, but I do not believe a foot of this land is held by a corporation. It is farming land and it is held in very narrow parcels.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOPER. Certainly.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why should land in Michigan have any better advantages than similar land in Wisconsin? In Wisconsin we have land situated in the same way where people think they have bought summer-resort property on the lakes and find they do not have title.

Mr. HOOPER. Then, they can do just as the people are to do here, and pay the $1.25 an acre for a release on the part of the Government.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman would not oppose an amendment to include the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOOPER. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. It has been my experience on the Public Lands Committee that each particular case deserves particular attention.

Mr. HOOPER. Yes; and should come up on its own merits.

Mr. ARENTZ. If you had similar cases in Florida, it would be necessary for you to segregate the claimants within a certain district in Florida; and the same thing applies to every State in the Union, so it is essential that every one of these cases should stand on its own bottom.

Mr. HOOPER. They must be considered on their own merits, so far as this case is concerned, it is a little out of the ordinary, and that is the reason I wanted to make this explanation; but there is nobody who is going to be injured. The Government is going to get money which it really is not entitled to at the rate of $1.25 an acre, and the titles will be straightened out and everyone will be satisfied.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman may have a particular case in mind, but settling that particular case may open a thousand other cases in Michigan under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HOOPER. This does not open it to anybody else. Anybody else must come in and ask for relief in his own way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Will the chairman of the committee use a little time and give us some information about this?

Mr. COLTON. I will be pleased to do whatever I can.

Mr. WINGO. I am reading the report of the Secretary of the Interior. He says that this has been surveyed as public land. Is that true?

Mr. HOOPER. It may have been surveyed as public land. The gentleman in the chair [Mr. MICHENER] knows more about this than I do.

Mr. WINGO. I think it would be wise if the chairman, who is a good lawyer, would put a parliamentarian in the chair and answer some of the questions that have arisen; in other words, give the facts fully.

Mr. KETCHAM took the chair.

Mr. WINGO. I am sure the bill is all right, and I am not asking the questions in any spirit of controversy but to get the record straight. The Secretary of the Interior reports that this has been surveyed as public land. Is that true?

Mr. MICHENER. The situation is this: In the early days the land was settled by the French. There may be those in the House who are familiar with the way the French made settlements in this country. They followed the procedure in France. Their farms were on the water front. The farm consisted of a narrow frontage, possibly a few rods, and then extended back from the water front to the extent of a mile or a mile and a half or 5 or 6 miles. At that time the State of Michigan had not been surveyed. There were no east or west lines—township lines, as we call them to-day. So the Government surveyors staked out the claims on the water front. For instance, if this center aisle is a river, the claim would be staked out a few rods wide on the river, and extending back a mile and a half or 5 or 6 miles, and the next claim would join that claim on the other side.

The unit of measurement used at that time was the arpent—about 12 rods. Most of these claims were 40 arpents back. The man settled there and remained on the claim a given number of years, at which time he made proof that he had complied with the law, and he received his patent to the part of the land for which he paid $1.25 an acre. The part of the land in the rear was not paid for at $1.25 an acre at that time. That land was given to the man when he made proof according to law.

Some of the people did not make proof to the entire claim—that is, the full length back from the river—so as the result there is a small strip a few rods wide in the center of a man's farm, or at the edge of his farm, which has never been patented by the Government to anyone.

Later the Federal Government came through and put in east and west lines, and when they did that they did not take into consideration these claims and these pieces of land. The Government claims no land there; they have no land there; there is no Government land in the State of Michigan subject to settlement.

In the first place, an effort was made to homestead these lands. It was found that this was impossible under the circumstances. I might say that this bill was suggested to me by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Finney.

Michigan has no public land; we are not familiar with it and know nothing about it. The mining laws or mineral laws, as applied to public land, do not apply to Michigan. In short, these farmers out there, a few of them, have spots on their farms where the title is not clear.

A question arose, I think, when one of these farmers attempted to borrow money from the Federal Government through the Federal land bank. When the Government attorneys passed on the abstract they found these little pieces of land here and there on these farms, and then the question was raised. This bill is merely attempting to clear the title.

Mr. WINGO. My understanding is that in the early days the grants, or whatever you call them, of the French were based on the arpent at the water edge of the river or the lake or the ocean, and that the ordinary grant of those days extended back a certain number of arpents, which amounted to about 1½ miles.

Subsequently the Federal Government undertook to say to the holders of those old French grants, "for every one of you that has this mile or mile and a half on the water front the Federal Government will give you an equal amount extending back; in other words, if you have a grant on the water front a mile and a half, then the Federal Government out of the public domain, which lies back of you, will give you an equal amount in the same shape." If he had a rectangular piece 10 arpents wide by 40 arpents long, then the Federal Government would give him a further grant back of there of 10 arpents wide and 40 arpents long so as to make his tract 80 arpents long and 10 arpents wide. In order to do that and get it from the Federal Government, the Government required that they make proof of ownership, and so forth, to the original French tract. My understanding is that the Federal land bank found in one of these cases that the owner of it—that is, his predecessors in title—had never made any such proof, and, therefore, he had no title from the Federal Goverment, but that the Federal Government's records showed that no advertisement or anything else had ever been made of these lands and that they never had been offered for public sale or opened to private entry, and therefore no real rights of any adverse claimant could have accrued under the Federal Government, and as the Assistant Secretary said, this grant of power should be given to him for the purpose of curing that title. But some one has asked, on both sides of the aisle, why is it necessary in order to take care of these farmers to take care of some corporation; is there a corporation that happens to own part of it? If so, I think the corporation ought to be taken care of the same as any other grantee.

Mr. MICHENER. Not to my knowledge. For instance, we have dairy farms in Michigan that are incorporated, but I know of no corporation owning any of the land in question. I assure the gentleman that this is all farm land.

Mr. WINGO. My only idea in getting into this was not to oppose the gentleman's bill—I assume that when the bill comes from the Public Lands Committee it is correct, and, knowing the gentleman as I do, I felt it was correct—but there was some contradiction in the record, apparent contradiction only, and I think that should be explained for the record because a good many of these claims have been turned down which are just as meritorious as this and that I thought ought to have been allowed. I think whenever one is allowed and others are turned down that the record ought to be clear so that someone can not say you did this in a certain case and you should do it for me.

Mr. MICHENER. I think the gentleman is quite right and I appreciate his suggestion.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman's bill should be passed with his explanation.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that a tract or tracts of public land in the State of Michigan, not exceeding in the aggregate 160 acres, has or have been held in good faith and in peaceable, adverse possession by a citizen of the United States, his ancestors or grantors, for more than 20 years under claim or color of title, and that valuable improvements have been placed on such land or some part thereof has been reduced to cultivation, the Secretary may, in his discretion, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre, cause a patent or patents to issue for such land to any such citizen: Provided, That the term "citizen," as used herein, shall be held to include a corporation organized under the laws of the United States or any State or Territory thereof.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "whenever" and insert "within five years after passage of this act."

Page 1, line 9, after the word "years," insert "prior to the approval of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 2, line 5, after the word "citizen," strike out the colon, insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, it is clear from the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], as well as by the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. COLTON], that there are no corporations involved in these particular lands. That being so, I believe it would be a dangerous precedent in a relief bill of this kind to include a proviso that relief shall be granted to corporations.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is not the gentleman overlooking this fact: That under the admitted statement of the facts in this case it is possible that a corporation could hold title to this land in perfect good faith, and the corporation would be entitled to the relief just the same as any citizen of Michigan.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Considering the history of the land and how it was originally acquired, I do not think a corporation could have acquired title.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes. The original claimant, of course, was an individual, a Frenchman, but coming down through the years with this chain of title, it is possible that some corporation out there might take title. I give the gentleman this illustration: I happen to know one family, all of them farmers, and they all have their farm holdings incorporated. You might have such a situation out there. It is not going to hurt. This language will be mere surplusage if there are no corporations, and if there are any corporations their title should be cleared the same as the title of an individual.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If a corporation acquires land of this kind, it acquires it with notice. It is quite different where the original settler comes in and this land is improved by him, and it continues in his family for generation after generation. Clearly such an individual is entitled to relief.

Mr. WINGO. I think the grantee by conveyance, if consideration is paid, is entitled to as much relief as one who receives the land by descent and distribution through generations and generations. I do not think that because a man happens to be a great-grandson of some original settler that he is entitled to have his title quieted any more than a corporation who obtains it under the circumstances I have stated.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That carries with it the idea of adverse possession, and we are talking of a corporation coming in and acquiring this land by transfer or grant, and this transfer or grant, or whatever it is, certainly was acquired by them with their eyes open.

Mr. WINGO. I venture this assertion, that you will find that this land has been offered to the Federal land bank for a loan and it has been turned down. You will find that that same mortgage company had its mortgage foreclosed and bought in the land at the sale. The mortgagor is trying to redeem under an agreement to repurchase, and is trying to get a loan from the Federal land bank. I think that a safe guess.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman assumes facts not before us.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman says he could not conceive of a situation where a corporation could have had adverse possession and was entitled to relief. Suppose they bought it outright?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then they bought it with their eyes open, but——

Mr. WINGO. Then, if the corporation bought it with their eyes open, they are entitled to as much relief as the individual.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How easy it would be for a corporation to take over land of this kind cheaply, by reason of the very defect in title, and hold it, in order to establish adverse possession, the necessary length of time, and then have the cloud removed and the value greatly enhanced.

Mr. WINGO. I think if we had a situation like that, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] would not be a party to a conspiracy with a corporation to acquire public land.

Mr. COLTON. I desire to say I have made no statement that there was no corporation involved. I do not see why, if a corporation acquired the same kind of land as an individual, they are not entitled to the same relief as the individual.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The purpose of the relief would be entirely different.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There has been so much time consumed, I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. YON. There is a question I want to ask. Down in my State—Florida—a corporation can be formed by three persons. They can incorporate for any purpose. They can run a dairy farm or a farm of any kind, run any kind of business; and for the purpose of business you would say that a man, his son, and his wife might be in possession of this land and have a dairy farm or a farm of any kind on it; and under the terms of that kind of a corporation the people living on that land would not have the right of an individual to buy the land in question. Does the gentleman wish to prevent that kind of a corporation getting benefits under terms of this bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would say this language inserted in the bill would provide proper relief; if individuals hold adversely and improve the property, it is the clear intent of the bill that they should get relief. I agree with that.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, in my State we have lands of this kind where Spanish settlers settled on the land a hundred years ago, just as these settlers have settled here. We have passed bills in Congress for several years permitting them to make proof of title to the land. There is no question but that if these titles be passed down through years and years the parties purchasing that land have the right of the former settlers, if the parties in possession make the proof that the department requires. If they can show that they are in possession, then the Government can convey title by a quitclaim patent. Suppose a railroad were involved, which had a right of way on some of these lands. It would be the same.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Gentlemen assume facts that are not in evidence here.

Mr. MORROW. No. The department establishes certain rules under which they require that proof shall be made. They must prove up just as the original homesteader, that they are in possession and have acquired title to these lands; and this legislation further requires that they must be in possession for 20 years under the Michigan law.

Mr. MICHENER. This Congress passed a bill relating to land in New Mexico last year in language similar to this bill. There is nothing new in this. It is in regular form. It is just a question of clearing paper title. It is a paper defect. The Government does not claim anything. This is for the sole purpose of helping an innocent holder, a really bone fide holder, a man in possession, who, through his predecessors in title, has been in possession for 50 or 75 years, so that if he wants to borrow some money on the land, or dispose of the land, he can meet the technical objection of the lawyer passing upon the title.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I do not think that we should indicate that we are enemies of all corporations. A corporation having possession of land covered by this bill is entitled to the same relief as an individual owner.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SCHAFER. Not now. I must hasten along so as not to delay the defeat of this discriminatory amendment.

I was tempted to offer an amendment to include the State of Wisconsin, because we have a situation in our State which can be cleared up if this bill would apply to Wisconsin. However, after consulting with the chairman of the committee, I think I will follow his views and in the future introduce a bill to take care of Wisconsin. We have many property holders in the Lake districts who think they have title to their summer resort property, but find on checking their deeds and the descriptions that they do not hold clear title. I hope that when I introduce a bill for the relief of the people of Wisconsin the Members of the House will show the same spirit toward that bill as toward the one pending.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Wisconsin has discussed the rights of corporations. I do not think we ought to discuss the bill any further. It would be out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPROUL of Kansas: Page 1, line 3, after the word "that," insert the word "if."

Mr. COLTON. I think that amendment ought to be agreed to. That was a clerical error in omitting the word "if."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEAVITT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 13899) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COLTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following date the President approved and signed a bill of the House of the following title:

On January 16, 1929:

H. R. 8974. An act authorizing the President to order Oren W. Rynearson before a retiring board for a hearing of his case and upon the findings of such board determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his resignation.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 1156. An act granting a pension to Lois I. Marshall; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1640. An act for the relief of certain persons formerly having interests in Baltimore and Harford Counties, Md.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4528. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to employ engineers and economists for consultation purposes on important reclamation work; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

S. 4979. An act to authorize the city of Niobrara, Nebr., to transfer Niobrara Island to the State of Nebraska; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 5060. An act to aid the Grand Army of the Republic in its Memorial Day services, May 30, 1929; to the Committee on Appropriations.

S. 5110. An act validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5146. An act to reserve certain lands on the public domain in Santa Fe County, N. Mex., for the use and benefit of the Indians of the San Ildefonso Pueblo; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 5147. An act to reserve 920 acres on the public domain for the use and benefit of the Kanosh Band of Indians residing in the vicinity of Kanosh, Utah; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 5180. An act to authorize the payment of interest on certain funds held in trust by the United States for Indian tribes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 4280. An act to correct military record of John W. Cleavenger, deceased;

H. R. 5528. An act to enable electricians, radioelectricians, chief electricians, and chief radioelectricians to be appointed to the grade of ensign;

H. R. 5617. An act to limit date of filing claims for retainer pay;

OIL AND GAS PROSPECTING PERMITS AND LEASES

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up H. R. 479, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant certain oil and gas prospecting permits and leases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah calls up a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House, therefore, automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 479, with Mr. MICHENER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 479, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant either prospecting permits or leases under the terms and conditions of section 19 of the act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 437), to any claimant of title under the placer mining laws to the northeast quarter and north half of southwest quarter of section 5; the east half of northeast quarter and northeast quarter of southeast quarter of section 6; the southwest quarter of northeast quarter, south half of northwest quarter, and southeast quarter of section 29; the southeast quarter of section 30; the east half of section 31; and the north half and southeast quarter of section 32, in township 51 north of range 100 west, sixth principal meridian, in the State of Wyoming: Provided, That satisfactory evidence be submitted of entire good faith of such claimant under the mining laws, although without such evidence of discovery as to satisfy said Secretary of the claimant's right to a patent; also that said lands were not reserved or withdrawn at date of initiation of mining claims thereto; also that applications for such permits or leases be filed within six months from date of this enactment, and that at date of such filing the area covered thereby be free from any valid adverse claim of any third person.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. WINTER].

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Chairman, the language of this bill is general, but the report on file shows that it is for the relief of a certain company known as the Oregon Basin Oil & Gas Co. The reason the bill is designed to benefit a particular company is the equitable consideration of large expenditures made upon a certain oil structure. The attitude of the department is given in the final paragraph of the report, as follows:

While the department is of the opinion that the discovery alleged in the applications is insufficient to warrant the issuance of mineral patents to the applicant which would transfer title to the land covered by the claims in fee, the bona fides of the applicant company have never been questioned and no objection will be interposed to legislation which will give the company an opportunity to file applications for permits or leases for consideration under section 19 of the act of February 25, 1920.

To state the effect of the bill in a single sentence, if I can, it is to extend the period during which this company may apply for a prospecting permit under the terms of section 19 of the general leasing act, so that the company may now make such application notwithstanding the fact that the period for so doing has expired. The general leasing act provides that applicants under section 19 must make their applications within six months after the passage of the act.

Now, the situation with reference to this company was that it was in process of developing this field under original mining locations before the general mineral leasing act was passed. During the progress of this work it expended over $200,000. It believed and assumed it had complied in every way with the law necessary to secure a patent. The department concedes that it complied with the law in every respect for a patent with the exception of the sufficiency of the discovery. The company assuming that it had a sufficient discovery proceeded through the usual channels of the Department of the Interior to ask for a patent.

A patent was finally refused by the Secretary on the ground that there had not been a sufficient oil discovery. The matter was taken into court upon the theory that the court might review the action of the Secretary as it involved, in the judgment of the company's attorneys, a question of law as well as of fact, but the ultimate determination in the court was that it was a pure question of fact as to the sufficiency of the amount of oil discovered, so that the decision of the Secretary was final. In the meantime the time expired in which the company could surrender its rights and claims for a patent and make application for a permit or a lease under section 19. Therefore when the decision finally came they were without the time limit. So this legislation, in view of their expenditure of something over $200,000 and good faith throughout the proceedings, in effect is to permit them now to make such application. The legislation is not mandatory or directory but permissive only, giving the Secretary the discretion, if in his judgment he deems it proper, to issue a permit or lease under section 19. The legislation prohibits the Secretary from granting a permit or lease if there are any valid adverse claims. I know of no adverse claimants, and if there are any such I am not familiar with the fact.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINTER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. The gentleman spoke of the expenditure of $200,000 by this corporation. Was that $200,000 spent in the development of oil or was it spent in the formation of the corporation?

Mr. WINTER. I am very glad the gentleman asked that question. It was spent absolutely on improvements, as the report of the Secretary shows, of roads and pipe lines for the carrying of gas and steam and the installation of drilling apparatus of various kinds, and actually drilling on the ground.

Mr. HUDSON. The reason I make the inquiry is that it seems to me that by the expenditure of such a vast sum of money they would have been able to determine whether there was a sufficient amount of oil in the field to give them the right to a patent.

Mr. WINTER. I may say to the gentleman that in this particular field subsequent events proved that they had to drill 3,000 and 4,000 feet to get permanent oil.

Mr. HUDSON. And the amount spent for drilling was a part of the $200,000?

Mr. WINTER. Yes; that is my information.

Mr. HUDSON. Does this legislation tie it up to this corporation to the exclusion of anybody else?

Mr. WINTER. There was opportunity for anyone to come in who desired to oppose the bill before the House committee, and there will be further opportunity before the Senate committee, and, finally, if it becomes a law the Secretary himself, upon application of any other person, will hold a hearing before he exercises his power under this act. If he refuses then to exercise his discretion, the present situation will not have been changed, and the rights of all persons will be the same as they are to-day.

Mr. HUDSON. It seems to me that with those two points cleared up that this expenditure was made in the definite development of the field rather than in the promotion of the company, and does not bar others, that perhaps the bill ought to pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINTER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All the gentleman from Michigan has said is so good and so clear why would it not be a good plan not to limit this to a particular section? This is a bill limiting these privileges to a certain section, and if the opportunity for inquiry in the Senate and in the hearings before the committee is sufficient, why should not a bill of this kind be written as a blanket bill to permit the same thing to be done anywhere?

Mr. HUDSON. If the gentleman from Wyoming will yield for me to answer that I will say I think that might be true as well of the previous bill passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is all good piece by piece but not otherwise.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield to me for a question?

Mr. WINTER. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Unfortunately, I was not able to hear all the gentleman's statement with reference to this bill, but as I understand the latter part of his statement, it is a bill giving to this corporation the right to again file with the Secretary of the Interior an application for what rights?

Mr. WINTER. For a permit or a lease to a certain area of land of about 1,600 acres. They never did file an application for a permit or lease. This would be their first application, but in carrying on the procedure for a patent through the Department of the Interior and the courts, and before a final decision or determination was made, the time limit under the general leasing act expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But did not the gentleman state that the department, after a very thorough investigation of all the facts in the case, had decided that under existing law these people had no right to make this application?

Mr. WINTER. No right to a patent. The decision was not against an application for a permit or lease, but against an application for a patent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does this bill give them the right to make application for patent?

Mr. WINTER. No; that right is forever gone, and they must now come in under the general leasing act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why does the gentleman assume that if this right is again given them there will be any change in the facts or that there should be any change in the decision of the department with reference to the matter?

Mr. WINTER. Because the first was an application for a patent, in which case the Government would have no interest further in the land, while under an application for a permit or a lease, the Government has all of its interest in royalties, as set forth in the general leasing act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do not the facts disclose that this corporation slept upon its legal rights in failing to take advantage of the law within the time?

Mr. WINTER. They probably could not simultaneously carry on their procedure for a patent and also file an application for a lease.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not this legislation proscribe any other applicant from making application until the rights of this corporation are determined under this legislation?

Mr. WINTER. Under the facts and conditions of this case I do not believe any other applicants would be in a position to ask for a lease under section 19, or under section 13, as it is now a proven structure. They would not be barred from full right to be heard before the Secretary in opposition to the exercise of his power under this act and in favor of a right to bid at public auction for a lease under section 17.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That does not answer my question. The gentleman answers it indirectly, but if this bill were enacted would it not deprive any other applicant for these rights from making original application until the question of the right of this corporation was determined by the department under this legislation?

Mr. WINTER. No; I think not, because it leaves the entire matter discretionary with the Secretary, who may hold hearings and hear all parties or applicants and grant a lease to anyone under section 17 if he chooses to do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is there any evidence that oil actually exists on this acreage?

Mr. WINTER. It is surrounded by areas which have been developed and are now producing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And it is still a part of the public domain?

Mr. WINTER. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. Is it not a fact that the department is precluded from considering the equities of anyone in these particular lands without legislation of this kind——

Mr. WINTER. Yes; I think that is true.

Mr. COLTON (continuing). If this legislation is not passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that is true, then I will ask the chairman of the committee why he does not bring in some general legislation affecting this matter? This is probably a question which is constantly arising before the department for construction, and it seems to me the duty is upon the Public Lands Committee to bring in some general legislation correcting this situation and giving the department general authority to act in cases of this sort.

Mr. COLTON. I doubt very much the wisdom of a bill of that kind. In fact, I know of no other cases that have arisen. None has been called to my attention. Moreover, even if it were made general, the department might be bothered or have applications made in a good many cases that have no merit. This particular case seems to have a great deal of merit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the gentleman I have no personal interest in this matter——

Mr. COLTON. I appreciate that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But in times past we have heard a good deal about oil lands in the country and their disposition and I thought it might be pertinent to make some inquiries.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Will the chairman of the committee yield for a question?

Mr. COLTON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I have been interested to know whether or not the land in question at this time is open for any kind of an entry?

Mr. COLTON. I understand it has not been restored to entry or application pending the result of this legislation; but, as a matter of fact, these applications for patents have been denied. I doubt that it is open for entry at the present time. Perhaps the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. WINTER] could answer that.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. That is a matter I would like to know about; whether or not if I go to the Land Office now I would be permitted to make a filing.

Mr. WINTER. The gentleman would not at this time for the reason that if this legislation does not pass ultimately this land would be advertised under section 17 of the mineral act, which provides for public auction and a lease to the highest qualified bidder.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. The gentleman's answer is very clear as to that situation. Let me ask the gentleman this further question: Suppose this legislation passes, will there ever be a time when I could go to the Land Office and make a filing until after the people who are to be benefited by this legislation have declined to take advantage of the privileges extended to them by this act?

Mr. WINTER. By "making an entry" the gentleman means an application for a lease?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. To acquire any title that would enable me to explore the land for oil.

Mr. WINTER. I think I can quote from the report directly in answer to that:

> The question may be asked just what disposal would be made of the lands involved in event this bill should fail of enactment.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. That is not my question. I am assuming that the land is not open for entry, and I think the gentleman has so admitted. I further assume that the bill will pass both branches of Congress and become a law. Will there be any time when I can go to the proper land office and make a filing or application for a lease to explore the land for oil until after the party to be benefited has declined to take advantage of the privilege given by this act. In other words, if this bill is enacted into law, have you not foreclosed the right of the rest of the world to make application or do anything until after the corporation has declined to take advantage of the benefits extended by this legislation?

Mr. WINTER. If I understand the gentleman correctly, no; because the corporation is not given any rights it can enforce. It is all left to the discretion of the Secretary. The object of the legislation is to give the Secretary authority to grant a permit or lease to the company if he finds that under all the circumstances the company is equitably entitled to it.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. And the excuse for that is that they have acted heretofore in good faith and are therefore entitled to occupy it against the rest of the world, because in good faith they have expended their money in developing oil.

Mr. COLTON. Until their equities have been determined by the department.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. The state of the equities has been determined because the Government refused to issue patents, and therefore the land would be restored to the public domain.

Mr. COLTON. No. If they had made application for a lease in the time prescribed their equities would undoubtedly have entitled them to preferential rights for a lease. This bill is simply to restore them to that right—to extend the time for making the applications, so to speak.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Does the gentleman think the equities are such that we should forego the proposition that we are all presumed to know the law?

Mr. COLTON. There is this further thought. These people evidently believed that they had complied with the law to the extent that they were entitled to a patent. They had expended $500 on each claim and proceeded on that theory until there was a judicial decision that they had not complied with the law. Then they found that they had lost the opportunity to apply for a lease.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. That is what I wanted to bring out, to see if good faith had been shown. Under the proposed law the Government, as a matter of fact, will benefit by it more than it would had patent been issued.

Mr. WINTER. To the extent of getting a minimum of 12½ per cent on the gross production.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. That is what I wanted to make plain. The Government does not lose anything and it will benefit by the legislation.

Mr. WINTER. May I say in conclusion there is a precedent for this bill in the act of Congress approved September 15, 1922 (42 Stat. 844), and June 26, 1926 (44 Stat. pt. 3, 1621).

By the first of said amendatory acts the provisions of section 18a of the leasing act was extended to include certain lands in Utah which had been included in a withdrawal order other than that mentioned in the original leasing act.

Now, the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Finney, says:

> Now, in that situation the only thing the department could do with those lands which have been demonstrated to contain oil by these claimants would be to put the lands up at auction, under section 17 of the leasing act, and dispose of them at competitive bidding, which would seem hardly fair to those who have spent money and drilled the wells. For that reason the department reported that it had no objection to the enactment of this law, which would permit all these people to present their claims and permit the President to make some adjustment under the provision of section 18a.

The facts differ just a little there; it came under another relief provision of the general law. This is under section 19, whereas this precedent was under section 18a.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to get things a little bit more clear in my mind. The last portion of the bill makes provision in this way:

> Also that applications for such permits or leases be filed within six months from date of this enactment and that at date of such filing the area covered thereby be free from any valid adverse claim of any third person.

Does the gentleman from Wyoming know whether or not, as a matter of fact, there are any adverse claims, either valid or otherwise, pending upon the part of other parties to these entries?

Mr. WINTER. My information is that there are none.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any member of the committee demand recognition in opposition to the bill? If not, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York for one hour.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the hour, and thus I can relieve the anxiety of the committee to that extent. If we pass bills of this kind, Mr. Chairman, we might as well close the Department of the Interior, abolish all existing laws, and take it upon ourselves to decide against questions of this kind. This claim was rejected by the Commissioner of the General Land Office for lack of discovery, and the decision was affirmed on February 1, 1924. The company in question then took the case to the courts, and in the case of the Oregon Basin Oil & Gas Co. v. Secretary of the Interior et al., decided May 4, 1925 (55 App. D. C. 373), on appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, it was held that, reading from the syllabus:

> Whether discovery of oil on a particular location is legally sufficient to entitle discoverer to patent is question of fact, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, whose decision is conclusive on courts, unless arbitrary, capricious, or induced by fraud or imposition.

The question of capriciousness or fraud was not involved in the decision of the Secretary of the Interior. Further:

> Finding by Secretary of the Interior that oil discovered in well at depths of 45 and 434 feet did not warrant issuance of patent to discoverer, notwithstanding discoveries on adjacent claims at much greater depths and from formations unconnected with formations penetrated by wells of discoverer, held conclusive on courts.

The action of the Secretary of the Interior was affirmed. The Oregon Basin Oil & Gas Co. then took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States which court on January 24, 1927, affirmed the decision of the lower court. It was entirely a matter of fact. If Congress is to devote its time and consideration to setting aside first the decision of the Secretary of the Interior rendered in accordance with existing provisions of law, and which law gives the aggrieved party a right of review in the courts, and the courts have decided adversely to the discoverer on appeal taken even to the Supreme Court of the United States, then we will upset our entire system of supervision of final adjudication vested by law in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In a moment. I want to voice my opposition to this bill. I shall vote against it on a division vote. I serve notice that I shall move to strike out the enacting clause. We are deciding this great question of fact and we have not the hearings before us. We have not all of the information, and by actual count there are only 24 Members of the House present. Even if I should ask for a roll call, Members coming into the Chamber unadvised, naturally and properly, in accordance with custom, would follow the committee. We are simply helpless in the matter. I yield now to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ASWELL. Does the Secretary of the Interior approve this legislation?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; he does in substance.

Mr. ASWELL. If this bill should be enacted into law, would it not leave the whole matter still in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They have had their opportunity once.

Mr. ASWELL. It is still in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It was there once, and he has decided it.

Mr. WINTER. The thing that was fought in the courts was a patent. This legislation has nothing to do with the issuance of a patent. It is another matter entirely. It is merely a prospecting permit or lease under the general leasing act, under which the Government will receive royalties. We are not attempting to do that which the courts refused. They refused the application of this company for a patent. Therefore we have abandoned that ground entirely, and the company comes here under this great expenditure asking for an equitable consideration and that it may now be allowed to apply under the leasing act for a permit.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman know that the law is very broad and rather generous to prospectors or discoverers, and that this company has had all of the privileges that other discoverers have? If it had been an individual and not able to proceed with the case after it had lost it in the courts, the matter would not be before us at all. The only good part of this bill is the support that it received from the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming, who has great influence in this House. I would like to go along with the gentleman from Wyoming, but I can not do so, and can only voice my feeble and ineffective protest in this manner.

Mr. WINTER. I want the gentleman to clearly understand that this legislation does not seek to do that which the courts refuse. That is an entirely different matter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is simply giving this company a special privilege, which it is not entitled to under existing law, for an opportunity to start all over again.

Mr. WINTER. I submit in all fairness that years of work and an expenditure of $200,000 under these conditions does present a situation here which deserves special legislation to permit them now to come in under the general leasing act.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am convinced that the gentleman believes that otherwise he would not have fathered the bill.

Mr. WINTER. If this is not passed, someone else will get the benefit of the permit or lease, who never contributed a dollar to the development of that field. This company was the demonstrator of the fact that this field was an oil field.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Like other prospectors?

Mr. COLTON. If you will permit this observation: I think the gentleman from New York will recognize that if this company had not thought that it was entitled to patents, it could have made application for a lease and have received the same preference right from the Federal Government that it will receive if this bill becomes a law. It is only a matter of placing the company where it would have been had it not believed it was not entitled to a patent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me ask, this company gets the title?

Mr. COLTON. Just the right to lease.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Or re-lease from the Federal Government?

Mr. COLTON. It gives to the Secretary of the Interior the right to consider the case and if the company is entitled to a lease, then he would undoubtedly authorize the lease.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman think of anything in the nature of a permit that would apply to the vast domain in Alaska that might be found to be capable of leasing, which is now lying open all the time? Here is a bill which slips through, and here is a great area in Alaska with people living there who want to extend an invitation to capital and prospectors to open it up.

Mr. COLTON. I agree with the gentleman in regard to Alaska. I have never been enthusiastically in favor of the leasing law, but it is the law. I am in favor of this bill. May I take a second to call attention to the statement of the Secretary of the Interior making a report on this bill. He says:

> The bona fides of the applicant company have never been questioned, and no objection will be interposed to legislation which will give the company an opportunity to file the application for permits or leases for consideration under section 19 of the act of February 25, 1920.

In other words, to give them the right to lease they would have had had they made application within the time.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question? I have understood from the gentleman from Wyoming that these people have expended $200,000 and have developed an oil field there?

Mr. WINTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Now, in the event Congress does not grant this relief within this particular time, the land will be open to be filed on by somebody else, and they will get the benefit of the expenditure by these people. Now, in that event, would the Government get any more under the lease to some other person than if it were given to these people?

Mr. WINTER. If somebody else were granted a permit under section 13 of the leasing act, they would be entitled to one-fourth of the area under a 5 per cent royalty; while in event the lease is given to these people, the Government will have a minimum of 12½ per cent royalty of the entire area.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. So that if we do not grant this relief the Government loses and some other individual or company would get the benefit, so there could not be any advantage to the Government; is that it?

Mr. WINTER. No advantage.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Well, it looks to me like the Government will not be hurt; and if these people have expended $200,000, I can not see why the Government should not grant this relief.

Mr. COLTON. The Government will really gain over what it would have had if the original applications for patents had been allowed.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. So if this bill passes, it ought to be to the advantage of the Government. And then the law protects the rights of those people who went in there and who, according to the report, spent some $200,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And why not in this bill extend an apology to the oil company? It is just a matter of fair and impartial administration of the law. That is all that is involved in it.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is just a matter of a fair and impartial administration of the law. That is all that is involved.

Mr. ARENTZ. I will say that the gentleman from New York is perfectly right. In many of these cases the Government should apologize. Men who have come in good faith and spent $200,000 on a proposition and have discovered oil on this land bringing in revenues to the Government for 50 years have a little bit of right, I should say, over a perfect stranger.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman says these men have made discoveries that will produce for 50 years and have brought in revenues to the Government?

Mr. ARENTZ. I say these people who have opened an oil field which will be there for 50 years are entitled to some consideration on the part of the Federal Government. They ought to have some right over a perfect stranger.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If it is going to be to the advantage of this Government, why should these citizens who have paid out $50,000 be denied this privilege and equity?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, unless some further time is desired, I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the enacting clause. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MICHENER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 479) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant certain oil and gas prospecting permits and leases, had directed him to report the bill back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 3.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. COLTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LAND GRANT FOR MINERS' HOSPITAL IN UTAH

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 15732.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah calls up the bill H. R. 15732, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H. R. 15732) making an additional grant of lands for a miners' hospital for disabled miners of the State of Utah, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill being on the Union Calendar, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15732, with Mr. MICHENER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15732, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the provisions made by the act of Congress approved July 16, 1894 (28 Stat. L. 110), for a miners' hospital for disabled miners, there is hereby granted to the State of Utah, subject to all the conditions and limitations of the original grant, an additional 50,000 acres for a miners' hospital for disabled miners to be selected by the State, under the direction and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, from vacant nonmineral surveyed unreserved public lands of the United States in the State of Utah.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, when the State of Utah was admitted to the Union, under the enabling act, the State was given certain land grants for the benefit of various State institutions. All of the grants made were for 100,000 acres or more, except in the particular case of the grant for a miners' hospital. Only $50,000 was granted for this purpose.

I have taken the trouble to examine the proceedings at that time, but I do not know why this small grant was made for this purpose. I will say, however, that in pursuance of the grant that was given the State has sold these lands for the best price obtainable at the time and realized therefrom about $82,447. The State land board has sold practically the entire acreage. Those lands were sold many years ago. The enabling act provides that the principal must remain intact and only the interest may be used for the objects and the purposes of the grant, namely, the establishing and maintaining a miners' hospital. Under this arrangement the interest on this money has now reached about the sum of $88,853. The interest exceeds the principal. After nearly 30 years it is not sufficient to build the hospital.

We have in the State of Utah a great mining industry. The mining industry is the second largest industry in the State. There are to-day 140 disabled miners receiving or needing hospitalization in the State. We are unable to provide that hospitalization with the funds that have been granted for the purpose; and the purpose of this bill is to increase the grant to the same number of acres that was given to other institutions at the time the State was admitted to the Union. The workmen's compensation act does not reach this class of disabilities. My State is doing all it reasonably can for this class of cases, but we need help.

All of the safeguards that I think could surround the bill have been placed in it. It must be nonmineral, unreserved, public land. The Members of the House perhaps may be interested in knowing that in my State 74 per cent of the land is owned by the Federal Government on which we realize no revenues whatever.

There are about 25,000,000 acres of land in the public domain from which this grant would be satisfied if the bill becomes law. These lands have no supervision whatever. Most of them are almost, if not quite, worthless for agricultural purposes and may be used only during certain parts of the year for grazing. It is out of that great area that this grant, if allowed, would be satisfied.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. What does the gentleman anticipate will be realized for the hospital out of any such grant?

Mr. COLTON. The State will probably not sell any of this land for less than $2.50 an acre. The principal could not be used for the construction of the hospital nor maintenance of it, but only the interest on the funds realized. There is a demand for land and we can probably get a better price than we did for the original lands granted to the State.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. The gentleman expects to get $2.50 an acre?

Mr. COLTON. About that, and more if we can.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows there is under way some reclamation development in the State. I am not sure to what extent, if any, this might in the future affect undeveloped public lands, but it would seem to me quite undesirable to permit lands that might later be included in a Federal reclamation project to be sold and go into private ownership through this bill, because the difficulty we now have with regard to reclamation projects is the handling of undeveloped privately owned lands. Also, there is the possibility of Federal use of some of these lands in connection with Bryce Canyon National Park and, perhaps, Zion National Park, but I have particularly in mind Bryce Canyon National Park.

Certain gentlemen have been interested in some expansion of the Bryce Canyon National Park, and it has been urged that there is land of suitable character adjacent to it. So it seems to me it would be quite undesirable to permit the State to select lands that thus go into private ownership if we are likely later to want to get them back for public uses.

I notice the bill provides that the selection shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Of course, that gives enough discretion to the Secretary so that he can protect the situation, but I am not at all sure he would have that thought in mind. What can the gentleman suggest as to that?

Mr. COLTON. As the gentleman knows, the present policy of the Secretary of the Interior is to extend the activities of the Reclamation Service into those areas which have already passed into private ownership. In other words, there are no new projects, so far as I know, being contemplated to reclaim wholly virgin lands. I think that is particularly true in my State. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan that it ought not to extend to cases such as he has mentioned. I do not think it would, and I think the Secretary of the Interior would have full authority under this bill to see that it does not include lands which are now included in reclamation projects or which will hereafter, as a matter of fact, come under reclamation projects.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is no doubt about his authority if he will only give thought to that phase of the question. I know that the Salt Lake Basin project is under development, and it is very possible that some public lands might be mixed with that project. It is difficult to reach the situation by language. The best I have been able to do is to suggest at the end of the bill the following language:

And not to include lands that are likely to be needed hereafter for inclusion in Federal reclamation or national park projects.

Mr. COLTON. I see no particular objection to such an amendment. That would give a chance for a study and classification of the lands before action is taken and would challenge the attention of the department to that class of lands.

Mr. CRAMTON. It would at least challenge their attention to this thought.

Mr. COLTON. Yes; it would do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: At the end of line 12 strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "And not to include lands that are likely to be needed hereafter for inclusion in Federal reclamation or national park projects."

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is not the wording too broad—"likely to be needed"?

Mr. CRAMTON. What the amendment tries to do is something that can not be covered in a hard and fast way. The principal thing is to challenge their attention. It would still be in the discretion of the Secretary, but this would challenge his attention to the possibility of needing the lands for reclamation or national-park purposes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman understands that in making it as broad as he does he makes it broad both ways. The amendment gives the Secretary, after all, a great deal of latitude, both in reserving land and in saying that at the present time there is no likelihood of its ever being used.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] suggested language that I think might go even further than this. I think when you say "likely" then the Secretary considers existing and proposed reclamation projects and existing parks and will give thought to the possibility of needing the land. If there is not any likelihood of it being needed, I would not expect him to exclude it.

Mr. COLTON. I understand that it would simply challenge the attention of the Secretary of the Interior and that he would not likely approve State selections of land that might be included in a reclamation or national-park project.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want him to consider that phase of the matter.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. If it will serve the purpose which the gentleman has in mind, well and good; but I think the gentleman will agree with me that it is not good legislative phraseology.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will agree that it does not tie the hands of the Secretary. The discretion is still in his hands, and the determination of the likelihood is in his hands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MICHENER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15732) making an additional grant of lands for a miners' hospital for disabled miners of the State of Utah, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COLTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ASSESSMENT OF BENEFITS AGAINST PUBLIC LANDS AND LANDS HERETOFORE OWNED BY THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10657) to authorize the assessment of levee, road, drainage, and other improvement-district benefits against certain lands and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Government of the United States to the levy of special assessments based upon benefits estimated to be derived from local levee, drainage, road, and other improvement districts within the boundaries of the St. Francis levee district of Arkansas, within the State of Arkansas, is hereby expressed and given. The laws of the State of Arkansas levying such special assessments and providing for the enforcement of such levy and the establishment of a lien and all the remedies pertaining thereto are expressly cured, confirmed, ratified, and established.

This act, however, shall not operate to permit the collection of any special assessment for tax from the United States Government nor from any person as to any tract of land until the date when the entryman or purchaser is entitled to a patent from the Government for such tract of land. The special assessment or tax shall not operate against the Government of the United States, but shall take effect and be in force as soon as the equitable title to any particular tract of land involved shall have passed from the United States to such entryman or purchaser and such entryman or purchaser may be entitled to patent therefor.

SEC. 2. All the acts, assessments, and proceedings in substantial accordance with the laws of Arkansas, and all the assessments of benefits against such lands, are hereby cured and confirmed, and the same shall not be set aside, vacated, or annulled by any court for want of jurisdiction or any irregularity in the proceedings or on account of the fact that the lands were not subject to assessment at the time the assessments were made or attempted to be made, or for any other ground or for any cause whatsoever, and the consent of the Government of the United States is expressed thereto subject to the conditions aforesaid.

SEC. 3. This act shall be available to the St. Francis levee district of Arkansas, and to any such improvement district within the boundaries of the St. Francis levee district heretofore created or hereafter created as expressing the consent of the Government to the special assessments fixed substantially in accordance with the laws of Arkansas.

SEC. 4. That in all cases where there has been a foreclosure of the liens of any improvement district and said lands have been purchased by the said districts, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon proof of such sale and purchase and upon the payment of the sum of $5 per acre, together with the usual fees and commissions charged entry of lands under the homestead laws, where such payment has not heretofore been made, to execute to said district or districts a patent to said lands; and in all cases of future foreclosures and purchases by said districts it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the payment of a like sum and proof of the foreclosure and purchase by the said districts, to execute to them patents for the lands so purchased upon the expiration of the period of redemption.

SEC. 5. If any portion of this act be held unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the remaining provisions of the act.

SEC. 6. This act shall repeal all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith and shall take effect forthwith.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as the gentleman may desire to use to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DRIVER].

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this legislation arises from a decision of the Supreme Court rendered in 1926, in the case of Lee against The Osceola & Little River Improvement District, in Arkansas. This decision is reported at page 643, volume 268, of the United States Supreme Court Reports. It involves the right to levy improvement taxes on lands formerly owned by the Government in that area.

These lands were created by earth disturbances in 1911 and 1912. I mean that the conditions which exist there are due to the disturbances at that period of time. The disturbances were known as the New Madrid earthquake and affected certain areas in northeast Arkansas, southeast Missouri, and west Tennessee. Possibly some of you gentlemen will recall the celebrated Reelfoot Lake region of Tennessee, a very great fowl resort, created at the same time.

The result was to lower certain areas in this country and cause them to become drainage basins for the higher elevations around about them. The lands of this country are alluvial, in the Mississippi Valley, practically level, but, of course, with some little depressions and slight elevations running through them. These lands were heavily timbered at the time of this disturbance and while the water standing in the basins killed the growth of timber, which was such as you find on the adjacent higher elevations, still evidences remained there of the fact that at one period of time it was comparable with the higher lands of the region.

Levees were constructed along the Mississippi River front which prevented an overflow from the river. These levees were of such size as to protect these lands against the ordinary floods of the river and caused the lands gradually to become uncovered. When it was manifestly possible to reclaim this land, local levee districts and drainage districts were organized, and these lands were embraced within such districts. Artificial canals were provided at great expense to the owners. These lands were uncovered. When it became evident the Government had interest in the land investigation was made by the land department, with the result that certain suits were instituted under Government claim of title.

Under the law of Arkansas, the title of a riparian owner extends to the thread of the stream on all nonnavigable waters. These riparian owners claimed title to the areas that had been marked by the United States Government surveyors between 1836 and 1847. When the surveys were made and they were plotted as lakes and meandered as lakes, and therefore the individual owners asserted title to the property.

When the Government's claim of title was successfully asserted to the lands they were resurveyed and thrown open to homestead and the people occupied the land. They have made their homes there and in most instances they have improved them, and the improvement districts are responsible entirely for the value of the land.

When they were included in the improvement districts, there was one man within the area who declined to pay the improvement tax. The taxes were annually paid by the people and they were going along enjoying the improvements. This man Lee raised the question of the right of the State to levy a charge on the lands that were Government lands at the time of the organization of these districts. The Supreme Court sustained his contention, leaving the districts in just this attitude. The cost of the reclaimed lands were included in the general estimates of the expense of the work.

Bonds were sold on the strength of the values, including the land. They are in the hands of purchasers generally. Now, when the lands are exempt from their part of the burden, necessarily the land adjoining, the higher land, which is less benefited, must pay the proportion of the tax levied on the 25,000 acres of land formerly Government land.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. The lands that get the exemption from taxation are the ones benefited by the expenditure of the money.

Mr. DRIVER. Yes; the greatest benefit, and without the reclamation work the lands would be absolutely valueless. The work has been completed and they have paid for many years.

The policy of the district is this: Not to levy a dollar of improvement tax on any of the former Government land that is not actually and has not actually ripened into title. The bill safeguards to the extent of providing that no part of the levy can be placed on any land not entitled to a patent.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. In what position does that place Lee?

Mr. DRIVER. It seeks to place him in the attitude of others and makes him pay his part.

Now, the Interior Department has made an adverse report on this bill; notwithstanding the fact that I communicated with Judge Finney and went over the matter with him, he seems not to have grasped the actual situation. He seems to think that the whole proposition is a matter of relief from flood damages. The levees in front of the property held in 1927, and the only damage we sustained, was through a break in the State of Missouri, which did not involve this district in any way.

Then there is another objection—if I do not correctly state it, I will ask to be corrected—the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] seems to think that this bill makes a change of policy. That is predicated on one of two assumptions; one is that the Government land ought not to be levied on without the right having previously been granted.

That was done on some of the areas, but they simply overlooked that fact with respect to these areas. North of this there were certain lands owned by the Government where authority was given by Congress to levy the taxes in advance of occupancy of the homesteader. That was a charge on the land and they were required to pay it. In this instance this was not done. That would be one of the reasons. The other reason that I could conceive is the fact that this bill provides that when the lands are not paid on, if such a thing should occur, and the district authorized under our law to become the purchaser of delinquent lands to protect themselves, they would have the right to go to the department and secure a paper title to these lands, upon the payment of $5 per acre for the land. You gentlemen can readily see the necessity of this legislation. What effect would the improvement district get out of a proceeding in our local courts and the right to condemn and sell the property for their failure to pay these assessments, unless they could secure title through which they could pay and get returns for the amount of money charged against the lands?

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Does this relate to the invalidity of past special assessments?

Mr. DRIVER. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Do you make any distinction as between future assessments?

Mr. DRIVER. Not at all, because it provides that the assessments may be placed on those lands when the title ripens only, and not against the Government lands, but against the occupant of those lands once the title ripens.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. How far do you go back?

Mr. DRIVER. We fix a limitation that it can not be charged except from the time the title ripens.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. When you are making an assessment you are making it with reference to the assessment you have already made against the land in private ownership, and that assessment may be 5 or 10 years past.

Mr. DRIVER. So far as private ownership, but as to these particular lands, we have a provision by which the districts are limited, in order to make this charge, when the title ripens in these parties, and no back taxes are to be paid. There is to be no effort to do that, because we are undertaking to deal with the matter just as fairly as possible, and those landowners can be entitled to no more than that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not clear on that. It was my impression that the collection of the tax would not be permitted, as section 1 says, until the date when the entryman or purchaser is entitled to a patent, but that does not necessarily prevent, and it is not understood that the bill prevents, the levying of the assessment and letting it accumulate and hang there, and then the minute he gets his title, stepping in and demanding payment. That has been my understanding.

Mr. DRIVER. If the gentleman has a fear that that will be the effect, I will work out with him now an amendment or let him offer an amendment that he knows will preclude that possibility, and I shall accept that amendment. All I want is a fair deal for the people who own the lands whose burden is going to be heavier. I am willing to stop it right there and state that they can not be assessed other than beginning now and in the future.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not arguing with the gentleman. I want to get an accurate understanding of the bill.

Mr. DRIVER. I know the gentleman's attitude is one of fairness and I have never complained about it.

Mr. CRAMTON. If there is not to be an accumulation of assessments, and not a levying of assessments until the title passes to the individual, after the title does pass, then what levies of assessment is the land to be subjected to?

Mr. DRIVER. Only to the taxes accruing from that day on, according to the assessments made.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am frank to say that this is a rather complicated question, and that I have not so clear an understanding about it, but I do not just see the advantage to the gentleman's people from the bill under that situation.

Mr. DRIVER. May I explain this to you, and I am stating this of my own knowledge?

Mr. CRAMTON. I suggest this for the gentleman's consideration, that without this bill, after the title passes, the land can be taxed and the assessment levied.

Mr. DRIVER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. That is exactly the thing that the Supreme Court of the United States says shall not be done, in the case I just quoted of Lee against The Improvement District.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not for work done before the title passed, but for improvements made afterwards.

Mr. DRIVER. No; you can not assess if that district was organized previous to the time the title passed from the Government, is the decision of the court. There is no doubt about that. We will not disagree, because if the gentleman will read that decision he will find that there is no way to resolve even a question of doubt about it.

Here is the thing that I started to say to you gentlemen in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]. These assessments have been paid up to the time and the year following the decision in the Lee case. Therefore I am in the attitude so that it will not impose any more burden on these land owners than the mere loss of two years' assessment on that property if I accept his amendment. These lands are free of any charge up to that time, and, of course, have been since.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. They paid without knowing.

Mr. DRIVER. They were not advised until the decision in the Lee case. It is necessary in our alluvial country to clean out our drainage canals at intervals, and therefore we have a law providing that may be done and reassessment made to the extent of the actual cost. So they undertook to levy under the right of reassessment and after the Lee case was decided and it was decided there was no authority to levy, and, of course, the result was that many refused to pay. And no man can criticize his fellow man where he is enjoying the benefit of money expended and works built, to decline to pay, after the other fellow would not; therefore all quit and left those whose land was least benefited to bear the burden. That is the attitude we are in. A further explanation. Some question has been raised about the legal effect of this bill. I have not placed myself in the attitude of going into that which possibly ought to be presented. I will say this to you: The attorneys—and they were men of eminence in our State—gathered together and agreed that if they had the authority of such enabling act by this Congress it would enable them to impress the lands, and I am relying on their judgment that with this authority they will be able to do so.

Mr. MERRITT. They think it is constitutional?

Mr. DRIVER. Yes, sir. I was in conference with them.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It would seem the Secretary of the Interior is under a misapprehension.

Mr. DRIVER. Entirely. I may say I discussed this situation in advance. I discussed it with Judge Finney, whose fairness can not be criticized by any man, but in some way he confused the matter with the idea of relief against flood damage. Of course, this has nothing in common with that and relates to the burdens carried by lands that should have been assessed but were not, and will increase the charges against those who were least benefited. Gentlemen, I am obliged to you for your attention. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. This is a House Calendar bill.

Mr. COLTON. I yield the gentleman 15 minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I asked time in opposition; however, I am not sure I would necessarily be in opposition to what the gentleman from Arkansas states he wants to do. I am not at all sure, however, that the bill does what the gentleman from Arkansas wants to do or that it is limited to that. My first impulse was in opposition to the establishment of a precedent to permit the collection of taxes from the Government upon Government property, and that policy we have accepted nowhere as yet. This bill does not seem to constitute such a policy. Then I feared the accumulation of burdens of assessment that would face the entryman when he receives his patent. The gentleman from Arkansas insists that such is not the purpose of the bill; and as to the purposes, as the gentleman himself states it, so far as any comprehension grasps it, I am not opposed.

But I think there is a grave doubt whether there is not something more involved. I have a great deal of confidence in the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DRIVER], but he admits that he has not thoroughly considered all those aspects. So far as the bill being drafted by eminent lawyers of his State goes, I have had opportunity to note that very frequently bills which are drawn in very noted law offices do not accomplish what they are intended to accomplish. Our duty is to give it a study here. The department has studied it, and the department is much more familiar than I am in reference to these questions, and they point out certain questions based on the language of the bill. That is what becomes the law—what the bill reads and not the intent of the gentleman from Arkansas or my intention—and they have pointed out things concerning which the committee does not seem to have made any effort to meet the views of the department. I have gone over the bill, and I am not able to read it as stated. For instance, in the first section, that very broad section, which says—

That the consent of the Government of the United States to the levy of special assessments based upon benefits estimated to be derived from local levee, drainage, roads, and other improvement districts.

As to that, the Interior Department raises a question about that provision, "other improvement districts," because there is no intimation as to the specific nature of those districts. Certainly the need is great to have what is intended specified. It ought to be specified.

Mr. DRIVER. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that our roads have been taken over by the State highway commission, and there is no possibility of levies by road districts.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is also referred to in their report with reference to special road taxes. But the bill further says:

The consent of the Government of the United States to the levy of special assessments based upon benefits estimated to be derived from local levee, drainage, road, and other improvement districts within the boundaries of the St. Francis Levee District of Arkansas, within the State of Arkansas, is hereby expressed and given. The laws of the State of Arkansas levying such special assessments and providing for the enforcement of such levies and the establishment of a lien and all the remedies pertaining thereto are expressly cured, confirmed, ratified, and established.

I have my doubts whether it is possible for the Federal Congress to cure an act of a State legislature. It is going a long way to attempt to cure defects in State legislation. Then the bill provides:

This act, however, shall not operate to permit the collection of any special assessment for tax from the United States Government nor from any person as to any tract of land until the date when the entryman or purchaser is entitled to a patent from the Government for such tract of land. The special assessment or tax shall not operate against the Government of the United States but shall take effect and be in force as soon as the equitable title to any particular tract of land involved shall have passed from the United States to such entryman or purchaser—

Not when he receives the patent, but when he is entitled to a patent for such tract—and such entryman or purchaser may be entitled to patent therefor.

Then section 2 provides that—

All the acts, assessments, and proceedings in substantial accordance with the laws of Arkansas, and all the assessments of benefits against such lands, are hereby cured and confirmed.

Now, if that does not apply to assessments heretofore made against these lands, what does it apply to? There is nothing to indicate but that the word "cured" applies to assessments heretofore made against such lands. Then the section proceeds:

And the same shall not be set aside, vacated, or annulled by any court for want of jurisdiction or any irregularity in the proceedings or on account of the fact that the lands were not subject to assessment at the time the assessments were made or attempted to be made, or for any other ground or for any cause whatsoever—

That is to say, the assessments made under State law are hereby cured and confirmed and shall not be set aside on any ground or for any cause whatsoever.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. DRIVER. The gentleman recalls that on page 2, beginning with line 4, there is an express provision that no assessments shall operate against the lands of the United States Government—nor from any person as to any tract of land until the date when the entryman or purchaser is entitled to a patent from the Government for such tract of land.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, that applies to the collection of the tax. I think that is clear, that no tax can be collected. But the tax can be levied, and it can accumulate, and all of that; so that my criticism now is that it does not reach just the narrow proposition that the gentleman wants to reach, but is much broader. And then, beyond that, there is an apparent attempt on the part of Congress to legislate upon things that are not within our jurisdiction at all. How can Congress says that assessments under a State law are cured and confirmed, and that no attack shall be made upon them on any ground or for any cause whatsoever? I can see how we can consent, so far as assessments on our land are concerned.

Mr. DRIVER. Would it amount to more than that consent on the part of the Government?

Mr. CRAMTON. We can consent to waive technicalities of which we might take advantage, but we can not prevent others from taking advantage of technicalities.

Mr. DRIVER. We ought to be able to get in.

Mr. CRAMTON. It seems that what the gentleman wants to do does not require much argument, but I do not think the bill is along the exact line that the gentleman has in mind. I have only time in taking up these provisions to call attention to the need of consideration in the form of this bill. My idea is that it either ought to go back to the committee or be passed over for a week, so that in the meantime the gentleman from Arkansas can work out definitely what he wants to do, and not do other things.

When you get to section 4, that requires the sale of these lands on foreclosure to the district and not to anyone else. It may be true that the department has not clearly understood what the gentleman from Arkansas is trying to do, but the department is experienced in these matters, and here is a report that makes definite suggestions, and I do not believe that with our limited experience and the limited amount of consideration we can give to the matter we ought to blindly go against this report.

For instance, the report says in its last paragraph:

Furthermore, I am without information as to the effect of the bill, if enacted, on the interests of the Government of the United States in connection with the efforts now under way to assure against further disasters like that of 1927. While I would not deny to any entryman or claimant or lawful lien holder any right he may have under present law, I very much doubt the advisability of a general waiver by the Government of its title to public lands in the area that will be affected by flood-control legislation. The Government may possibly be required to condemn at considerable cost the lands for which it would receive but $5 an acre under the bill.

I am not going to take time unduly, but I express my opinion that the bill does not accomplish what the gentleman from Arkansas feels it will accomplish, and that it opens up other avenues of doubt.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Granting that the gentleman's suspicions as to the inadequacy of the legislation are well founded, does the gentleman think any possible harm could arise by reason of this legislation?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I think harm could arise in two ways. First, I am not at all sure it would cure the situation that the gentleman from Arkansas wants to cure, because I do not think it says what he thinks it says. Secondly, I have no idea of the effect it might have upon conditions which the gentleman from Arkansas, and those who drafted the bill, have not taken into consideration at all. Blanket authority is given in section 1:

That the consent of the Government of the United States to the levy of special assessements based upon benefits estimated to be derived from local levee, drainage, road, and other improvement districts within the boundaries of the St. Francis Levee district of Arkansas, within the State of Arkansas, is hereby expressed and given.

We give broad consent to the levy of special assessments on lands within that district whether the title has passed to the entrymen or not. Now, the gentleman from Arkansas does not expect that they will be levied against the land until title passes, but this does not say that. It says consent is given without regard to the condition of the title and:

The laws of the State of Arkansas levying such special assessments and providing for the enforcement of such levy and the establishment of a lien and all the remedies pertaining thereto are expressly cured, confirmed, ratified, and established.

My suggestion is that a week's further consideration might greatly benefit the bill and I suggest that the gentleman from Arkansas let it go over to the next Calendar Wednesday of this committee.

I will summarize my objections to the bill in this way: First, I am not sure it will do what the gentleman wants it to do, although I think I worry less about that than I do about other things in the bill; because the gentleman from Arkansas can take care of himself very well. Secondly, I am afraid it will do something that the gentleman does not have in mind and which possibly ought not to be done, such as the assessment of these benefits before the land passes out of the hands of the Government, not that they would have to be paid by the Government, but they would accumulate there and then when title passed they would have to be paid. Third, the rather ridiculous idea of the Federal Government attempting to cure defects of State legislation. They say to confirm and cure State legislation, and they say that landowners shall not have the right to go into court and set up any kind of defense against these assessments.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. As I have understood from the gentleman from Arkansas, the purpose of the bill is to protect the drainage district in attempting to levy assessments against lands after the title is acquired, the Supreme Court now having held that no such levy can be made against lands where the title has passed into private ownership after the creation of the district. Now, does not the gentleman think that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas meets the objection he has made?

Mr. CRAMTON. Not at all. The bill is so far-reaching that the limited amendment suggested does not reach it. I think there needs to be much more drastic action as to change in the text of the bill. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas to say that the court has held, for some reason I am not familiar with, that even after the lands in this drainage district or levee district come into private ownership they are still not subject to assessment, and he wants to cure that. I do not see any objection to that being cured, from what I know about it now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. DRIVER. Possibly I can save time. I would be very glad to get together with the gentleman and undertake to iron out these differences. I understand this committee will have a day next Wednesday; and if that is true, I make the suggestion that this measure be withdrawn at this time, which will enable me to go into conference with the gentleman who is speaking, I know, the policy of the Land Department.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not want them held responsible, because they have trouble enough now.

Mr. DRIVER. But I believe that is responsible for the attitude of the gentleman on the floor; and if it is, it is entirely commendable.

I will be very pleased to confer with the gentleman and see if we can not obviate the difficulties he has pointed out. I would like to do that. I want the relief and I want it obtained in a way so it can be substantiated.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman no one is to be held responsible for my acts here but myself. I have not consulted with the Land Office, but I have tried to study out the effect of the bill. I will be delighted to confer with the gentleman, but I am sure there are others he will confer with who will be more helpful.

Mr. DRIVER. I will be pleased to confer with anyone who has an interest in the matter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the Supreme Court of the United States has passed upon the rights of certain individuals and has cleared them of any obligation of payment of certain State assessments, can we by an act of Congress reimpose such an obligation?

Mr. DRIVER. That is the opinion of the attorneys who have been in consultation on this matter in a very careful way. It is in the nature of an enabling act that will reach it.

Mr. MERRITT. It perhaps refers only to future assessments.

Mr. DRIVER. Future assessments, and I am willing to limit the bill entirely to that. I will simply say to the gentleman from New York that if this can not reach it, then these landowners will be forced to get under it and pay for the benefits to the land.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, from this discussion it is apparent this is a matter of far-reaching importance, particularly to the State of Arkansas, and I am convinced it can be worked out. I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of this bill be deferred until the next Calendar Wednesday, a week from to-day, when the Public Lands Committee will have another day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that the further consideration of the bill be deferred to-day and that it be in order to proceed with it on the next Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The date ought not to be fixed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COLTON. The next Calendar Wednesday that the Public Lands Committee is entitled to.

The SPEAKER. To the next day that the Committee on Public Lands has the floor on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BOWDOIN, MONT.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 14925) to authorize repayment of certain excess amounts paid by purchasers of lots in the town site of Bowdoin, Mont., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14925, with Mr. KETCHAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any excess amounts paid by the purchasers of certain town lots in the town site of Bowdoin, Mont., and authorized to be repaid by the act of Congress approved June 8, 1926 (44 Stat. p. 708), shall, upon certification by the Secretary of the Interior, be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury in all cases where the application for refund was received in the Great Falls local land office on or prior to June 15, 1928.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, the sole purpose of this bill is to extend the time during which applications for refunds for excess payments made in the purchase of lots in Bowdoin, Mont., may be made, and during which those excess amounts themselves may be made to those who show they are entitled to them.

The situation is that the town site of Bowdoin, Mont., was established on Government land, and a sale of lots took place. At that time there existed a division point on the Great Northern Railroad, which was later abandoned, and the shops and other buildings were moved away. The lots had been sold partly for cash payments and partly under provision of three annual payments.

With the moving of the division point the situation changed entirely. This Congress passed first a bill that would allow a reappraisal of these lots, and then another bill that would allow a refund of the excess payments that had actually been made above the reappraised prices. A period of two years was then given during which these applications might be received. This period of two years passed with the 15th of last June, but other applications have since been received. I know personally of some cases in which applications were not made within the period through a lack of knowledge that such a law had been enacted.

The entire purpose here is to extend that period of time until the 8th of June of this year, giving them a year from the expiration of the original law.

The bill has the favorable report of the Department of the Interior and of the Budget, and is a matter of simple justice in order to close up these matters and return money that the Government has in its possession and which it states, through actions of Congress and through the favorable report of the department and the Budget, it is not really entitled to keep.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment, with the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the language "was received in the Great Falls local land office on or prior to June 15, 1928," and insert in lieu thereof "if received on or prior to June 8, 1929."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be adopted and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. KETCHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14925, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COLTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE ARMY PROMOTION PROBLEM

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 13509, relating to the promotion situation in the Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

SENSE OF JUSTICE SHOCKED

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, the fact that these emergency officers have been discriminated against by disregarding and flouting of the grades in which they were appointed has appealed to the sense of justice of the American people and is reflected by editorials in numerous newspapers since the matter was brought to the attention of the country. Naturally newspaper editors, Members of Congress, and all persons familiar in the slightest degree with military organization would be shocked to find that officers appointed captains were preceded on the promotion list by officers appointed first lieutenants and second lieutenants, and that officers appointed first lieutenants were preceded on the promotion list by other officers appointed second lieutenants. The very statement of the case shocks the conscience of the disinterested bystander. It suggests that the War Department thinks that there was something wrong with the qualifications of those emergency officers appointed captains and first lieutenants, whereby they should be outranked by officers 9 or 10 years younger and holding commissions as second lieutenants, while the captains above mentioned held commissions of much higher rank, such as captain and above.

NEWSPAPERS FOR JUSTICE

Some of the newspapers taking notice of this outrageous situation are the Washington Post, by its editorial of December 15, 1928; the Washington Evening Star, by its editorial of December 14, 1928; the Washington Times, by its editorial of December 14, 1928; the New York Times, by its editorial of December 29, 1928; the Newport (R. I.) Daily News of December 26, 1928; the Chattanooga News of January 8, 1929; the Omaha Bee-News of December 24, 1928; the Lakeland (Fla.) Evening Ledger of December 28, 1928; the Spartansburg (S. C.) Journal of January 1, 1929; the Sunday World-Herald, of Omaha, Nebr., of December 30, 1928; the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of January 4, 1929; and numerous other papers, clippings from which are not before me.

These newspapers would not have been impressed and would not have taken the stand that they have except for the plain and simple conclusion that somebody, either the War Department or the Congress, treated very unjustly and unfairly those emergency officers of the rank of captain and below that entered the Regular Army under the national defense act of 1920. It is plain that there has been a violation of the simple and elemental rules of military organization. If those officers appointed captains and first lieutenants were not qualified to be captains and first lieutenants unreservedly and unconditionally, and to be promoted to become majors above all officers of lower rank, then they should never have been accepted as officers at all.

I quote the following from the study of the War Department, above referred to, found on page 29:

Thus on the day that the original promotion list was formed large numbers of promotions were made under it. This caused many men of long service who had just been appointed as first and second lieutenants to be promoted to the grade of captain, and caused second lieutenants to be promoted to the grade of first lieutenant. It has been frequently stated that in these initial promotions some officers "jumped over" others. This is not the case in the sense that any officer's position on the promotion list was changed. Lieutenants whose positions on the list were above many captains, by virtue of their longer commissioned service, were, under the law, entitled to promotion to existing vacancies and were so promoted. In this process no officer was demoted. Many captains held and continued to serve in that grade in which they had been appointed, although the grade was higher than that commensurate with their length of service and position on the promotion list. Being included in the authorized number of captains they actually operated to prevent or delay the promotion of lieutenants above them on the promotion list.

Note that it is here stated that some of these emergency officers appointed as captains and having an average age of about 37 years on July 1, 1920, actually blocked and interfered with the promotion of junior officers, then holding commissions as second lieutenants and some of them first lieutenants. This statement of the War Department seems almost ridiculous. In other words, in the extreme effort to find arguments to support the existing arrangement of the promotion list they hold that some of these emergency captains were blocking other officers deserving and entitled to promotion over them and that these junior officers of lower grade were not blocking the promotion of these captains.

The logical deduction from the various statements of the War Department, by its study, and by its representative before the Military Affairs Committee of the House is that it was a matter of grace and favor to appoint these older persons as captains. They argue, in effect, that if these older captains had been treated according to their qualifications they would have been appointed second lieutenants. It is the theory of those advocating the present arrangement of the promotion list in the grades of captain, first lieutenant, and second lieutenant that all officers should enter at the bottom of the list as second lieutenants. Therefore, they hold that these older emergency officers, now doomed to be captains as long as they are in the service and until retired at the age of 64 years, have no ground of complaint, because they were gratuitously given commissions as captains when they should have been commissioned as second lieutenants. This logical deduction from the arguments of the War Department is the reduction of its position to an absurdity.

If, however, the Congress will adopt the Wainwright bill, as amended by what is known as the McSwain amendment, justice will be done to those older captains and older first lieutenants, and no injustice will be done to those younger officers who jumped to the rank of captain from that of second lieutenant on July 1, 1920, and are now on the promotion list above those older captains. Why do I say that no injustice will be done those younger officers? Because, as was correctly stated by the Secretary of War in a statement read by him before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs on January 10, 1929, when he used the following language, which is obviously true:

If a policy of promotion on length of service in grade should be adopted without any restrictions (although I am not advocating this), the exaggerated importance of an officer's position on the promotion list would disappear. All would advance in grade upon serving the required period of time. Relative positions on the list would be of slight importance.

Under the Wainwright bill, captains would be promoted to majors at the expiration of a fixed period of time from the date of their commission, irrespective of their position on the promotion list. Therefore, within a few months of each other, all of these older emergency officer captains and all of these younger Regular Army captains will become majors. Then a few years later, within a fixed period of time and within a few months of each other, all of these officers would become lieutenant colonels. That being so, these younger officers that have enjoyed the rank of captain for so many years longer than they would normally have done, would not suffer any serious disadvantage from the rearrangement of the promotion list. It is true that the older officers, when they all become majors and lieutenant colonels, will outrank these younger officers, as they should. We must assume, as we are obliged to do, that all of these officers have the same average intelligence and the same average education. These factors being equal, the officer with the greater age, the greater experience, and, therefore, the greater knowledge, is better prepared to command battalions and regiments. Furthermore, the older officer presumably has the larger and more advanced family and is, therefore, entitled to the larger house on the post. In the absence of the commanding officers, the older officer should naturally take command. These things that seem immaterial to civilians, are very dear to the hearts of military men, and are the incentive and motive for their efforts to efficiency and fitness. If we disregard them to the detriment and discouragement of these older emergency captains, we commit an injustice that can never be cured.

No better argument could be made respecting the rank and grade in the arrangement of the promotion list than was made by Col. Thomas M. Spaulding in a statement that he made before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives on February 5, 1920, at page 2038 of volume 2 of the hearings. I quote this part of his language:

But we can not put men who are appointed as lieutenant colonels or majors in according to their commissioned service. They can not afford to come. A man who is good enough and old enough to be appointed as lieutenant colonel, for instance, yet has only had, perhaps, two years' or three years' service in the Army. Nobody could have had more than three years' service under an emergency commission. A man we take and appoint lieutenant colonel or major can not be put among Regular Army officers with only two or three years' service. It would not be reasonable to appoint him lieutenant colonel and say he shall have no promotion until after some whom you make first lieutenants. So this provision is that these people who are selected for appointment as lieutenant colonels and majors shall be put on the list along with all the other lieutenant colonels and majors in the Army.

If officers of suitable age and experience could not be expected to accept positions as lieutenant colonels and majors without any reasonable prospect of promotion, if their names had been arranged according to length of commissioned service, and if thus they had been placed on the list below captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants, then the same argument with equal or greater force applies to these emergency captains especially who had held that rank or higher rank during the World War and were commissioned as captains on July 1, 1920. The captains thus commissioned in the Regular Army were, on an average, about 37 years of age, whereas the captains of the Regular Army at the same time were, on an average, of about 28 years of age. Under the law no person under 36 years of age could be appointed a major, and, as a matter of fact, the average age of majors appointed was about 43 years.

Applying the same argument to these captains, and, in fact, also to the first lieutenants who had been emergency officers and were commissioned first in the Regular Army after the passage of the national defense act of June 4, 1920, how could we expect men of their age and experience and education, both in war and in peace, to be willing to accept positions on the promotion list below persons of one or two grades lower in rank? It is plainly admitted by all persons having the information, and, in fact, by the study which the War Department made and reported to Congress on that subject, as will appear by reference to page 73 of parts 1 to 3 of the hearings before the House Military Affairs Committee on promotion and retirement, that the emergency officers who accepted commissions in the Regular Army were ignorant of the interpretation that the War Department would put upon the law, and these emergency officers expected to be placed upon the promotion list according to grade. Again, on page 23 of said study of the War Department, we find this admission:

> The law evidently seemed clear and unmistakable, in its intent to those persons in Washington charged with carrying out its provisions. It later developed that the law was not so clearly understood by the two above-mentioned classes of boards or by the candidates.

Undoubtedly, not only were the emergency officers surprised to find themselves preceded on the promotion list by first lieutenants and second lieutenants, but the country generally was surprised, as was General Harris, then The Adjutant General of the Army, and numerous other prominent Army officers.

There is one part of the above study of the report of the War Department which, it seems to me, not only is self-condemnation by the War Department, but constitutes a serious indictment of the ability and character of these emergency officers who are complaining that they have been unfairly and unjustly surprised by the manner of the arrangement of the promotion list. The language that I refer to is found on page 23 of the same compilation under the general head of Promotion and Retirement, and is as follows:

> The examination was regarded and was so devised as to serve primarily as a test merely of the applicant's suitability for appointment as a commissioned officer of the Regular Army, and, secondarily, to determine the grade in which to appoint him and in which he should serve until such time as the new promotion list was formed, and he became due for promotion in accordance therewith. It seems clear from the law, although it does not seem to have been generally understood by the appointees, that (1) the examination of candidates and their appointment in various grades, and (2) the placing of these appointees on the promotion list were two entirely distinct and separate operations, the latter being entirely independent of the grade in which appointed—except for a few persons appointed in field grades—and being solely according to the length of commissioned service.

This amounts to a condemnation by the War Department of its own incompetency and inefficiency when it says that the examinations conducted by it were no proper and fair test of the qualifications of the officers. The instructions plainly and distinctly stated that the examining boards should consider all the qualifications of the candidate and especially with reference to the rank for which he was applying. The boards conducted the examinations and made their reports after exhaustive studies. The most valuable information in the former service records of these officers was in the possession of the boards and of the War Department.

These officers had been in the United States Army for at least two years, and some of them for three years and more. For the War Department now to say that these examinations were not bona fide and were not searching and were no test in reality, is a confession of its own inefficiency, that it ought not be allowed to make. It is an excuse that has been thought of subsequently for the purpose of making plausible the acts that were then performed. I do not believe that the boards of officers that conducted these examinations relish this impeachment of their qualifications and good faith.

In the next place, the statement above quoted is a very grave charge by insinuation and innuendo, that these emergency officers that had served the Government through the war for a period of from two to three years and stood rigid examinations and accepted commissions in the Regular Army, usually one or two grades below the rank that they held in the emergency Army, were not in fact and in reality qualified for the commissions that were tendered them. Just how the board arrives at any such conclusions is hard for me to find. I can not see how the board concludes that junior officers, 9 or 10 years younger, who had stood no examination since their original commission in the haste of getting ready for war, were better qualified mentally and morally to hold commissions in the grade of captain and above captain than the emergency officers. We need not blind ourselves to the facts with regard to how most of the young men, all of them under 27 years of age, obtained commissions as provisional second lieutenants. We know that as a class they were very young, just out of school or college, not married, and within the limits of the first draft law. We know that a great many of them were commissioned outright from civil life before they had ever had on a uniform and before they knew the simplest and most elemental facts of the military art. We know that large numbers of them received their training during the first officers' training camp and during the second officers' training camp alongside of those civilian candidates for commissions as emergency officers.

Therefore, for the War Department to undertake to argue that the arrangement of the promotion list for captains and first lieutenants and second lieutenants is justified on some principle and state of facts behind and beyond the mere arbitrary and meaningless standard of length of commissioned service, is a severe indictment of its own conduct of its business and a slur upon the ability and the character of the emergency officers that constituted the larger part of our fighting officer personnel, and came into the Regular Army upon the invitation of the country through its Congress when it was decided to double the defense forces of the Army.

ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL (H. DOC. NO. 510)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith for the information of the Congress a manuscript entitled "Origin and Development of the Office of Attorney General, the Establishment of the Department of Justice, and their relation to the Judicial System of the United States," which has been prepared in the office of the Attorney General.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 16, 1929.

LASSEN VOLCANIC NATIONAL PARK, CALIF

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11406) to consolidate or acquire alienated lands in Lassen Volcanic National Park, in the State of California, by exchange, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah calls up the bill 11406 and asks unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there will be opportunity to bring out the information that we want in the House, as the gentleman has an hour.

Mr. COLTON. Yes; I will be glad to yield time.

The SPEAKER. If the bill is considered in the House, it will be under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CRAMTON. As long as the gentleman from Utah is agreeable to such discussion as may bring out the information wanted under the 5-minute rule, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the public interests will be benefited thereby, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to accept, on behalf of the United States, title to any land within exterior boundaries of Lassen Volcanic National Park which, in the opinion of the Director of the National Park Service, are chiefly valuable for forest or recreational and national-park purposes, and in exchange therefor may patent not to exceed an equal value of such national-park land within the exterior boundaries of said national park; or the Secretary of the Interior may authorize the grantor to cut and remove an equal value of timber in exchange therefor from certain designated areas within the exterior boundaries of said national park: Provided, That such timber shall be cut and removed from such designated area in a manner that will not injure the national park for recreational purposes and under such forestry regulations as shall be stipulated, the values in each case to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become a part of Lassen Volcanic National Park.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like some information with reference to this bill. I think I understand the purpose of the bill, which is to permit the exchange of Government-owned land that is not in a conspicuous place in the park but in a place where the cutting of a certain amount of timber under proper regulations would not be very undesirable—to trade those lands for privately owned lands that are in sections of the park where the cutting of timber would be quite disastrous to the beauty of the park.

This matter of privately owned lands in national parks is one that we have been giving quite a bit of attention to, and the pending Interior Department appropriation bill carries a very important provision making possible the elimination of all privately owned lands in the national parks, with an initial appropriation of $250,000, and with contracts for greater amounts authorized.

Of course, under the program proposed in that appropriation bill the Government will retain the lands that it now owns and will proceed to buy such privately owned lands as this bill has reference to. I would like to think that this bill would be only an authorization and that it would not be contemplated, if this bill should became a law, that the department would necessarily proceed with these exchanges. I am not sure that it is going to be desirable, now that we have entered on a program of buying the lands, to make a trade and let the lumber company go on and cut certain lands that we are later going to buy back from them. I do not want to oppose the bill, because the need of cleaning up these private holdings in the national park is so urgent, and in some cases so acute, that any desirable authority ought to be given the department. I realize that at the time this bill was introduced and at the time it was reported there was no assurance of money being available to purchase the lands, and so the first question I ask is whether, if this bill becomes a law, it will be understood that it is not the intention thereby to direct the department to proceed with these transfers but simply give the department a discretion which we expect they will exercise in the light of the newer program of acquisition. Am I correct about that?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has stated that at the time this bill was introduced we were faced with the problem of private holdings in many of the national parks, and particularly in Lassen National Park, pertaining to individual timber holdings. The bill was introduced with the idea of correcting that feature. Last year it was on the Consent Calendar, and I requested that it be removed from the Consent Calendar with the hope that the legislation the gentleman from Michigan refers to regarding the purchase of private holdings in national parks would be made a reality. Since that has taken place, I see really no purpose to further proceed with this bill, and I should not object to having it taken from the calendar. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's views, and that is that the National Park Bureau should have control over all these private holdings and that no cutting at all should take place in these beautiful timbered areas.

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me ask the gentleman from California whether there is any situation that this contemplates which is urgent; whether there is any cutting of this timber likely to come within the current season?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Not at all.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, while this bill and this subject are before us, it seems an appropriate time to say a few words with respect to our national parks. It is taking us a long time to work out a definite policy. I think this bill and the general legislation to which reference has been made is a step in the right direction, but, after all, we have not yet reached a place where we may say that we have a definite policy regarding our parks. There are something like 13 bills now pending before the Public Lands Committee for the creation of national parks. I hope before long to see a policy adopted, at least some definite pronouncement on the part of Congress, regarding the future creation of national parks. We have bills creating parks in the bad lands of the West and in many parts of the United States. We have a very efficient bureau that has charge of our national parks.

We have been fortunate in having at the head of the Park Service one of the finest men in the country for the last decade or more. Hon. Stephen T. Mather has rendered a great service to this Nation. Unfortunately his health does not permit him to continue, but there has been a very fortunate choice made in the appointment of his successor. Horace M. Albright brings to the position of director ability and an enthusiasm which means splendid service and success for the future. Whether or not the parks are to be created in conformity with a definite plan worked out by some great architect, or whether we will take the matter of parks up promiscuously and deal with them in a haphazard way, is one of the problems that is before us now.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman has spoken of a great number of bills before his committee for the creation of additional national parks. Is there any bill pending before his committee to extend the boundary of the Yellowstone National Park in Wyoming?

Mr. COLTON. There is legislation pending before our committee for the inclusion of certain lands in Wyoming in the Yellowstone Park or the creation of a new park in the Tetons.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I have heard of that. Could the gentleman inform the House as to the reasons why it is proposed to include these additional lands in this particular park?

Mr. COLTON. It is felt by those who are advocating the legislation that the area is up to the park standards; that the lands are wonderful and should be made a national park; and that the logical thing to do is to either change the boundary lines of the Yellowstone National Park and include these lands within it or make a new park.

Mr. WOODRUFF. How much additional land is proposed to be incorporated in the park by this particular legislation?

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. WINTER] is here, and he can probably answer the question.

Mr. WINTER. About 350,000 acres.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And what is the acreage in the present park?

Mr. WINTER. Three thousand five hundred square miles.

Mr. WOODRUFF. How many additional square miles would this proposed extension mean?

Mr. WINTER. I will figure that out.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COLTON. I ask for an additional five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will just let me add this in addition to what the gentleman from Utah stated. This proposed change in the boundaries of the Yellowstone Park, as I understand, is to carry out the recommendations of the coordinating committee, which made a study with considerable care in reference to making the boundaries of the park conform in a more desirable way with the topography of the country. For instance, because of a range of mountains certain areas may be quite inaccessible, except from the park, or vice versa. It may be desirable therefore to exclude that on the other side and to bring in other land that can be better administered in connection with the park.

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman is right.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Is not all the land which it is contemplated including within the Yellowstone National Park now national forest land?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I had not so understood.

Mr. TILSON. Is any of it private land?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I could not say.

Mr. TILSON. I had supposed it to be all public lands.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I think they are public lands.

Mr. CRAMTON. The work of this coordinating commission, which included the gentleman who at that time was head of the Forest Service, Colonel Greeley, and the gentleman who at that time was head of the Park Service, Mr. Mather, together with others, named for that purpose by the President, the original proposition was to coordinate as between the Park Service and Forestry Service, and that is the result which is before Congress.

Of course it has, in addition, a very important feature that, to my mind, makes it highly important; that is, the bill reported out by the Public Lands Committee. It not only would make effective the agreement arrived at by these highly specialized and able men—and which, I should say, had as chairman our colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE]—it not only would carry into effect their recommendations that are highly desirable but would also provide for the creation of the Grand Teton National Park. Anyone who has ever seen the Teton Range in Wyoming would immediately become an enthusiast for the preservation of that great scenic area as a national park. The dividing line between what should be a national park and a State park is not always easy to determine. There have been a multitude of measures before the Committee on the Public Lands to create national parks where there should be State parks instead, if anything; but this Teton situation is a case where there was a great deal of local pride in the State and a great deal of sentiment favoring the creation of a State park out of the Teton Range. I am delighted that the attitude of the State has changed and that they are now agreeable to the creation of a national park, because the Teton Range is of such rare beauty that it is of strictly national-park caliber and ought to be so administered.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Does this contemplated addition include the wild territory far to the east of Mammoth Springs, for instance, that is supposed to contain the wild herd of buffalo, or at least a wild herd of buffalo? Is it proposed to take in so much territory as to include this very wild region?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know whether any great addition is made to that section of the park. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. WINTER] would know better about that.

Mr. TILSON. I had understood that there is a herd of wild buffalo there, apparently the only extant herd of buffalo that is wild and not cared for.

Mr. WINTER. I am inclined to think that that area is not included in the present bill. The gentleman is speaking of what is known as the upper thoroughfare and upper Yellowstone River country. That is stocked with elk. That is in the proposed extension.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Grand Teton Range, those saw-tooth areas, with their ragged teeth, with the adjacent country, ought to be preserved as a national park. Personally I would rather see it made a part of the Yellowstone Park because they are not far apart. But the agreement that seems to be arrived at by the friends of the movement is for the creation of a separate park. I do not think it would hurt to speak frankly for a moment in connection with that bill. I know of no opposition to the changes suggested as to the boundaries of the Yellowstone Park that we have been discussing. I know of no objection now to the creation of the Grand Teton National Park. Then why is it that that bill is not reported to this House? It is before the Committee on the Public Lands. Why is it that it is not reported to the House? I do not want to embarrass the chairman of the committee, and I do not want to embarrass my good friend from Wyoming; and inasmuch as I am not subject to embarrassment myself, I am willing to state the reason for it.

Mr. WINTER. In the first place, the gentleman is in error in his statement that there is no objection on the part of anybody to this proposed extension. There is a very decided objection and has been at all times. There have been received in my office very recently in the last few days some very drastic resolutions from numerous bodies of persons and petitions signed numerously in the region of Cody and elsewhere against the inclusion of the thoroughfare and upper Yellowstone in the park.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Are there any dude rangers there from my city?

Mr. WINTER. One of the dude rangers is established in that region, and he is very much in favor of the extension.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I regret that any of that hostility has continued. I had supposed that at least, so far as the gentleman from Wyoming is concerned, he would be entirely in sympathy with the change.

Mr. WINTER. The gentleman will find in the RECORD that three years ago I made an extended statement in favor of the extension as reported by the President's special commission, to which the gentleman has referred, with certain amendments I proposed.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think that is the reason why I have gone as far as I have gone in my statement.

Mr. WINTER. There is another point that ought to be brought out, and that is that the recommendations made by the commission referred to the north, east, and south boundaries of the park. There is an exclusion and extension on the west side that has been at issue for six or eight years. That is another reason why the bill has not been reported out.

Mr. CRAMTON. That was the reason I was going to assign. I see no difficulty about passing that important Yellowstone-Teton bill were it not for the fact that elements in the State of Idaho are acting in dog-in-the-manger fashion. They want to get control of the Beckler Meadow region and use it for irrigation purposes. They want to have it excluded from the park. Whether it is of a character that would justify its exclusion, or whether it is of such a scenic character that it ought to be retained in the park, I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, so much of my time has been taken that I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Congress does not know. Congress has not before it a report from a disinterested commission with the experience and capacity to command the confidence of Congress. Now, that is something that can be handled as we get to it. There is nothing to prevent this same coordinating commission from making an inspection of that southern and western boundary, as it has already done of the other boundaries, and making its report. Then Congress, with that report of capable experts who are disinterested before it, can act intelligently on the Beckler Meadow situation. But to say that until Congress sees fit to surrender to the demands of the Idaho irrigationists we can have no legislation affecting the Yellowstone National Park puts the people of Idaho in a very undesirable attitude before the Congress and does not tend to promote the final accomplishment of their desire.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. COLTON. As far as I am informed there has been no one objecting to this legislation before the Committee on Public Lands. At any time that a demand is made by the author of the legislation we will consider the matter. Can the gentleman tell the committee whether or not the commission to which he has referred may now function? Will it not take an additional appropriation? What would be necessary to authorize the commission to consider the proposition of the Beckler Basin?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I think they would need the assurance of an appropriation for that purpose and very possibly a legislative resolution would be required.

I think I ought to say this in justice to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], that what I have said, if it be in criticism of anyone, is not to be taken at all as any criticism of the gentleman from Idaho. I had some conferences with him in reference to this matter and had hoped to be able to cooperate with him in providing funds that would enable such a study to be made as I have discussed. I think it is entirely proper for me to say that the attitude of the gentleman from Idaho was very generous and fair in the matter, and if we had no one else except the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] to consider there would have been no difficulty about making progress in this matter, but there were difficulties which arose in other places that it is not parliamentary to discuss.

Mr HASTINGS. I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether there are any private lands included in this proposed extension. It has been stated they were forest lands, but it has not been stated whether or not there are no lands in private ownership.

Mr. WINTER. There are some lands in private ownership.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is what I rather suspected.

Mr. WINTER. But the amount is infinitesimal compared to the total.

Mr. COLTON. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I think I can now say it is the policy of the Public Lands Committee not to report any more bills creating parks until the private lands within the proposed area are acquired. Mr. Speaker, I understand it is the desire of the gentleman from California not to have action taken to-day.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill go over for further action.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, that can not be done under the Calendar Wednesday practice.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of this bill be deferred until the next Calendar Wednesday when the Public Lands Committee has the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that the present consideration of this bill be deferred until the Committee on the Public Lands has the call on Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of this committee to use the next Calendar Wednesday, unless it is set aside?

Mr. COLTON. The committee has several bills to be considered and we will take at least a part of the day, if not all of it.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman intends to go on, so far as he now knows, on next Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. COLTON. So far as I know, yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. May I ask the gentleman from Connecticut whether it is his intention to take up the independent offices bill to-morrow?

Mr. TILSON. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

APPROPRIATION BILL FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE, THE JUDICIARY, AND FOR THE DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 15569) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

SENATE

THURSDAY, January 17, 1929

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art from everlasting to everlasting, ancient of days yet ever new; all things wax old as doth a garment, but Thou art the same and Thy years shall not fail.

Thou hast made us heirs of all the ages as we stand at the confluence of time. Show us, therefore, how we may better serve Thee with what we have, and help us to serve Thee further by patience amid our disabilities.

Look down with pity upon all who are stricken by grief; remember those in pain who must so soon take up again their weary burdens, and grant that in this new day each child of Thine, finding something of the comfort of Thy love, may give thanks unto Thee, whose mercy endureth forever. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3162) to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg., with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 479. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant certain oil and gas prospecting permits and leases;

H. R. 13899. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title;

H. R. 14925. An act to authorize repayment of certain excess amounts paid by purchasers of lots in the town site of Bowdoin, Mont., and for other purposes; and

H. R. 15732. An act making an additional grant of lands for a miners' hospital for disabled miners of the State of Utah, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. BINGHAM. In the nature of a memorial I present a letter from the president of the Dupont Circle Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DUPONT CIRCLE CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1929.

Hon. HIRAM BINGHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Knowing of your keen interest in the affairs of the District, I take pleasure in informing you that the Dupont Circle Citizens' Association, at its regular meeting at the Mayflower Hotel, Monday, January 7, 1929, passed the following resolution: Be it

"Resolved, That this association go on record as strongly in favor of locating a retail farmers' market at some central location convenient to the citizens, where purchases may be made directly between these two classes."

It was clearly indicated that the sentiment of those present was strongly opposed to the use of public money for the erection of a market for the benefit of commission men, middlemen, etc.

The designation of a location was specifically omitted in order to avoid controversy over points regarded as less important than the one dealt with above.

Yours respectfully,

DEMAREST LLOYD,
President Dupont Circle Citizens' Association.

Mr. BINGHAM presented numerous resolutions of women's clubs and civic and religious organizations in the State of Connecticut, indorsing the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of clergymen of New Haven and sundry other citizens, in the State of Connecticut, indorsing the so-called Kellogg multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the committee on peace of the Bridgeport section, National Council of Jewish Women, of Bridgeport, Conn., protesting against adoption of the pending naval building program, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania presented letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials of citizens and civic and religious organizations in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MOSES presented letters in the nature of memorials of sundry citizens in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS presented letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials of sundry citizens in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the executive council of the woman's department, National Civic Federation, at New York, N. Y., favoring the prompt passage of the bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 340) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cooperate with the other relief creditor governments in making it possible for Austria to float a loan in order to obtain funds for the furtherance of its reconstruction program, and to conclude an agreement for the settlement of the indebtedness of Austria to the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1450) thereon.

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 5349) to amend section 9 of the Federal reserve act and section 5240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1451) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 5302) to amend the second paragraph of section 4 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1452) thereon.

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5179) to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1453) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. METCALF:

A bill (S. 5400) granting a pension to Sarah Shepard (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 5401) consenting that suit may be brought against the United States with respect to claims relating to the Lake Malheur Reservation in the State of Oregon; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 5402) to provide for the establishment of a municipal center in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 5403) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Cooper; and

A bill (S. 5404) granting an increase of pension to Eddie L. Fetty; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DALE:

A bill (S. 5405) granting an increase of pension to Mary S. Warner (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 5406) to amend the national defense act by providing for a pharmacy corps in the Medical Department, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(By request.) A bill (S. 5407) to renew and extend certain letters patent; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 5408) granting a pension to Maude G. Davis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 5409) to afford protection to the watershed and water supply of the city of Ashland, Jackson County, Oreg.; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 5410) granting an increase of pension to Carlton Wright; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 5411) for the relief of Marmaduke H. Floyd; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FESS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) to provide for the expenses of participation by the United States in the international conference for the purpose of revising the International Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

NEWSPRINT PAPER FROM FARM WASTE

Mr. SCHALL. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 200) to provide a bounty for the encouragement of the manufacture of newsprint paper from the waste products of field crops produced on American farms was read the first time by its title.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask that the joint resolution may be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Whereas it is necessary to encourage the manufacture of newsprint paper from the waste products of field crops produced on American farms (such as cornstalks, flax, wheat, rice, or oat straw, cotton stems, and sugar-cane pulp) for the purpose of further developing the paper-making industry in the United States, which is now dependent principally upon foreign countries for an adequate supply of the pulp and paper used in such industry; and

Whereas it is estimated that the utilization of the waste products of such field crops would increase the annual income of the American farmers by more than a billion dollars and thereby tend to relieve the present agricultural situation and the distress of the farmers; and

Whereas it has been demonstrated that paper manufactured from such waste products is of a finer quality than that now manufactured from wood pulp and that the manufacture of paper from such products is commercially profitable; and

Whereas the Congress, in order to encourage the growing of sugar cane within the United States, has enacted legislation to provide for the payment of a bounty to sugar-cane growers with the result that a large and profitable industry has been developed; and

Whereas similar encouragement to the American manufacturers of newsprint paper would tend to develop the paper-making industry and enable such manufacturers to compete with those in foreign countries: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That any American manufacturer of paper who manufactures newsprint paper containing at least 60 per cent or more of waste products of field crops produced on American farms (such as cornstalks, flax, wheat, rice, or oat straw, cotton stems, or sugar-cane pulp) and who sells the paper so manufactured to any newspaper or other publisher in the United States at a price not exceeding $40 per ton, shall be paid, from the Treasury of the United States, a bounty of 1 cent for each pound of paper so produced and sold.

SEC. 2. This resolution shall take effect immediately and shall remain in force for a period of five years from the date of its approval.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

H. R. 479. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant certain oil and gas prospecting permits and leases;

H. R. 13899. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title;

H. R. 14925. An act to authorize repayment of certain excess amounts paid by purchasers of lots in the town site of Bowdoin, Mont., and for other purposes; and

H. R. 15732. An act making an additional grant of lands for a miners' hospital for disabled miners of the State of Utah, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15569) making appropriation for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

RIGHTS OF NEUTRALS AND FREEDOM OF THE SEAS

Mr. REED of Missouri subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent as a part of the morning business to request that Senate Resolution 294, which I submitted on January 9, with reference to negotiations for a treaty to conform in principle to Article XII of the treaty of 1785 between Prussia and the United States, may go over until to-morrow without prejudice. I was not able to be present during the routine morning business, and I understand, in order to reserve my rights, I shall have to get the consent of the Senate to make the request in the form I have.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COTTON REPORTS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee of Agriculture and Forestry which was authorized and empowered to investigate the conduct of the New York Cotton Exchange, the activities of certain cotton speculators and price manipulators, and also to investigate the conduct of the Bureau of Economics in the Department of Agriculture and its connection with the manipulation of cotton prices. The testimony before the committee disclosed a situation regarding undeveloped or immature cotton that is being counted in as a part of the supply of fully developed cotton produced in the United States that needs to be dealt with by Congress. I introduced a bill which passed the Senate at the last session which provided that cotton known as "snaps" and "bollies" shall be reported and published by the Government in an item separate and apart from the report of fully developed or fully matured cotton, as is now done in the case of linters. Time was when the Government included linters in the report with cotton. The Government report used to read: "So many bales including linters," and nobody knew how many bales were cotton and how many bales were linters. I found upon investigation that we were producing yearly a million bales of linters and this little fuzzy stuff cut from the seed after the cotton was ginned was being lugged in and counted in the supply or crop of actual cotton. It was unfair to the producer of cotton and misleading to the cotton-consuming world. It was at my suggestion that the Government now separates linters from cotton. The report now gives the number of bales of cotton in a separate item and the number of bales of linters in a separate item, and that is as it should be.

The States of Texas and Oklahoma are now producing annually nearly a million bales of immature or undeveloped cotton—cotton that comes from green bolls gathered, heated, and thrashed out and ginned, and that stuff is called "snaps" and "bollies." I want the Government to report "snaps" and "bollies" in an item separate and apart from cotton just as it now does in the case of linters. My bill provides for that. It has passed the Senate and is now in the House of Representatives, and I am hoping and expecting the Representatives in Congress from the cotton-growing States to see that this measure passes that body at an early date. If that is done, the "snaps" and "bollies" produced this year will be separated from the Government's report of cotton when another cotton crop is coming upon the market. Mr. President, the counting of "snaps" and "bollies" in with the cotton supply constitutes a grave injustice to the cotton farmers of the South and it must be stopped. I desire to print in the RECORD a part of the hearings on this subject as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COTTON KNOWN AS "SNAPS" AND "BOLLIES"

(Statement of Samuel T. Hubbard, jr., president of the New York Cotton Exchange)

* * * * * * *

Senator HEFLIN. May I ask the chairman before we start what his definition is of the difference between snaps and bollies?

Senator SMITH. I do not think there is any very great difference. It depends on the manner in which they have gathered the cotton. I understand that snaps means where there is a top crop, and they just snap it off and take limbs and all; and bollies are where they have taken the bolls that are not yet open and open the breasts of the gin so that there will be more room for the seed to drop out. They just gin the whole business, you know, burr and all. Bollies is where there comes a frost and they take these green bolls, and they have a way of subjecting them to artificial heat and drying them out and opening them. The boll is pulled green before it is fully developed and is opened by some sort of a heating process.

Representative RANKIN. I think all this cotton that is gathered with a sled would come under the heading of snaps. They have a way of gathering cotton with a sled out in some of the western country, and I think that would come under the name of snaps, because they pull burrs and everything off.

Senator SMITH. They have three names, sled cotton, snaps, and bollies; but there is hardly an appreciable difference.

Senator HEFLIN. Mr. Hubbard, what is your idea of the difference between snaps and bollies?

Mr. HUBBARD. Snap cotton, as I understand it, is where the boll is opened naturally and the cotton is hanging. The ordinary process is to go through and take it out with the fingers. Instead of that they just snap the stems off.

Senator HEFLIN. Boll and all?

Mr. HUBBARD. Yes.

Senator HEFLIN. With the locks remaining with the boll?

Mr. HUBBARD. Yes. Those are mature locks.

Senator SMITH. But it is not open. It is the top crop and you can not pick it readily and you snap the top off.

Representative RANKIN. Mr. Hubbard has a brother who is a much abler man than he is when it comes to putting his thoughts on paper, and here is his definition of snaps and bollies. It is just a paragraph and I will read it if there is no objection.

Senator HEFLIN. I would like to have that.

Representative RANKIN (reading): "Gathered cotton, snaps, bollies, machined cotton—in Oklahoma and Texas, when labor is short, the cotton is 'gathered'; that is, the plants are simply cut down and brought in, open bolls, unopened bolls, and all. In the seed house the open cotton is pulled out and ginned in the usual manner, while the unopened and half-opened bolls are sent on to the gins where special machinery is installed to break open the bolls and gin out the cotton. In the early days the result was the most fearful-looking mess, known as 'bollies' * * *.

"I think that is an accurate description, or sometimes as 'snaps' and sold for a few cents a pound. The process of cleaning has been so much improved that to-day it is possible to get good results, so much so that at times it is very difficult to tell this 'machined' cotton from that picked and ginned in the usual manner. The regular picked cotton of low grade is sometimes put through a machine to be raised in grade by cleaning. Machined cotton is not 'regular' for the reason that care is not taken to keep the half-opened bolls with immature cotton separated from the matured bolls, so that the staple gets mixed, breaks off in the mill machinery, and thereby causes loss. The most objectional bales are easy to detect, for the cotton has a sort of half-spun appearance and breaks off in the fingers when the staple is pulled. The trouble lies with the bales just 'on the line' with the bulk of the cotton satisfactory, so that they get by and are later found in the process of manufacture. There is a rule in the future contract and in the law for that matter, prohibiting the delivery of machined cotton. It is probable that the improvement in the cleaning machinery will bring more care in the selection of the bolls to go through the machine so that the weaker staple will be put into bales by itself. It has proposed that all machined bales be marked at the gin."

Senator HEFLIN. I am having a bill prepared now, and as I have outlined it, it requires the ginners to report snaps and bollies separate and apart from fully matured cotton and linters in a separate item. As Mr. Hubbard will recall, they used to report on cotton as, for instance, 14,000,000 bales, including linters.

Senator SMITH. A law has been passed year before last prohibiting the Census Department from making a report collectively. They have got to separate them.

Senator HEFLIN. They separate them now in their reports. But my bill will provide that snaps and bollies are put in a separate item like linters are now put in a separate item.

Mr. GANIER. I think they ought to be printed so that they can be distinguished from other cotton of similar character.

Senator HEFLIN. That would be a good plan, because it ought not to be sold as cotton of fully developed fiber. It injures the price of good cotton.

Mr. GANIER. It sells for a big discount under the regular cotton.

Senator HEFLIN. Yes; but it ought not to be counted in the supply and put on the market and sold as fully matured cotton.

Mr. OSMOND. You might have a colored stripe on the bale that would distinguish it from regular cotton and force the gins to do that.

Senator HEFLIN. Yes; there ought to be some way to mark it.

Senator SMITH. In that connection, with reference to the report as to the supply of cotton, there ought to be a differentiation between regular cotton and the machine-gathered and bales stuff. But in the sampling of cotton by those who purchase they readily distinguished these so that the effect on the market will not keep them from being put on the market, because every sampler will distinguish them; but they should not be calculated in the crop.

Senator HEFLIN. Would not that be a good provision, Mr. Hubbard?

Mr. HUBBARD. I have no objection to it.

Senator SMITH. It is really essential, because we have, as Josh Billings said, such a great amount of conjecture growing out of so little fact that a man can not tell the conjecture from the fact; and we ought to have the facts.

Senator HEFLIN. We ought. We would have for once the exact amount of real cotton produced and the carry-over of real cotton.

Representative RANKIN. I will tell you where this hurts the worst. Where the snaps and bollies have done us the most harm, in my opinion, is they are being passed by Government classers and tendered on contract. There is no evidence here to disprove that.

Senator HEFLIN. I started the fight in the House to separate linters from real cotton in 1908, I believe; and while Senator HARRIS was Director of the Census I got him to put it in force. He did, and he ordered it separated, and it was separated for a time, and afterwards we legislated on the subject. But, here is my purpose: The Government shows 12,000,000 bales of cotton. In another place it will have a million and a half bales of linters. We have got a million bales of snaps and bollies, and we have 12,000,000 bales of the fully developed cotton. You have now in the cotton crop, your visible supply of cotton, 13,000,000 bales of cotton. If this provision that I am suggesting can be enacted into law, this million bales of snaps and bollies will be put down by itself, and the real spinnable cotton, the desirable cotton, will appear in another column as 12,000,000 bales instead of as 13,000,000 bales.

Mr. HUBBARD. May I presume to inject a suggestion?

Senator SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. HUBBARD. I think that cotton trade would greatly appreciate a provision that required that when exports are made they have got to designate whether it is cotton or linters. There is absolutely no way for us to tell, when we have exported 11,000,000 bales from the United States, whether it is 11,000,000 bales of all cotton or 9,500,000 bales of cotton and a thousand of linters, and so on; and if that provision could be made that when they make the declaration of exports so that it can be checked up——

Senator SMITH. The total exports differentiate between linters and cotton?

Mr. HUBBARD. Yes, sir.

Senator HEFLIN. I wonder if they are not counting some of the linter bales in the carry-over, too?

Senator SMITH. I have no doubt in the world that there is cotton that is unmerchantable from every standpoint that is counted from year to year and that duplications occur. It is almost unavoidable. We ought to have a good house cleaning and get the facts not only as to the number of bales but the character of the cotton. Then we would have a year as a standard of comparison, and we would know when the carry-over was announced definitely what it consisted of.

Senator HEFLIN. If we had that to work under and could take the census we could find out where this dog-tail cotton is and how much there is of it, and we could condemn it and brand it before the world as a certain character of cotton. Then it would practically eliminate it from the trade and take this dead weight off the market.

Senator SMITH. Congressman RANKIN, when the officials of the department come before the committee I want, if I overlook it, to have members of the committee ask if at any time they have allowed snaps and bollies which they consider of the same value as low middling seven-eighths certificated.

Representative RANKIN. According to Mr. Hubbard, it is a violation of law to certificate or tender it on contract.

Mr. HUBBARD. You are referring to my brother?

Representative RANKIN. Yes.

Senator HEFLIN. Has any of it been tendered?

Senator SMITH. You must remember that the law provides that below low middling, seven-eighths inch staple, or cotton of like value may be tendered, and it was the phrase in the law——

Senator HEFLIN. That they construed into giving authority to do it?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Representative RANKIN. Here is what Mr. Hubbard says about it in his book, which is considered an authority on this subject:

"There is a rule in the future contract—and in the law, for that matter—prohibiting the delivery of machine cotton."

And that means snaps and bollies.

Senator HEFLIN. Do you know whether they have undertaken to deliver any of that on your exchange?

Mr. HUBBARD. The only cotton that has been delivered on our exchange has been passed on by the Government arbitrators.

Senator HEFLIN. Do you know of any of it that has been passed? You would not be to blame for it if the Government certified it.

Mr. HUBBARD. Of course, all the snaps and bollies that are grown—or, at least, I would say, 80 per cent of them, or more—come out of Texas, and it is all handled through Galveston and other Texas ports, so far as the classification is concerned; and those classers there would decide whether or not this cotton was of a tenderable condition.

Senator HEFLIN. If that is correct, that they class it and grade it down there and certify it and send it on to New York, then it is not classed any more, unless somebody demands it?

Mr. HUBBARD. Unless somebody asks for it.

Senator HEFLIN. It might be tendered; but unless reclassification was had, you could not tell whether it was snaps and bollies or not?

Mr. HUBBARD. No, sir.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15848, the first deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15848) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we may dispense with the formal reading of the bill and that the bill may be read for action on the committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Copeland	Greene	Mayfield
Barkley	Couzens	Hale	Metcalf
Bayard	Curtis	Harris	Moses
Bingham	Dale	Harrison	Neely
Black	Deneen	Hastings	Norbeck

Sheppard	Steiwer	Tydings	Waterman
Shortridge	Stephens	Vandenberg	Wheeler
Simmons	Swanson	Wagner
Smith	Thomas, Idaho	Walsh, Mass.
Smoot	Thomas, Okla.	Walsh, Mont.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. TYSON] is unavoidably detained from the Senate because of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. My colleague the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BLAINE. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Legislative," on page 2, after line 1, to insert:

SENATE

To pay Amanda J. Gooding, widow of Hon. Frank R. Gooding, late a Senator from the State of Idaho, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

For payment to Ingham G. Mack for services rendered as assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys investigating the occupation, leasing of, and contracts for oil and oil lands in the Salt Creek field in Wyoming; the transactions and activities of the Continental Trading Co. of Canada and the continued investigation of all oil leases as authorized by Senate resolutions of the present Congress Nos. 101, 202, and 237, respectively, and Resolutions Nos. 282 and 294 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, continued during the present Congress, fiscal year 1929, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 16, to insert:

For the purchase and exchange of an automobile for the Vice President, fiscal year 1929, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 19, to insert:

For stationery for Senators, committees, and officers of the Senate, fiscal year 1929, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 11, to insert:

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, including furniture, furnishings, and equipment, and for labor and material incident thereto and repairs thereof; and for personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, fiscal year 1929, $8,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 19, to insert:

House Office Building: For the acquisition of a site and construction of a fireproof office building for the House of Representatives; for the preparation of plans, employment of skilled architectural, engineering, personal, and other services, advertising and printing; for the purchase in the open market of material, supplies, equipment, necessary technical and other reference books, for the letting of contracts, and for traveling expenses and all other expenses incident thereto, without reference to sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fiscal year 1929, $8,400,000, to remain available until expended, said building to be erected by the Architect of the Capitol, subject to the direction and supervision of the commission in charge of the House Office Building without reference to section 35 of the act of June 25, 1910; the appropriations hereunder to be disbursed by the Department of the Interior, in accordance with an act entitled "An act to provide for the acquisition of a site and the construction thereon of a fireproof office building or buildings for the House of Representatives," approved January 10, 1929 (Public, No. 648), $8,400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "United States Supreme Court Building Commission," on page 7, line 11, after the numerals "1928," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "including the procurement of models, $25,000," so as to read:

To enable the United States Supreme Court Building Commission to carry out the provisions of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the submission to the Congress of preliminary plans and estimates of costs for the construction of a building for the Supreme Court of the United States," approved December 21, 1928, including the procurement of models, $25,000, to remain available during the fiscal year 1930.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 12, to insert:

PORTO RICAN HURRICANE RELIEF COMMISSION

For the purpose of making loans to any individual coffee planter, coconut planter, fruit grower, or other agriculturist in the island of Porto Rico, $5,000,000, of which $3,000,000 shall become immediately available and $2,000,000 shall become available on January 1, 1930; for rebuilding and repair of schoolhouses damaged or destroyed by the hurricane in small towns and rural districts of Porto Rico, and for the employment of labor and the purchase of materials for repairing insular and rural municipal roads, $2,000,000; for purchase and distribution of seeds and seedlings, $100,000; and for administrative expenses of the commission, $30,000; in all, $7,130,000, fiscal year 1929, to remain available until expended, as authorized by Public Resolution No. 74, approved December 21, 1928.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Navy Department," on page 11, after line 7, to insert:

Relief of Lucy B. Knox: For payment to Lucy B. Knox, widow of the late Lieut. Commander Forney Moore Knox, United States Navy, of an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Forney Moore Knox was receiving at the date of his death, as authorized by the act approved May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. pt. 2, 281), $2,370.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 13, to insert:

Relief of Vincentia V. Irwin: For payment to Vincentia V. Irwin, widow of the late Ensign Glendon Ward Irwin, United States Navy, of an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Glendon Ward Irwin was receiving at the date of his death, as authorized by the act approved May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. pt. 2, 283), $935.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International obligations," at the top of page 15, to insert:

Foreign Service buildings fund: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Foreign Service buildings act, 1926 (U. S. C. 1953, sec. 295), and for each and every object thereof, including the initial alterations, repair, and furnishings of buildings heretofore acquired under specific authorization of Congress for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments in foreign countries, fiscal year 1929, $700,000, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Treasury Department," on page 16, after line 15, to insert:

BUREAU OF PROHIBITION

For an additional amount for the fiscal year 1929 to carry out the objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, approved March 5, 1928, $25,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1930.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment may go over until the smaller items in the bill shall have been considered and agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Judgments, United States courts," on page 21, line 1, after the word "in," to insert "Senate Document No. 192, and"; and at the end of line 3 to strike out "$11,556.60" and insert "$377,566.23," so as to read:

For payment of the judgments rendered against the Government by the United States District Court for the Northern District of California under the provisions of the act approved June 7, 1924 (U. S. C. p. 870, sec. 52), and certified to the Seventieth Congress in Senate Document No. 192 and House Document No. 473, as follows: Under the Treasury Department, $377,566.23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 10, to insert:

For payment of the judgments, including costs of suits, rendered against the Government by United States district courts under the provisions of certain special acts and certified to the Seventieth Congress in Senate Document No. 193, under the following departments, namely: Navy Department, $47,870.51; War Department, $1,886.20; in all, $49,756.71.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 22, line 3, after the word "in," to insert "Senate Document No. 194, and"; in line 5, after the word "namely," to insert "Department of the Interior, $100,000"; in line 6, after the name "Navy Department," to strike out "$208,291.66" and insert "$340,383.61"; in line 8, after the name "War Department," to strike out "$680,460.54" and insert "$1,369,608.36"; and in line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$897,096.09" and insert "$1,818,335.86," so as to read:

For payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and reported to the Seventieth Congress in Senate Document No. 194, and House Document No. 465, under the following departments, namely: Department of the Interior, $100,000; Navy Department, $340,383.61; Treasury Department, $8,343.89; War Department, $1,369,608.36; in all, $1,818,335.86, together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on certain of the judgments at the legal rate per annum as and where specified in said judgments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 20, to insert:

SEC. 5. For the payment of the claim allowed by the General Accounting Office under the provisions of Private Act No. 279, approved May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. pt. 2, p. 324), and certified to the Seventieth Congress, in Senate Document No. 196, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 18, to change the section number from 4 to 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments, with the exception of the amendment passed over.

Mr. WARREN. On behalf of the committee I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask that it may be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, after line 21, it is proposed to insert as a separate paragraph the following:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE—BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

Customs statistics: For an additional amount covering the same objects and purposes specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1929, to remain available until June 30, 1930, $10,000, of which amount not to exceed $8,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. That completes the bill on the part of the committee except the amendment which has been passed over.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the pending amendment will take some little time. I wonder if the chairman of the committee will permit me to offer an amendment before proceeding further, as I have an appointment which will call me from the Chamber in a few moments.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Kansas is aware, of course, that there are a couple of items which have not as yet been disposed of and which will have to be considered, but under the circumstances I make no objection to the Senator's request.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent, then, to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 26, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

For repairing dikes, opening ditches, repairing bridges, repairing and rebuilding fences, etc., at Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., damaged by flood, $7,400; and for replacement of hay, grain, and feed destroyed by flood, $1,600; total, $9,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. There was a flood last fall in the locality where the Haskell Institute is situated which destroyed the dikes and ditches at the institute and also destroyed all of the feed which was stacked on the ground. I should like to have this amendment go to conference. There are one or two of the items for which appropriations must be made because of the lack of feed for the cattle.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that this item relates to an institution which is maintained for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. It is a Government institution.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Where is it located?

Mr. CURTIS. It is the Haskell Institute, located at Lawrence, Kans.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, after line 15, it is proposed to insert:

BUREAU OF PROHIBITION

For an additional amount for the fiscal year 1929 to carry out the objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, approved March 5, 1928, $25,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1930.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in answer to an inquiry as to whether or not this amount of money—$25,000,000—could be economically expended. The Secretary of the Treasury has been kind enough to answer the inquiry in a comprehensive manner, and I ask that his letter be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, January 12, 1929.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In acknowledging receipt of your letter of January 11, in which you state that the first deficiency bill has been reported to the Senate with the inclusion of an item of $25,000,000 for the Bureau of Prohibition, for prohibition enforcement, and that it is the wish of the committee that the Treasury Department furnish a statement as to whether in the opinion of the department such a sum could be judiciously expended, and if granted by Congress how such an amount would be allocated, permit me to give you a brief general statement on the subject of prohibition enforcement.

The problem of prohibition enforcement has many ramifications and its successful solution depends not only on ample appropriations for the Bureau of Prohibition but on the activities and situation of other departments and bureaus of the Government. The question, therefore, of whether an increase of $25,000,000 in the amount appropriated for the Bureau of Prohibition will accomplish the results desired by the Congress and this department, is not one that can be answered without a thoroughgoing survey of the entire field, for I assume, of course, that if any such large sum is to be appropriated, the Congress will desire it to be used with the utmost effectiveness and in a way calculated to bring about the greatest results. For instance, one of the major difficulties encountered in making the prohibition laws truly effective is the congestion in the United States courts occasioned in large part by numerous pending prohibition cases. It would seem desirable, therefore, if the Congress deems it advisable to appropriate an additional sum of $25,000,000 for this general purpose, that some consideration should be given to whether a part of this sum, at least, should not be allocated to the Department of Justice. As to the needs of the Department of Justice I am, of course, not in a position to express an opinion.

The problem of smuggling is an important one. Its prevention is largely dependent, in so far as our sea coast is concerned, on the adequacy of the fleet maintained by the Coast Guard and in part on an adequate customs force at our various ports; and in so far as our land borders are concerned, on an effective patrol of the borders. On account of our failure thus far to secure a satisfactory agreement with Canada, which, in my opinion, would materially reduce the liquor traffic coming over the Canadian border, the necessity of a thoroughgoing survey as to the best means of increasing the effectiveness of our border patrol is apparent. This the department has recently undertaken.

In so far as the Coast Guard is concerned, some time ago I instructed Admiral Billard to submit a report as to the adequacy of the present Coast Guard fleet, together with an estimate of the Coast Guard building needs over the period of the next five years.

The problem of securing the necessary personnel under the provisions of existing law applying the civil service to the Bureau of Prohibition and customs border patrol must likewise be taken into consideration. Up to the present time it has been possible to make permanent appointments for only a portion of the service and it is anticipated that many months will elapse before the provisions of the civil service act can be fully applied through the furnishing of adequate eligible registers for the present positions.

In so far as the Bureau of Prohibition itself is concerned, some additional funds could be advantageously used at the present time in increased investigational activities and in a well-considered educational program. Looking to the future, it will no doubt be advantageous to provide additional funds for increased border patrol of the Customs Service and an increased customs force at some of the principal ports of entry and increased equipment for the Coast Guard.

The department desires, of course, to see every reasonable provision made for the adequate enforcement of the law, but I do not believe that any such large sum as is provided for in the present deficiency bill should be appropriated until the surveys above suggested have been completed and until it can be determined how any increased amounts can be most wisely and effectively expended. In other words, I am not prepared to say that prohibition enforcement can not be made more effective by the expenditure of increased amounts for this purpose, but I do feel that no such appropriations should be made until they can be definitely allocated to certain specific purposes, and that any other method of procedure will necessarily result in the extravagant use of the public funds.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] who, I am very happy to say, is not only my good friend personally, but one of those Senators who always have in mind in their service on the committee the idea of proper economy in Government expenditures, originally proposed this amendment in the committee. Of course, he has his views upon many matters, and it seems he has very strong views on the question of prohibition. As the Senator first proposed the amendment, it called for an appropriation of $50,000,000, which was cut by the committee to $25,000,000.

I ask the Senate to consider, because we must consider it, the probable action which the House of Representatives may take on whatever we may do here in the way of attaching amendments of this character to the bill, and also to consider whether those who have the responsibility of providing for the expenditures of the Government ought not to be not only willing but anxious to insure so far as possible that the money which we appropriate will be expended not extravagantly but practically to attain the end desired.

It seems to me, I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia, that it becomes my duty as chairman of the committee either to ask that the amendment be rejected or to proceed, if possible, to find a way by which the appropriation may be economically expended.

I have no further remarks to make upon the amendment at this time, but I shall have to ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am sure the senior Senator from Wyoming knows that there is no Senator in this body who has a higher regard for him personally or greater respect for his suggestions and the splendid work he does than the senior Senator from Georgia.

I want to call attention to certain statements in Mr. Mellon's letter, which the able chairman of the committee has just read. I do not think Mr. Mellon's letter has been carefully read by Senators or they would not take the view that some of them have taken.

Here is what he says:

> The question, therefore, of whether an increase of $25,000,000 in the amount appropriated for the Bureau of Prohibition will accomplish the results desired by the Congress and this department is not one that can be answered without a thoroughgoing survey of the entire field; for, I assume, of course, that if any such large sum is to be appropriated, the Congress will desire it to be used with the utmost effectiveness and in a way calculated to bring about the greatest results.

Mr. President, there is nothing in this bill that forces the Secretary of the Treasury to spend one dollar extravagantly. The spending of this money, if my amendment is passed, would be entirely within his hands. He has a year and four months and a half in which to use this money. He does not have to use a dollar of it if he can not use it in a way that would be economical and helpful.

The Secretary of the Treasury has been for eight years in the position he now occupies. His enforcement officer, Doctor Doran, the man that he put in charge of this work—and he certainly ought to have respect for his opinion—said before the House committee that it would require ten times as much as we have appropriated; so why should Mr. Mellon differ with his own officer, the man he keeps at the head of the Prohibition Bureau?

Mr. President, something was said about making a survey to find out about the enforcement of the prohibition law. We might just as well talk about making a survey to find out whether there is a Washington Monument here in the city of Washington. There is not a Senator here who will state that there is not a great need of field agents in his State to enforce this law. There is not a Senator here who will deny that this law is violated ten times as much as it would be if we had the proper number of field agents to enforce the law in his State.

So far as I am concerned, I shall not reflect on Secretary Mellon's ability to handle funds economically; and I do not believe that the funds that we appropriate for this purpose would be extravagantly spent by him or his department. I think he has erred in the other direction.

Another statement of his, Mr. President, in the third paragraph of his letter:

> On account of our failure thus far to secure a satisfactory agreement with Canada, which, in my opinion, would materially reduce the liquor traffic coming over the Canadian border, the necessity of a thoroughgoing survey as to the best means of increasing the effectiveness of our border patrol is apparent.

We know the length of the Canadian border. We know how many men it will take to enforce the law on that border, and we know that there is not one-tenth the number of men there to enforce the law that there ought to be, and we know the reason is that the department has not the money appropriated to enable it to employ additional men.

The Secretary of the Treasury is one of the best financiers in this country; but he has been in that office eight years and has not recommended, as I recall, the appropriation of one dollar additional to enforce this law, when every man and woman in this country knows that the bootlegger is worse than the barroom formerly was; there are 50 bootleggers where there was 1 barroom, and the law would protect us to a certain extent from certain things that occurred in the barroom.

I ask to have read from the desk a letter from a Methodist minister in Mr. Mellon's State who is at the head of the ministerial association to improve conditions in prohibition-enforcement work. He is giving his time and money to it, together with the other ministers of his section. I ask the attention of Senators to this letter to show the necessity for more money to employ a larger number of field men in this work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

FIRST METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,
Charleroi, Pa.

Hon. W. J. HARRIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A few days ago an article appeared in the morning newspaper to the effect that the Senate Committee on Appropriations had recommended an increase of $25,000,000 for prohibition enforcement. This is good news to the friends of prohibition and I sincerely hope that the measure will be approved by both Houses of Congress.

I have been interested in the work of law enforcement for several years and at the present time I am the chairman of the local law and order committee. We have been quite active in this work during the past two years but have met with so much difficulty that the committee is somewhat discouraged. We have spent about $1,000 during the past year in getting information or evidence on cases of violation that were reported to us. After our effort along this line, we have had to wait weeks and sometimes months before we could get assistance from the Federal forces. We have been told repeatedly when asking for help, that they did not have the men or money to give us the help that we desired. While Mr. Pennington and his small force have rendered a splendid service in and about Pittsburgh, the work of enforcement is wholly inadequate. Mr. Pennington is trying to cover nearly 500,000 square miles of territory with a field force about the size of the police squad of a small city.

Enough money should be put into this work to make it effective and to realize the purpose in the minds of the people when the legislation was adopted.

On behalf of the Ministerial Association and the churches of Charleroi, I would respectfully urge your support of this measure.

Sincerely yours,

J. E. MORRISON.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, you will notice that the writer of that letter says that the Ministerial Association raises its own funds and works for months to get up information that will be helpful in enforcing the prohibition law, and then it takes months to get a Federal prohibition-enforcement officer from Mr. Mellon's department to help them. That is in Secretary Mellon's own State.

I ask that the Clerk read a letter which I have sent to the desk from Mr. H. C. Morgan, of Homersville, Ga., one of the prominent lawyers of his section, a splendid man, and a prosecuting attorney in his judicial district of Georgia for several years which shows conditions in my State; I shall not burden the Senate or the RECORD by having other letters read along the same line. I could bring a good many here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

HOMERVILLE, GA., January 10, 1929.

Senator W. J. HARRIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We are in great need of more prohibition enforcement in this territory, and to this end we need more Government enforcement officers. I do not know of but two or three in all south Georgia. They certainly do not give my territory any attention. This may be due to the fact that the few officers who are now in charge have too much territory to cover.

Do you think there would be any chance to get the authorities in charge to give us a few more officers and locate one at Homerville or close by? The officer would have plenty of work to do and it would be a great service to our people.

H. C. MORGAN.

Mr. HARRIS. Now, Mr. President, I want to show that in three paragraphs out of the six in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury he says that more funds could be used. Here is the next one. I quote his words:

> In so far as the Bureau of Prohibition itself is concerned, some additional funds could be advantageously used at the present time in increased investigational activities and in a well-considered educational program.

He admits that he needs it right at this time and can use it.

> Looking to the future, it will no doubt be advantageous to provide additional funds for increased border patrol of the Customs Service and an increased customs force at some of the principal ports of entry, and increased equipment for the Coast Guard.

In almost every paragraph he says that he could use increased funds to help in this matter. Why is he against it if he could use more funds; and why does he wait for years and never make a recommendation to the Senate or to Congress for additional funds? When we offer him larger appropriations why does he say he does not want them, although he states in his letter that he can use them?

Now I will read the last paragraph, and I hope Senators will listen to this:

> In other words, I am not prepared to say that prohibition enforcement can not be made more effective by the expenditure of increased amounts for this purpose, but I do feel that no such appropriations should be made until they can be definitely allocated to certain specific purposes, and that any other method of procedure will necessarily result in the extravagant use of the public funds.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury is too modest about his ability as an administrative officer. I do not believe he would waste the money. I believe, as a matter of fact, that he could spend several times as much money as he is now and has been spending. As I said, his prohibition enforcement officer said to the House committee that he could spend ten times the amount he has been spending. I wish we could have his recommendations instead of those of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Another thing, Mr. President:

We speak of an appropriation of $25,000,000. If they have the same experience with this fund that they have had with the $9,000,000 they are now spending for this field work, they will get back more than 50 per cent of it; so $25,000,000 spent will bring back in fines from twelve to fourteen million dollars if we get the same proportionate return that we get from the other amounts that are spent.

There is $4,000,000 and more that is spent in what we call overhead, for office force and other expenses, and a little less than $9,000,000 spent for field service, where the actual enforcement work is done and where they now need ten times as many men as they have at present.

In my State, for instance, we have 161 counties. Ours is the largest State east of the Mississippi River; and we have 30 enforcement officers for 161 counties. We need ten times that number to properly enforce the law. Congressman WRIGHT, of Georgia, one of the ablest and best men in the House, told me to-day that from his home city of Newnan to Chattanooga, Tenn., a distance of 135 miles, they had only one enforcement officer. Of course the enforcement of prohibition is going to be a farce as long as it is continued in that way; and every Senator here knows that more money is needed to employ more field men. Every Senator, whether he is in favor of this law or not, knows that its enforcement is a farce, the way it is conducted to-day, with less than one-tenth the number of field men needed.

Mr. President, the people of this country are more interested in prohibition than anything else before Congress.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one question?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator says that the enforcement of prohibition is a farce as conducted to-day. Is it worse to-day than it has been all the time?

Mr. HARRIS. I think it is in the same condition to-day that it has been since the present Secretary of the Treasury was placed in charge of it. I do not think he has tried to enforce the law as Congress intended that it should be enforced. Not only is this law violated, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, but it is causing the people of this country to lose respect not only for this law but for all laws; and I do not know of any greater harm that is being done than for our people to lose respect for law of any kind.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to prolong the discussion, because the Senator is entitled to proceed with his speech; but the Senator now says that the enforcement of the law has been a farce since the present Secretary of the Treasury took charge.

Mr. HARRIS. Because of the lack of enforcement officers.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; but the Senator says it has been a farce since the present Secretary of the Treasury took charge. When was that?

Mr. HARRIS. Eight years ago, as I recall.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Prior to that, the enforcement was in charge of whom?

Mr. HARRIS. I have forgotten who the Secretary of the Treasury was. There were several.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It was still in charge of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. HARRIS. It was still in charge of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Did the predecessors of the present Secretary do worse than he has done?

Mr. HARRIS. They certainly did not. They could not have done any worse.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think there has been any change for the worse since Secretary Mellon came in?

Mr. HARRIS. I think this law was not enforced properly from the very beginning, because they did not have the money with which to enforce it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But the enforcement, whatever it has been, has been a farce from the first?

Mr. HARRIS. It has been a farce because they have not had the money with which to enforce it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. All right.

Mr. HARRIS. They have not had the men they needed to enforce it. As I said, if the Senator from Missouri will pardon me, in the State of Georgia there are 161 counties; it is the largest State east of the Mississippi River; and we have only 30 enforcement officers when it would take 30 for the 5 cities of my State alone, and if we used all the 30 in the cities it would leave the 156 other counties without enforcement officers.

Mr. REED of Missouri. As I understand the Senator's position, it is that because of the lack of a sufficient number of enforcement officers the enforcement of the law from the first has been a farce; and the Senator now says that we could well expend—and I presume he means economically expend—ten times the $25,000,000 that is proposed in the bill. That is, we could spend $250,000,000?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think we could spend ten times $25,000,000 within the next year.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. No; I said the prohibition enforcement officer, Doctor Doran, said it would take ten times as much as this.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator agree with the prohibition enforcement officer? I am just trying to get the Senator's views; that is all. I do not want to haggle with him at all. I have the greatest respect and the kindliest feeling for him, and he is able to take care of himself anyway.

What I really wanted to find out was whether or not the Senator meant to say that we could expend $250,000,000 in the enforcement of this law in addition to the amounts we are already appropriating. Does the Senator think that is necessary?
